THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

The question was taken; and the motion was agreed to.

The Chair appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. MAHON, Mr. OTJEN, and Mr. RICHARDSON.

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF CONGRESS TO MILITARY AND OTHER OFFICES.

Mr. HENDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I present the following privileged report from the Committee on the Judiciary on House resolution No. 387, concerning the appointment of members of Congress to military and other offices. I desire to say that while the privileged report is there, and the minority report, I wish to ask consent for Mr. DE ARMOND and Mr. PARKER the privilege of filing minority views not later than Thursday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HENDERSON] asks that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] be allowed until next Thursday to file their views on the subject.

There was no objection.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. This is a privileged matter, and of course can be called up now. I desire to know if, by being reported and going on to the Calendar, it loses its privilege?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. BAILEY. I was anxious that it should not.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not, because the privilege adheres to the subject. If there be no objection, leave will be granted to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DE ARMOND] and the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. PARKER] to file their minority views.

There was no objection.

The report was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

HEATING AND VENTILATING THE CAPITOL.

Mr. HEATWOLE. Mr. Speaker, I present a privileged report from the Committee on Ventilation and Acoustics.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, is it necessary to reserve points of order on the report just made, if there are any?

The SPEAKER. The resolution relates simply to the proposed reconstruction of the Hall of the House.

The report was ordered to be printed, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. SIMPSON. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 12042) granting right of way through Indian reservations in the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory.

The bill, with the amendments reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs, was read.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title of the bill will be amended as recommended by the committee, so as to read: "A bill granting right of way to the Gulf and Northern Railroad Company through the Indian Territory and through certain Indian reservations in Oklahoma Territory."

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. SIMPSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

SIoux CITY AND OMAHA RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Before the regular order is proceeded with, the Chair desires, if the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] will permit, to correct an error in regard to a bill which was passed a short time ago, the bill (S. 5076) authorizing the Sioux City and Omaha Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Omaha and Winnebago Reservation, in Thurston County, Nebr., and for other purposes. The amendments reported by the Committee on Indian Affairs to this bill should have been submitted to the House, but by oversight the Chair was not advised that there were such amendments and did not submit the question. The Clerk will now read the amendments, which, if there be no objection, will be incorporated in the bill without the formality of a reconsideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 6, line 5, strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to read "within two years after the passage of this act."
In the same section, line 6, strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to read "within three years thereafter."

There being no objection, the amendments were agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr.

SHERMAN in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending question is upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD], which the Clerk will again read.

After line 14, on page 31, insert the following:

"For completion of buildings and other works authorized under the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, under such plans as may be adopted by the Secretary of the Navy, not to exceed in cost $1,220,000, $720,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to this amendment.

Mr. DAYTON. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that there should be a plain, simple statement made of this matter, because it is important that members of the House should understand what is involved in this amendment. I will frankly say to the gentleman from Maryland that I understood from his discussion of this matter on Saturday last that his amendment involved the only two hundred odd thousand dollars made necessary to comply with the plans that he had indicated and asked by the Secretary of the Navy over and above the $500,000 appropriated last year. I observe by the reading of the amendment that it is an increase of $720,000, that being the amount of the new appropriation asked at this time.

Mr. MUDD. The gentleman will allow me to say that my amendment provides for an appropriation of $500,000 in addition to the $100,000 heretofore appropriated, because the act of last session authorized the Secretary of the Navy to contract for buildings to cost $1,000,000, and the $220,000 additional is to cover the cost of substituting granite for brick in the erection of these buildings.

Mr. DAYTON. Now, if I may have the attention of the House, I want to emphasize some things involved in the amendment. As stated on Saturday, the adoption of the amendment to a certain extent commits this House to an expenditure of at least $6,000,000 to reconstruct the Naval Academy at Annapolis. No human being can tell whether the expense will stop at that. It may be $8,000,000. There has never been a single authorized plan for the rebuilding—

Mr. DRIGGS. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. DAYTON. I prefer not to yield now. I am speaking under the five-minute rule, and I want the committee to understand this matter. There has never been any authorized plan adopted by the House or by any other authority for the construction of these Naval Academy buildings. Much has been said about the Matthews report. I want to call the attention of the House to how that originated.

On the 5th day of July, 1895, upon the suggestion of some member or members of a Board of Visitors who had attended the graduating exercises at the Academy, Secretary Herbert, then Secretary of the Navy, issued a departmental order gathering together what was known as the Matthews board to consider the idea of reconstructing the buildings at the Annapolis Academy. That board got together and examined the grounds, went over the situation, and instead of adopting a "plan," as has been stated and reiterated over and over again upon this floor, they reported as follows:

In order to have a comprehensive scheme for the rehabilitation of the school to present to Congress, more time is needed and money required to prepare plans.

"More time is needed and money is required to prepare plans." I ask gentlemen's attention to that language.

And further they say:

And we therefore estimate as follows: For dredging and preparing the grounds, $75,000; constructing the sea wall, $270,000; installation of sewerage system, $10,000; preparation of plans, $35,000.

Now, it will be seen that no plans were then prepared. On the contrary, this board recommended that $150,000 be appropriated during that year, to be immediately available, to be used for dredging, building, and piling for the foundation of the sea wall, for a sewerage system, and "the preparation of plans, $35,000;" and this only to begin the work.

Now, that was the recommendation of the Matthews board, and was not in any sense of the word a suggestion of plans. There never was a plan adopted, and there never has been anything like a systematic businesslike consideration of the matter, which would warrant Congress in proceeding with a work of that character. The Naval Committee last year—crowded as it was with the details of legislation springing out of the then existing war, and deeming it of so much importance, involving so large an expense as not to warrant them without proper consideration from entering into the details of the suggestion—concluded that the part of wisdom was to postpone its consideration until they could give it a more faithful, thorough, and complete investigation; and in the bill they subsequently reported to the House the appropriations were made for the expenditures of the Academy, but did not carry into operation the suggestions of the Matthews board, preferring, as I have said, to wait for a more comprehensive and thorough investigation of the subject.

There has been in the House of Representatives an earnest request and solicitation from the gentlemen from Maryland—and, of course, I do not blame them for their solicitation in the matter for an appropriation to begin this work—and they secured last year the action of the House upon this appropriation on the bill, contrary to the earnest protests of the committee, whereby $500,000 was appropriated for three distinct purposes: First, for preparing the grounds, dredging, etc.; second, for building an armory; and third, for building a power house, or commencing a power house at Annapolis. The Matthews board recommendation was not carried out. That board recommended, as I have shown, an appropriation of $150,000 to prepare the grounds by dredging, piling, etc., for carrying out their suggestion.

Now, what is the condition? The work has not been done. And, according to the idea of the commandant—the Superintendent of the Academy—as shown by the hearings before the committee, what do they propose? Why, the very absurdity of it calls the attention of the House to the fact and will command attention when it is stated. The House is asked to appropriate hundreds of thousands of dollars to build a power house in the Severn River where the ground has not yet been reclaimed! What, then, is the object? Simply—and I do not desire that any gentleman on this floor or any of the newspapers of the country shall misrepresent my chairman, the honorable gentleman from Maine, representing the head of the Naval Committee, or any member of that committee, the hue and cry goes abroad that the object of the Naval Committee is eventually to remove the Naval Academy altogether from Annapolis; and that that is the ground or foundation of the opposition assumed by the committee.

I want to disclaim it in the strongest terms that I am capable of expressing. The idea of removing the Academy from Annapolis was never mentioned in the two weeks consideration of the matter in the committee; and further, I will say that I will stand here as a Southern member of Congress to oppose that removal as strenuously as any member from Maryland or any other State. I am sure I do not misrepresent the chairman of the committee when I say that the idea was not entertained by him at all.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If my friend will allow me a single suggestion?

Mr. DAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The proposition in the bill disposes clearly and emphatically of the statement, for we have authorized the committee to examine into this matter of improving the buildings there and to report without delay. No provision is made for any change in the location of the buildings from Annapolis to any other place. The statement is all claptrap and without any basis whatever.

Mr. DAYTON. I am glad of the statement of my friend from Maine. It disposes clearly of the report to which I have referred.

Now, for one, as a friend of the Naval Academy of the United States, anxious to see that institution properly built up and to rehabilitate it, I earnestly desire that this matter shall be begun properly in the first place and carried to its conclusion in accordance with what I believe to be a wise and harmonious system; and that we shall not begin at the wrong end, but shall proceed in an orderly and systematic way to carry out the work.

The Matthews board recommended that $35,000 be appropriated to secure plans. We thought it could be done for $10,000 by the aid of the engineers and the investigation that would be given to it by the members of Congress. Now, my friends, I want to call your attention to the fact that there are some people who are interested in the Matthews—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DAYTON. I hope I may have a few minutes longer.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask that my colleague be allowed to continue.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks that his colleague on the committee [Mr. DAYTON] may continue without limit. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. DRIGGS. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. DAYTON. I will yield to the question of the gentleman from New York in one minute.

Mr. DRIGGS. All right.

Mr. DAYTON. Now, Mr. Chairman, let me call your attention to this fact, that the Matthews board report was made up and that they recommended this appropriation of $35,000 to start this matter rightly by the preparation of plans, which they said required more time and which they said they could not do. The Superintendent of the Academy and an architect by the name of Flagg, who had been called in to give advice to this board in regard to the matter in their investigations, presented a sketch, and it is nothing but a sketch—not a single detail of the plans is worked out. It is a picture. It has been presented in our committee room. It is a sketch of the grounds as it is supposed they will appear when the buildings have been constructed.

That party has been called in and is interested in this matter to this extent: He claims now that by reason of that sketch having been incorporated by the Superintendent of the Academy and published in the back of the Matthews report, that he has a right to demand that he shall furnish these plans and that he shall have a straight contract of 5 per cent for the management of this building, a little item of $400,000 to him if the buildings cost $8,000,000. That is the simple matter about this entire question. No other architect in the country has had an opportunity to compete. I do not mean to say but that Mr. Flagg is as reputable an architect as there is in the country; I do not mean to say but that his plans may be the best ones; but I do mean to say that there has never been any foundation for this scheme.

Now, with the ground unprepared, with part of it, as I have stated, under water where the power house is to be located, after having made the mistake of getting the cart before the horse last year in making this appropriation of $500,000 in the House, we are asked to add $720,000 to that, so as to make these three buildings cost $1,200,000. That may be all right, gentlemen, but the best plan is to know where we are going, to have something established by which Congress will go to work and have a system and plan adopted so that it will be a continuing work and not a bone of contention at every session.

What does this mean further? It means that without any authorization a part of the buildings have been removed from these grounds. The marine barracks, I believe—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The marine barracks and the boathouse—

Mr. DAYTON. The marine barracks and the boathouse and other buildings have been removed.

Mr. BLAND. Will the gentleman allow me right there?

Mr. DAYTON. Certainly.

Mr. BLAND. I understand that $500,000 have been appropriated for this project.

Mr. DAYTON. Yes, but the money has not been expended.

Mr. BLAND. How did this $500,000 happen to be appropriated? Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that the appropriation last year was a partial appropriation—

Mr. BLAND. If there had been no plans adopted or considered, how did it happen that the appropriation was made?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I will answer the gentleman. The House of Representatives made the appropriation independently of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. DAYTON. And against its earnest protest.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The appropriation made by the House last year was in a paragraph presented by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUD], which combined a number of objects to be appropriated for, among which were three buildings—an armory, a boathouse, and a power house. The whole appropriation made was only $500,000, but the paragraph would have carried with it the necessity for the appropriation of a much larger sum.

Mr. BLAND. Then I understand $500,000 was appropriated against the protest of the Committee on Naval Affairs?

Mr. DAYTON. That is correct.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Against the earnest and vigorous, but unsuccessful, protest of the Naval Committee, for the reasons now being so clearly stated by my colleague [Mr. DAYTON].

Mr. DAYTON. Now I will yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. DRIGGS], who desires to ask me a question.

Mr. DRIGGS. I have the greatest respect for the gentleman from West Virginia, the greatest respect for his accuracy, therefore I would like to ask him this question. A few moments ago in his remarks he stated that if the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland was adopted it might necessitate the appropriation of from five to ten million dollars for the Naval Academy. I would like to know the fact, not any maybe, if there are any correct statements or reports that show that?

Mr. DAYTON. We have none, my friend, but the estimates of this man Flagg, who made this sketch, and who is supposed to know all there is about it that is known, and that is very little.

Mr. FISCHER. Will the gentleman tell us what the Secretary of the Navy has done about it?

Mr. DAYTON. Shall I answer the question of the gentleman on my right, or reply to you?

Mr. DRIGGS. I am willing to yield to the gentleman from New York. I want to ask another question. I do not object to your answering him.

Mr. DAYTON. I wish to answer every question. As to what the Secretary of the Navy has done, in answer to the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FISCHER], assuming that by the appropriation of $500,000 he had authority to contract for this work, he has gone to the extent of employing this architect, Mr. Flagg, to superintend the building of the power house and the armory. Thereupon, when he found that the estimate that had been furnished him of the sum necessary to complete these buildings was not sufficient, work was suspended in order that they might come and increase the estimate by $220,000 made necessary by a change from brick to stone.

Mr. FISCHER. Did he not put some of the work under contract?

Mr. DRIGGS. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. DAYTON. Nothing has been done toward erecting the buildings. There has been some dredging done, but no contracts have been let for the buildings.

Mr. FISCHER. Has he not advertised for bids?

Mr. DAYTON. He has advertised for bids, and those bids were all over the estimates, so that they could not be accepted.

Mr. DRIGGS. That partially answers my question; but at the same time I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that some plans must have been made here, for there seem to have been eight, nine, or ten contractors who wanted to do the work and who have submitted the estimates. Now, then, the question is simply this: Did these contractors throughout the United States submit bids on plans not authorized by the Department, or did they simply submit estimates on plans that were authorized? I want to find out how it was they went to the expense of submitting estimates for this work if they had no authority to do this work.

Mr. DAYTON. I call attention to the fact that on the 5th day of July, 1895, a mere departmental order was issued by Secretary Herbert authorizing this board to investigate the matter. They did investigate it, and recommended that $35,000 be appropriated for plans, and that a total of $150,000 be appropriated for the purpose of dredging, piling, and foundation for the sea wall, sewerage, and plans. Instead of doing that, instead of waiting for the recommendation to be fulfilled, as disclosed in the hearings before the Naval Committee, the Superintendent of the Academy and this architect went ahead and made a rough sketch, and their estimates of the cost of these various buildings, according to that sketch, and incorporated them in the back of that report, without any authority from anybody of any kind or character.

The Secretary of the Navy finding them there, and finding the appropriation on the bill of last year of $500,000 and thinking that that gave him authority, he called in Mr. Flagg, entered into a contract with him to erect this armory building and this power house according to this plan. Now, if I may have the attention of the gentleman further in connection with the contract made, the architect had to go on and did afterwards go on, as I understand, and make detailed plans of these two buildings.

Mr. DRIGGS. Well, now, right there, how is it that these gentlemen, these business men that submitted estimates, considered that they were acting in good faith and the Department considered that they were acting in good faith in receiving these bids—

Mr. DAYTON. There is no question about that. It was a comedy of errors from the beginning to the end, and it began in this House.

Mr. DRIGGS. It seems to me that if there is to be any criticism, it is not the Naval Committee (and I was very glad to see the gentleman from West Virginia stand up for his committee, because I think that it is a duty that every gentleman owes to stand up for his committee)—but it seems to me that if there is any criticism to be made there ought to be a criticism of the Department officials and not the contractors, the men who have gone into this subject as a business proposition.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. There is no criticism of the contractors involved, no criticism of anybody, but simply to inform the House of Representatives, in pursuance of our duty, and call their attention to the fact that an important transaction is going forward in an irregular and unauthorized and undesirable manner, and ask the House to provide some proper way.

Mr. DAYTON. And I want to say further to my friend that if there is any fault it rests squarely upon the shoulders of the House of Representatives—

Mr. DRIGGS. That is it exactly.

Mr. DAYTON (continuing). That adopted this provision before there was any authority for it.

Mr. DRIGGS. That is the proposition I wanted to bring out.

Mr. HUNTER. What is the contention of the committee, after the error has been committed, as to what the House should do?

Mr. DAYTON. The contention of the committee is that, inasmuch as this work will possibly continue for ten or twelve years before a final scheme can be completed, it is the duty of this House to go to work and procure some fixed plan, adopt it by law, so that it may be settled and not be a matter of contention in every Congress. We desire to secure a plan and have it adopted regularly by Congress, and then make the appropriations according to that plan.

Mr. HUNTER. Have you got that incorporated in the bill?

Mr. DAYTON. We had the introductory step, but the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Mudd] made a point of order and it went out. Now, there is only one thing for the committee to do, and that is to go to its committee room and formulate a plan, so that we may get a proper and complete plan. But, as the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] admitted on the last day that we considered this bill, that is an impossibility for us to do in the time remaining for this Congress.

Therefore, there ought not to be a dollar of money expended until we can start this matter in a business like way. Another thing I want to call attention to, buildings have been placed there, one at least, that is not more than twelve or fifteen years of age that the report comes to us has to be propped up and is in danger of falling down. Now, we do not know whether the character of the ground there is of a kind that will enable the buildings to stand there. We have no report of any examination by engineers on that question.

Mr. DRIGGS. I want to ask another question. I have been waiting for some time.

Mr. DAYTON. I want to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DRIGGS. I know it; the gentleman has been very courteous. You have answered the very question I wanted answered, although I feared to ask it for fear it would not be answered—that is, that the House of Representatives authorized the expenditure of this money. The chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs said that there is no criticism to be made of anyone. The gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON] says that if any criticism is to be made upon anyone it is the House of Representatives. I claim that the House of Representatives saw fit to appropriate $500,000 for the building, with an additional $500,000 to complete the work, and it had a perfect right to do so. The House of Representatives did it and it became existing law, and therefore the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. Mudd] is to carry out work already authorized by the House of Representatives.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It authorized it, but not in a regular and businesslike way.

Mr. DAYTON. If the House of Representatives by a mistake or misjudgment had, for instance, appropriated $500,000 and sunk it in a hole in the ground, that is no reason why you should go to work and put $700,000 more in the same hole in the ground. If it has made a mistake in appropriating the money, if it has not been appropriated in a businesslike way, it is the duty of the House of Representatives to recall its mistake as far as it possibly can, and inasmuch as the $500,000 or the great bulk of it has not been expended, the committee thought the expenditure ought to be suspended until a proper plan and investigation could be had in the matter.

Mr. HUNTER. Can the committee inform the House how much of the appropriation of last year has been expended?

Mr. DAYTON. I am not able to say; but I will say this: There has been no contract let. Bids have been asked for, but no contracts have been let for the buildings, because when the bids were opened they were all found to be above the estimates, and therefore the Department had to reject them all.

Mr. CUMMINGS. There has not been one cent expended, but there has been a contract made and signed for a building of a quay wall and the filling in of about 7 acres of land upon which some of these buildings are to be located. That is the situation.

Mr. DAYTON. The ground is not yet prepared for the buildings.

Mr. HUNTER. What you seek is to rescind this pretended contract—

Mr. CUMMINGS. It is not a pretended contract; it is a contract.

Mr. HUNTER (continuing). And suspend the expenditure of any further part of the appropriation?

Mr. DAYTON. The plan of the committee is to halt until an investigation can be had and a plan can be formulated and adopted by Congress for the rehabilitation of the whole Academy.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Does this difference between the committee and the law which was passed by Congress last year involve any question as to the removal of the Academy—not from the town of Annapolis, but from the particular site that it now occupies to another site in the vicinity which might be deemed better?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That question has never been mentioned.

Mr. DAYTON. It has never been mentioned. The Committee on Naval Affairs has never worked more earnestly on any question than it has on this to try and get a solution of it.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let me understand the gentleman further. There have been some comments to the effect that the water at the particular point where the Academy is now located is not of sufficient depth to permit large vessels to enter. Has the committee considered whether or not it would be desirable to go down the bay, say a mile or a mile and a half, where deeper water could be had; and does this proposition involve any question of that kind?

Mr. DAYTON. No, it does not. That question has not been considered by the committee. The question before the committee was simply how to get round a blunder that was committed in starting this work at the wrong end, instead of having it properly authorized.

Mr. HUNTER. Just one other question. If we should now stop this work and go no further in pursuance of the contract which has been entered into substantially by the authority of Congress, will there not be a liability by the Government to these contractors—a liability which we shall be compelled to meet in the future?

Mr. DAYTON. Do not misunderstand me. No contract has been made for the erection of the buildings—none whatever; the bids have had to be rejected because they have been above the estimate. So we are under no obligations to any contractors. We are under obligations to this architect, and there might be a question of $25,000 involved in his commission from the Government.

Mr. HUNTER. I understood the gentleman from New York to say that a contract had been made for filling and grading the grounds there—

Mr. CUMMINGS. No.

Mr. HUNTER. On which contract the contractor expects the Government to be liable.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Let me state the matter to the gentleman. A contract has been given out for building a quay wall, which involves the filling in of about 7 acres of land. For that object $93,500 has been set aside by Congress. Congress also set aside $200,000 for the building of a boathouse and $200,000 for the erection of a power house, but the bids received did not come within the appropriation made by Congress, and the Secretary of the Navy is recommending that we now appropriate more money for that purpose, the additional buildings to be built of granite instead of brick.

Mr. DAYTON. Now, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I would like to ask whether it is the purpose of the Committee on Naval Affairs to incorporate into the statute a plan for the construction of these various buildings?

Mr. DAYTON. Yes; a continuing contract. That, however, has been ruled out on a point of order.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Now, then, why not leave it to the Secretary of the Navy to determine these plans?

Mr. DAYTON. Does the House of Representatives feel that it would discharge its duty by intrusting such authority to the Secretary of the Navy, when the amount involved is six or eight million dollars, and the Secretary of the Navy may be one man to-day and another to-morrow?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Where does that duty appropriately belong?

Mr. DAYTON. Certainly no great institution erected by this Government—neither the Library building, nor the West Point Academy, nor the Capitol building, nor any other Government structure—has ever been left in that way to the head of a Department.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. If it is not the purpose of this committee that the plans upon which it is proposed to reconstruct the Naval Academy be incorporated into the statute (which I think would be very unwise, because it may be necessary from from time to time to vary those plans), it seems to me it would be appropriate to put this responsibility upon an officer representing the Department and to endow him with discretion in the matter. I may be in error about this, but that is the way the matter seems to me.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Does not the gentleman see the manifest impropriety there would be in vesting any head of any Department with the power to bind this Government to an unlimited expenditure of public money and the unlimited demolition of existing structures which have been built by the Government at great cost? We never have done such a thing, and probably while Congress is made up of sane men we never shall do such a thing. There is no reason in the world why the Secretary of the Navy should be expected to be competent to deal with the question of entirely rebuilding, architecturally and otherwise, a great public institution of the country like the Naval Academy. It is for the Congress of the United States, not for a Department officer, to say whether it wants to expend $1,000,000, or $10,000,000, or $20,000,000.

If the gentleman will reflect for a moment, and I do not think he did so before he made the suggestion he did, he will see that it would be drifting the Government to a condition whereby the people of the United States shall have no control whatever over the expenditure of the public money for this purpose. Of course I understand how easily gentlemen, without looking into the matter closely, might assume that position without the slightest idea of the consequences involved. The whole principle and policy of the Government is opposed to such an appropriation.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Now, Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Maine is correct, and I have no doubt he is—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH (continuing). If the gentleman is correct, and if the expenditure would be detrimental or injurious to the plans which the committee have in view, and which they believe to be necessary for the proper rehabilitation of that institution, I am not ready to vote an unlimited expenditure of money such as is suggested here.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly not; and I will tell the gentleman why he should not do so. This expenditure, as proposed, is unlimited simply because it proposes an expenditure on which no limit is fixed. Does not that involve an unlimited expenditure?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Then before proceeding with it you ought to have your plans prepared.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is precisely what we want to do.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. If the gentleman will permit me, as I understand it, this is a proposition for three buildings which would involve an expenditure of $1,120,000.

Now, that is neither unlimited as to the number of buildings nor is it unlimited as to the amount of the appropriation. In this case, also, the expenditure is under the control of the Secretary of the Navy and the amount that he may use for this purpose is fixed.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Now, I think I can make that clear to my friend from Wisconsin, and I am very glad he has made the suggestion he did. I want to show him why this differs from ordinary appropriations. This does not appropriate so much money to build three buildings whose location has been determined upon and which are to take the place of three others on the Academy grounds, which it is declared shall be removed; and that is what the gentleman had in mind, I think. But it makes an appropriation here, and that is the rock on which the whole business is based and on which the committee founded its judgment after mature investigation and can safely stand in connection with the matter.

Now, the appropriation of last year was drawn for a specific purpose, in my judgment. I think it was for the purpose of fixing on the United States and on the Academy a special plan—a plan which we have been discussing in part, a gigantic plan involving an immense expenditure of the public money—

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Is there a determined plan?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Those sketches are in existence, and in the hearings before the committee the Secretary of the Navy has referred to them; but he has reiterated the statement over and over again that there has been no fixed plan, and he made that statement in response to my own inquiry.

But this appropriation of last year charged him with the duty of erecting three buildings on the grounds at the Naval Academy, and for the purpose of doing so, to remove the old buildings which were already in existence. Now, gentlemen all over the House thought that that was a simple proposition to appropriate money by which the Secretary of the Navy should proceed to tear down the shattered remains or wrecks of the old buildings now on the grounds and erect others in their stead. But that was not the intention of the appropriation.

The Secretary of the Navy, in the hearings before the committee, in reply to questions as to where he proposed to place the buildings, stated that he would put up one armory, a boathouse, and a power house on the spot where they were located by what was known as the Flagg suggestion. But this plan had never been adopted anywhere. It involved the tearing down of the existing buildings, and the moment they tore down these buildings, which had been erected already at great cost, if the plan of improvement had been continued to the end, it necessarily and absolutely involved in future the tearing down of other buildings, which would retrovert, hamper, and destroy the whole system of improvement that the committee believes to be necessary.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. If the gentleman will allow an interruption, I desire to state that I am willing that the Naval Committee, through a subcommittee, or by the committee itself, should view the premises—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is precisely what we want.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH (continuing). And I am willing to trust their report and the Secretary of the Navy in the matter. That is the point that I am seeking to make.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman must understand the action of the committee is not in any sense of the word a lack of confidence in the Secretary of the Navy. The Secretary states distinctly, in the testimony before the committee, that he finds himself hampered by the action of Congress last year in this regard.

Nobody doubts the right of Congress to make an appropriation. But it follows that all appropriations should be characterized, at least, by some reference to the public interest. For my own part, I do not believe that Congress has the power to make an appropriation that can not be carried out except in accordance with the public interest.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman from Maine kindly permit me to ask him a question on this point?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. On page 2037 of the RECORD I find the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD], which reads as follows:

For completion of buildings and other works authorized under the act making appropriation for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, under such plans as may be adopted by the Secretary of the Navy, not to exceed in cost $1,220,000, $720,000.

The limit of cost is absolutely fixed at $1,220,000. Now, in the letter of the Secretary of the Navy, which is immediately below that amendment, in the same column, a letter directed to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], he says, quoting the architect's language:

I have planned all three of these buildings as economically as I could consistently with good workmanship and stability. But they are necessarily so large that they can not be built of granite for the amount appropriated.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That does not figure in the question at all.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. No, I know. Now, the amendment expressly limits the total cost to $1,220,000 and provides that the Secretary of the Navy shall have the right to adopt the plans, and the Secretary of the Navy says he has the plans all arranged and completed, but that he would like to change the material from brick to stone.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Now, will the gentleman permit me to make one more desperate effort to explain this matter? I recognize the fact that I probably am very unfortunate in trying to make myself clear, but I am going to make one more effort to show the House that the use of the word "plans" is what makes this whole confusion. The plans to which the Secretary of the Navy refers in that communication are the plans for those three specific buildings.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The armory, and so forth.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The armory, the boathouse, and power house, but the use of the word "plans" in that respect does not have any reference to the general plan for tearing down all the other buildings and building all the other great structures involved in this thing.

Mr. DRIGGS. Will the gentleman—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to go ahead with this—

Mr. DRIGGS. All right, sir. Pardon me.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Does not the gentleman from Wisconsin see that distinction?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Well, I do; but if the gentleman from Maine will permit me, I want to say that it does not necessarily follow that when Congress makes specific appropriation of $1,220,000 and says that the expenditure for these three buildings shall not exceed that sum, after the completion of those buildings we are to go on to an unlimited expenditure of money.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Right there, the gentleman certainly—

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Just a moment. Pursuing the same plan which is now being followed, after the completion of those buildings, if other structures are to be erected on that campus, Congress by another act would appropriate a certain sum, or not to exceed so much money, for the construction and completion of certain buildings, to be enumerated in that act.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I would like to ask the gentleman if he does not see that the appropriation of a million dollars to construct three buildings, to occupy certain positions in the Academy grounds, involves in the first place the destruction of existing buildings in the places where the new ones are to be put up, and also involves an entire remodeling of the whole institution?

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. That authority has not been given, has it?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; but it must be done or else the Academy is to be left in an absolutely impracticable condition. Now, let me state the facts. Let me get down to details. I have told the House half a dozen times about this thing, but they do not seem to gather it. I am going to make one more effort.

The Secretary of the Navy in locating this armory, for instance, does not put that armory in the place of any other armory that is there or has been there. He does not put it in the same connection with the other buildings that the present armory occupies, but he puts it on a portion of the grounds away over, for instance, on this side. He goes to the extreme other side of the grounds and puts the boathouse over here. Now, that absolutely necessitates the building of the barracks between those two, to make any kind of a coherent plan, and the doing of that involves the tearing down of buildings all across the campus, the Superintendent's house, blocks of residences, the administrative building—

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. A general remodeling of the whole business.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. A general remodeling of the whole business.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair was out of the chair for a moment. Indefinite time was granted to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. DAYTON]. Did he yield the floor?

Mr. DAYTON. I yielded the floor to the chairman of the committee [Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yielded temporarily, the Chair thinks, but he can hardly yield the floor to another gentleman.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have no doubt about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair simply wants to know what the situation is.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. DAYTON. I yielded the floor entirely.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Is there any difficulty about the chairman of the committee getting the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. Not the slightest; but the Chair thought it would be better to understand how the chairman of the committee occupied the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move to strike out the last word, under the five-minute rule; and I hope that will be strictly enforced.

Mr. MUDD. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine, the chairman of the committee, is recognized.

Mr. MUDD. A parliamentary inquiry. Then, as I understand, if the gentleman takes the floor in his own right, the time of the gentleman from West Virginia has expired?

Mr. DAYTON. Oh, yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia yielded the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I get it by unanimous consent, which absolutely includes me.

Mr. MUDD. Hardly.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Now, I have already said that the location of these two new buildings, if this plan be carried out, the mere construction of these two new buildings—and it can not be possible, in my judgment, to make the case more extravagantly conspicuous as to the impropriety than to tell you that of the three buildings that are to be located the power house, in its construction where the Secretary proposes to put it, according to Mr. Flagg's plan, will be actually built, as my colleague said (but I fear that the committee did not thoroughly apprehend his statement)—it is to be built out in the Severn River.

Now, we want to know something about how we are going to build out to it. We want to put some limit to the millions that are to be expended. We want to know something about the outcome. Gentlemen will know that in the construction of the power house away from the shore entirely, away out in the Severn River, away from the banks, must involve something more than the building of that house. It involves the building of the Academy grounds out to that structure. I do not say that it ought not to be done, but I do say it is the duty of the House, as the guardian of the public funds, to know what we are leading up to when we appropriate money, and that we should not expend money upon a public building without any restriction being imposed by this House.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. In one moment. I have only five minutes. They pulled down there, and, as I say, without law, because of a clause in an appropriation bill that puts in $90,000 for electric wiring and removing old buildings, which does not, in my judgment, confer authority to tear down any particular building—they have already torn down the marine barracks that we appropriated for only in 1882-83, which was built at a cost of $40,000. They have torn it down and the bricks are carted away. We built a boathouse in 1888, barely a decade ago, that cost $30,000, and that is to be swept away. We built a board house—a house that the Board of Visitors use, and which is used as a clubhouse for the balance of the year—and that has been torn down and carted away.

Now, I am not here to arraign the Secretary of the Navy or impeach him because all that has been done, but I say we do not know how far they are going to carry this thing; and the Committee on Naval Affairs think the House ought to know how far this is to be carried and how it is to end. This body, to a certain extent, has not anything before the House. The gentleman from Maryland has come in here and taken advantage of the technical rules of the House to prevent the House of Representatives from even considering this question. The Committee on Naval Affairs brought a proposition before the House; and if that provision had been acted on by this body, it would have been open to amendment, which anybody could have offered; and if anybody had suggested some wiser way to meet the situation than we have done, it could have been decided upon.

Mr. DRIGGS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question now? The chairman of the committee said a few moments ago that the Secretary of the Navy has spent this money in reconstruction, and you did not believe it was good policy?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have said nothing of the kind. Nothing of that kind has been said in the debate.

Mr. DRIGGS. I understood you to say something similar to that.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What was the gentleman's point? Mr. DRIGGS. The point was simply this: I understood you to say that you considered it unwise for the Secretary to have this money for the reconstruction of these buildings, and in the latter part of your bill you intrust him with the expenditure of a great many millions for the construction of new ships.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman reads the bill—

Mr. DRIGGS. I have read the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman simply does not understand this bill.

Mr. DRIGGS. I know it is very difficult for us to understand all these things, but I do understand the English language, and the section under "Increase of the Navy," is very clear.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Will you be fair enough to understand this bill?

Mr. DRIGGS. Will you be fair enough to try to explain what was wrong in what I alluded to in this bill?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. My time has expired.

Mr. DRIGGS. Now, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. DOLLIVER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11414) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles:

H. R. 8997. An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Brisbois;

H. R. 11785. An act for the relief of certain tobaccoists of Lynchburg, Va.; and

H. R. 8162. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to rent or lease certain portions of forest reserve.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 5450. An act to attach Claiborne County, Miss., to the western division of the southern judicial district of Mississippi; and

S. 2657. An act to provide for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of Selma, in the State of Alabama.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. FOSS. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman be extended five minutes.

There was no objection.

Mr. DRIGGS rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman from New York has asked me a question. I will suggest to him that the question of my being consistent on the floor here to-day does not settle this controversy.

Mr. DRIGGS. With that explanation I do not care to ask any more questions.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is not my explanation. [Laughter.]

Mr. DRIGGS. Well, I want to be perfectly fair, and I want courteous treatment.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I want to be courteous to the gentleman from New York. The gentleman wants to know why I was unwilling to allow the Secretary of the Navy to reconstruct the Naval Academy buildings without limitation, when I had consented to bring in a bill which permitted him to handle millions of dollars to construct battle ships of his own will and without limitation.

Mr. DRIGGS. That is the proposition.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Well, we have not done anything of the kind.

Mr. DRIGGS. Let me read the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am not going to allow the gentleman to use up the whole of my five minutes. [Laughter.]

Now, let me explain. But a very few members of the House will need this explanation, because most every member of the House who has ever read any of the appropriation bills brought in here since we appropriated for the first of the steel ships knows perfectly well that the construction of every one of the vessels is limited and hedged in and provided for by a statute that we passed many years ago providing the details of construction of these vessels, and which is referred to in set terms in this bill. The Secretary of the Navy is bound to construct these ships in direct and absolute accordance with the specifications that are laid down in the acts of Congress, which were painstakingly prepared, improved, and modified in Congress until they form a code that absolutely controls, by the voice of Congress, every act of the Secretary of the Navy in building these ships. I trust the gentleman is answered.

Mr. DRIGGS. I am much obliged to the gentleman from Maine, but he does not entirely answer my question, for I contend the authority granted the Secretary of the Navy is identical in each case—that is, Naval Academy compared with increase of Navy.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I have the highest respect for the gentleman from Maine and for his taste in laying out grounds, and I would like to see him participate in this. I find that the buildings torn down are not so valuable, after all.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I gave you the cost of them.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The Secretary of the Navy says in his letter the following buildings have been surveyed and found to be unsafe: The armory, which had been abandoned; the boat-house, which had been considered unsafe for many years for its original purpose and unworthy of repair—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Neither of these buildings were referred to by me at all.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. These were the buildings I was inquiring about. Now, if the Secretary of the Navy is proceeding upon some plan adopted—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. He is not.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH (continuing). If he is proceeding with the expenditure of the public money as a discreet public officer ought to do, I submit that before his plan is changed and turned about, some other plan more feasible than the one he is operating upon should be adopted by Congress.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman from Michigan will give me his attention, he has put his finger upon the whole difficulty here. We have been debating two days on that very point. There is no sense in discussing this question a minute if the Secretary of the Navy is going according to law, according to wisdom, and on the best plan. But that is the whole question here, and we can not find that he is.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Is there a disagreement between the chairman of the committee and the Secretary of the Navy on that point?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No. I will read from the report and the gentleman will see that we are in entire agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has again expired.

Mr. DAYTON. I ask that the gentleman have five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am going to get this all in, either through my own agency or that of the members of my committee, and it does not make much difference which. The Secretary of the Navy was before the Committee on Naval Affairs on this very subject, and in relation to this matter he was asked some questions and answered them very specifically. I will read:

You say that they could not be made of granite within the appropriation and carry out the plans. What do you mean by carrying out the plans—a plan which was made before this appropriation?

Secretary LONG. The Matthews plan.

The CHAIRMAN. Had that ever been adopted officially?

Secretary LONG. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Then why was it necessary to have the specifications—Secretary LONG. It depends on what you mean by "adopted." There was no legislation authorizing its adoption. As far as the Department was concerned, the Department was satisfied that that was a good plan. The Department was in hopes that Mr. Flagg could make his specifications to build within that amount, although he had notified us that if he used the granite probably he would not be able to get it within the appropriation. We could not tell until we submitted these bids to bidders.

Now, I may be very stupid in my comprehension of the meaning of language, but I think that comes pretty near a statement by the Secretary of the Navy that he never had any authority to proceed according to any particular plan.

As far as the Department was concerned, the Department—

That means the Secretary of the Navy or some of his officials—was satisfied that that was a good plan. The Department was in hopes that Mr. Flagg would make his specifications, etc., come within the amount.

The CHAIRMAN. Was the Department in any way under legal obligation to advertise for those buildings in accordance with any plans?

Secretary LONG. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Was not the law of last year—

Now, follow this language, and I will get the negative piled up, Pelion on Ossa:

The CHAIRMAN. Was not the law of last year the only authority for the Department to act in the matter?

Secretary LONG. Yes, sir; for the construction of the power house, etc.

That is all that I think is necessary to answer the gentleman's question.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Mr. Chairman, there is a great deal more in this amendment than appears upon its face. The situation is such that it irrevocably, that is the precise fact—the situation is such that it irrevocably commits the Government to the improvement of the Naval Academy at Annapolis, involving the expenditure of at least $8,000,000 and possibly eight, ten, or more millions.

Now, this proposition in regard to plans about which we have been talking does not seem to be very perfectly understood, in spite of all that has been said upon it. If I may be permitted, I think I can make plain just what has been done and what has not been done in this matter of the adoption of a plan. In 1895 the annual Board of Visitors was appointed to visit the Naval Academy, and during their session they adopted this resolution:

That the Secretary of the Navy be, and is hereby, requested to organize a commission, to consist of five officers of the Government, who shall forthwith proceed to examine and report upon the present condition of the grounds and buildings, and also upon the sanitary condition of the Academy, such report to be made to the Secretary of the Navy and by him to be submitted to Congress at its next session, with such recommendation as he may see fit to make.

In passing, I will say that no Secretary of the Navy has ever made any recommendation under that resolution, so far as the committee has been informed.

Mr. MUDD. Not for buildings?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Not for any plans for the rebuilding of this institution; and this amendment, as the gentleman knows, involves irrevocably the rebuilding of this institution at an expense of six, eight, ten, or more millions of dollars.

Mr. MUDD. What authority has the gentleman for that statement?

Mr. SOUTHARD. We may as well be fair with each other. I say these plans involve a possible expenditure of $10,000,000.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Is that understood?

Mr. SOUTHARD. I am going to explain this whole matter. The resolution, a part of which I have just read, continues:

And the report shall also contain a complete description of each building now standing and in use upon the grounds, with a statement as to age, value, and present condition, and also a like description of each building to be repaired or rebuilt or erected, with an estimate as to the cost of repairing or rebuilding or erection, as the case may be.

Now, that was the resolution of the Board of Visitors. It went to the Secretary of the Navy, who, in accordance with it, organized what has been called the Matthews board. It consisted of Commodore Matthews as senior member, P. H. Cooper, captain of the United States Navy, and three or four others.

A MEMBER. Any architects?

Mr. SOUTHARD. No architects; these were naval officers.

Mr. MUDD. But they employed an architect.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Yes; they employed an architect. Now we shall see what they did, if the gentleman will be patient a moment. In their report that commission describes each building, and there are probably fifty, sixty, or seventy—not less than fifty and probably seventy buildings down there. I have not counted them. And with the exception of five, the carrying out of this plan involves the demolition of all of them—every one; not only a reconstruction of the buildings, but a complete reconstruction of the grounds also. It proposes the addition of acres of ground to those already belonging to the Academy. The various buildings are here described. For instance, there is the steam engineering building, which is thus described:

(10) Steam engineering building, No. 46.—Built in 1866, of brick, with tin roof; the main building, 125 by 27 feet, is two stories high, with attic used as a drawing-room. It has a "lean to" on each side, one story high, 85 by 27 feet, with tin roof. The lower floor is used for offices and workshops and the second floor for recitation rooms. It is fairly well adapted to its present purpose and is valued at $20,000. It is recommended that it be torn down, as it interferes with the proposed plan.

There are enumerated here 15 different buildings, meeting in greater or less degree the requirements of the institution, which are recommended to be torn down simply because they "interfere with the proposed plan," and for no other reason.

I think there are five buildings that it is suggested shall be allowed to remain, because of the fact, as alleged, that they do not interfere with the proposed plan.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FISCHER. I ask that the gentleman may be allowed to proceed for five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. If there is no objection, the gentleman will continue.

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Now, before my colleague proceeds, I would like to ask him to state if in his judgment, and in the judgment of the committee, we can get along in the proposed rehabilitation of the Academy without destroying any of the buildings now used?

Mr. SOUTHARD. That is precisely what we want to find out.

Mr. GROSVENOR. But has it not been already found out?

Mr. SOUTHARD. By whom?

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, by somebody who has examined the matter.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I do not know of anybody who has examined it except the special commission. We desire an opportunity of doing that very thing.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The Secretary of the Navy seems to have found it out.

Mr. SOUTHARD. No; I think not; and I will explain why. My friend is laboring under a misapprehension, as I think, because the impression seems to prevail that some plan has been adopted by which they will proceed to tear down certain buildings and rearrange others. Now, it should not be forgotten that no general plan has been devised. They have proceeded, it is true, to a certain extent in accordance with what is properly known as the "Flagg plan," but there has been, as yet, no general scheme devised which has received the official approval of anybody.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Well, a week ago I would have said the improvements were in progress in accordance with some plan which has been devised by somebody.

But I would ask my colleague if it is not a fact that the "plan," on which the arrangement is made of the buildings, is obsolete today, and that there should be necessarily, if the improvement is made at all, a great change in any such plan?

Mr. SOUTHARD. I will state to my colleague that the committee is anxious to investigate this matter thoroughly and carefully. There is not a member of the Committee on Naval Affairs, as far as I am advised, who is not in favor of appropriating the money for the improvement of the Academy. That is not the question involved here at all. What we want is, in the first place, that there shall be a systematic and a comprehensive plan.

In the first place, there ought to be a limit to expenditures of the public money to be provided for these improvements. We do not know—nobody can tell—what is to be the cost. The modification is not suggested or recommended by the Secretary of the Navy. Whether it is the best plan or not, nobody knows. We have no information upon the subject, nor do we know whether it will afford all the necessary facilities needed at the Academy. There are many matters involved which must be investigated and carefully examined and studied before we can act intelligently.

The Committee on Naval Affairs, I believe, without exception is—I think I may say it is—unanimous in its conclusion that this is not the proper way to proceed; and we believe that we have not the information at hand upon which we ought to proceed. We do not know whether the plan is the best, as I have suggested; and when I speak of "a plan," I speak now of a suggestion or plan that was made gratuitously by somebody who was called in by some member or members of the Matthews board, who had no other authority than that for making the suggestion.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Is it not a fact that there is behind that the judgment of the officials of the institution itself, who know the requirements there, and who have in some degree, at least, advocated such a plan as has been suggested?

Mr. SOUTHARD. I am speaking now of "a plan" which has some legitimate authority. Such a plan is not yet in existence.

Mr. GROSVENOR (continuing). I have a letter stating that the plan to which you have referred has met the approval of the academic board.

Mr. MUDD. Oh, everybody who has looked into the matter approves it.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I know that any man who has been in the Navy for six years is very likely to look at all matters connected with naval affairs through somewhat selfish glasses. He can see little outside of the Navy.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I hope the gentleman will except the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. SOUTHARD. The average officer of the Navy is willing and anxious to have appropriated anything that he thinks is necessary for the upbuilding of the Navy. There is no desire on his part to withhold appropriations on any ground, when the expenditure is for the Navy, and I do not wish to criticize him for his views in that regard. But when we undertake a project of this character, involving an expenditure of the public money of possibly $10,000,000, we should proceed, certainly, according to some well-defined and predetermined plan about which we know something in advance, and on which we are agreed. Now, this plan has never received the recommendation or indorsement of anybody, so far as I know, who has been authorized to recommend it.

Mr. FISCHER. You say the Secretary of the Navy acted in reference—

Mr. SOUTHARD (interrupting). If my friend will allow me, I prefer not to be interrupted just now. I will explain, if he will allow me to proceed.

Last year an effort was made in this same direction. We suggested that we ought to have a plan and to know something more about the limit of expenditure before we undertook to proceed in the direction of making appropriations.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FISCHER. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to proceed five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I suggest that we ought to know more about this plan, and we ought to devise some way of determining whether it is necessary to expend all of this money in the building up of this institution.

An amendment was made to the last appropriation bill upon the floor of this House appropriating $500,000 for the building of three buildings—a power house, an armory, and a boathouse. As I say, the suggestion was then made that no plan had been adopted upon which anybody could proceed, and that before expending so large an amount of money some plan ought to be adopted. Now, we are in favor of the adoption of some good plan.

That money was appropriated. Now, I say, I am satisfied that the Secretary of the Navy labored under the misapprehension that this plan had been adopted in some form or another for the rebuilding of that institution, and he proceeded at once to tear down three buildings. He tore down the boathouse, which you say ought to have been torn down—

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Which he says ought to have been torn down.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Which he says ought to have been torn down, and which possibly ought to have been torn down. He tore down the boathouse and the marine barracks, and what is known as the "board house" was torn down. He located these three buildings in accordance with what was known and is known as the Flagg plan, or the plan proposed by this Matthews board. Evidently this plan was prepared after the Matthews board made their report, because in their report they say that they have not time to submit complete plans, that no appropriation has been made enabling them to do anything of that kind, and for that reason they do not do anything of that kind. They recommend certain appropriations for the completion of the grounds.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Yes.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. You are addressing yourself to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD], are you not?

Mr. SOUTHARD. I am.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. That is the subject under discussion?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Yes.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I should like to know what alternative the House has, suppose we reject the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD]?

Mr. SOUTHARD. If the gentleman had listened to what has preceded in this debate, of course he would know what the committee propose.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Well, I do not see it in the bill.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I will state it. It is not in the bill.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I did not see it there, and I thought I had examined the bill carefully.

Mr. SOUTHARD. There was something in the bill, but it was stricken out on a point of order.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. I understand that.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Now, we propose to bring in a measure providing for proper plans upon which to rebuild this institution.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. The determination by whom?

Mr. SOUTHARD. If it is found best to enter upon an entire rehabilitation of this institution—

Mr. FISCHER. Who is to decide?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Why, it is proposed that this House shall decide it.

Mr. MUDD. Would you put the plans and specifications in the statute?

Mr. SOUTHARD. You can do nothing except by law. We can provide a way to secure satisfactory plans.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is that the alternative which the Committee on Naval Affairs propose, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH] asks, that the House shall decide upon the plans suitable for this Academy?

Mr. SOUTHARD. We propose, if the House will do it, that it shall determine the limit of cost in case we propose to rebuild this institution.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. A plan is one thing and a limitation of cost is a different proposition.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. A limitation of cost is a very different thing from a plan.

Mr. SOUTHARD. And we propose, second, that some competent committee or some competent body shall be provided to determine whether these are the best plans for the entire rebuilding of this institution.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In building such a structure as the Chicago post-office, which is to cost $4,000,000, or any of the other large post-offices, one in Cleveland, in the gentleman's own State, it is not left to Congress or to a committee of Congress to determine whether the plans are right or not. It is left to one of the Departments of the Government and to a subordinate official.

Mr. SOUTHARD. But this is an entirely different matter from that. In the first place, the limit of cost is provided in each case of that kind.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That is not the question. I am not talking about the limit of cost. I am talking about the selection of plans which a moment ago, in response to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SOUTHARD] said was to be left to Congress.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Thereupon the gentleman from Maryland very quickly and very properly asked whether the plans were to be put into the statute. Congress can not fix upon plans in any other way except by statute. You must do that or leave it to a committee or to an official.

Mr. SOUTHARD. But Congress at least determines who the architect shall be.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. Not necessarily.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Not necessarily.

Mr. SOUTHARD. It puts it in the power of somebody to say that.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Now Congress is informed about it, and it may give the Secretary of the Navy the power to say who shall provide plans for the rehabilitation of the buildings at Annapolis.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I ask that the gentleman be allowed five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Now, will you allow me to ask you one question right there?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. The gentleman from Ohio has just said that Congress ought to say who shall prepare the plans.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. In the act of 1899, in making the appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, that is, the existing law—

Mr. SOUTHARD. Yes.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I find that the Secretary is authorized to contract—

For the construction at Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., of a building suitable for use as an armory, at a cost not to exceed $300,000; a boathouse, at a cost not to exceed $200,000; a power house, at a cost not to exceed $100,000; four double houses for officers' quarters, at a cost not to exceed $80,000.

Now I come to the point:

For grading, electric-light wiring, removing old buildings, and preparing plans, at a cost not to exceed $90,000.

There is an express provision delegating authority to select plans.

Mr. SOUTHARD. I hope the gentleman will not take up all the time. It certainly would be a very wide stretch of the imagination to assume that in authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to prepare plans for designated buildings that it carries with it an authorization to prepare comprehensive plans for the rehabilitation of the whole of what is known as the Naval Academy—

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH. A landscape plan.

Mr. SOUTHARD (continuing). Which would involve a construction by the Government of 20 buildings. Is it possible?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. Is there any proposition of that kind in this amendment?

Mr. SOUTHARD. No; but I am simply saying to the House that this plan has been entered upon. The Secretary of the Navy says no other plan had been provided. It was evident that the buildings were not to be, and should not be, constructed in a promiscuous way; that they should have some orderly arrangement. And he is, I say, or was, laboring under a misapprehension that this plan had received the official recognition of the Government, and he proceeded to tear down buildings that were more or less fit for the purposes for which they were used, and to prepare to erect others on what was known as the plan of the Matthews board. Now, I say for us to pass this amendment, for us to authorize this appropriation, would commit us to the plan that has been proposed by the Matthews board, involving an expenditure for buildings of not less than $6,000,000 and probably $10,000,000.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SOUTHARD. There is no limitation proposed. Certainly I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I understand the gentleman to say that this made these authorized plans for these specific buildings?

Mr. SOUTHARD. Certainly.

Mr. NEWLANDS. But it does not authorize a comprehensive plan which shall control the future and which may involve the expenditure of between ten and twelve million dollars. I wish to ask the gentleman if we can not remedy that right now by providing, as done in this amendment, that this appropriation shall cover the sum necessary for obtaining comprehensive plans of the Naval Academy and all buildings used or to be hereafter constructed in connection therewith, at a total cost of not more than $5,000,000, of which the said sum of $1,220,000 shall form a part?

Mr. SOUTHARD. I suppose that could be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Would not that entirely cure the difficulty that the gentleman suggests? It will give authority to the Secretary of the Navy, an executive officer of the Government, to provide for the procurement of comprehensive plans from a single architect or by competition.

Mr. SOUTHARD. There ought to be some limitation of cost, and it ought to be done under competition.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I put that into a suggestion.

Mr. SOUTHARD. That is precisely what we desire.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The Secretary of the Navy may suggest to you, after a further examination, that you should adopt this plan, or say that you should do it differently and from different plans, and you could choose which you would accept.

All that we insist is that this thing should be done now; that this whole matter should not be turned back to the Committee on Naval Affairs to be considered by them for a year before any action is taken.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. There is no proposition like that.

Mr. NEWLANDS. It seems to me, in connection with this amendment, we can report that the sum appropriated here—for it will be a limit on that appropriation and not new legislation—shall cover comprehensive plans for buildings used or to be hereafter constructed, and that the limitation of cost can be fixed now in the amendment and the whole thing proceed.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I wish the gentleman from Nevada would take our proposition and modify it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, the situation is exactly this: The House of Representatives last year took into its own hands the job of the reconstruction of the Naval Academy. The debate last year shows that this was thoroughly understood on both sides of the House. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] so understood it. He says, and I read from page 3432 of the RECORD:

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It was the intention of the committee to proceed to the consideration of this and one or two other important matters just as soon as we could get rid of the appropriation bills. We shall do so. We are not anxious for the task, and if the House thinks it is wiser to delegate this whole matter to the Navy Department and relieve us of all responsibility in the matter, of course it has the right and the power to do it. I want to disabuse the mind of anybody here of any impression that I or my committee have any particular whim or desire about this matter. We have simply acted in accordance with the ordinary business principles that govern all the committees of the House. We brought our bill in here without this great appropriation because of the reasons I have stated. If the House thinks it is wise and best to put it in, of course it will do so.

Mr. MCINTIRE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will.

Mr. MCINTIRE. The gentleman speaks of having a plan in the committee now that is known as the Matthews plan?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am not familiar with it, although I have seen it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I will say for my colleague that during my service on the committee he has been heartily in favor of action toward the rebuilding of the Naval Academy.

The great trouble has been that no action whatever has been taken. For ten years this subject has been mooted in the Naval Committee, and nothing definite has come from it. The rickety buildings are there still, and the defective sewerage and all the buildings are in just as bad order to-day, if not worse—for patching them, I believe, makes them worse—as they were ten years ago. Now, it is true that we have plans in the subcommittee of the Committee on Naval Affairs for the rebuilding of that Academy. But if we formulate a bill and it passes the full committee, we have no assurance whatever that we can get it before the House.

We have no assurance that we can get such a bill before the House under the rules as they are to-day, and secure a vote upon it. This matter, it seems to me, is imperative. The Secretary of the Navy has undoubtedly considered several plans of improvement. He undoubtedly has some systematic plan within his mind to-day. I do not know but that he has sent such plans to our committee; but for one I am willing to trust John D. Long. [Applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, after this discussion, we passed a proposition looking toward the reconstruction of the Academy, appropriating $500,000—and I say “we” meaning the House of Representatives, and not the Committee on Naval Affairs—for specified purposes. The Secretary’s reason for not using this money is that in opening the bids he found that so far as the buildings were concerned he had received no bids that came within the limits of the appropriation; but the filling in and the building of the quay wall outside of the filling in came next, and he issued proposals and received bids, and has awarded the contract for that purpose.

Now, when the Secretary came before the Committee on Naval Affairs, he stated that he had acted in accordance with what he had understood the House of Representatives or Congress to mean when they passed this appropriation. He said expressly that this contract for building quay walls was given in accordance with the plans which he was working from, drawn by Mr. Flagg, of New York, and recommended by the Matthews board. The proposition from the majority of the Naval Committee is, practically, that the House recede from its action last year, stop all work, and that a committee of Congress, consisting of three members of the House and three from the Senate, should look for plans—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I ask for five minutes longer.

There was no objection.

Mr. CUMMINGS (continuing). Should seek plans from five of the leading architects of the country. I do not like that word “five.” I would open the field to all the architects of the country, for I know there are young men 25 or 26 years old that may prove themselves superior in ability to the old, cast-iron architects of the country. There is more than one St. Gaudens in America, and opportunity will develop it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine, the chairman of the committee, has told us that he would try and get a day for us to consider that proposition, as it was ruled out of this bill on a point of order. Well, I know what trying to get a day means in this Congress. I have tried myself to get a day time and again, and have been treated with a cynical look like this [illustrating]. [Laughter.] I have known the Committee on Naval Affairs, or a subcommittee of that committee, to try to get a day for weeks, and they always got something like this [illustrating]. [Laughter.]

Mr. MAGUIRE. I suggest that the gentleman from New York sit to a photographer with that cynical look, so that he may put it in the RECORD. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. If we did get a day, and it amounted to anything, the reconstruction of the Academy would be put off for two or three years at least. After running that gantlet in the House the measure would have to run a gantlet in the Senate, and I see no possible chance for its promptly becoming a law. Last year you were informed that some of the buildings of the Academy were rickety and ready to tumble down, and that the sewerage was defective and dangerous. This year the situation is worse. Three or four of the buildings have been torn down to give place to those you authorized last year. Cadets in the United States Naval Academy are either sleeping or soon will be sleeping in temporary structures erected at Annapolis, awaiting the reconstruction of their quarters.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, in view of the fate of the proposition of the Naval Committee, that upon the whole it is best to go to work at this Academy right away. [Applause.] After talking about it for twelve years we have actually begun the work. Let us continue it. We know that under the superintendence of John D. Long it will be carried to a successful completion in accordance with plans that will reflect credit not only upon the Navy Department, but upon the country at large. [Applause.]

Do not let us stop now because the House of Representatives has seen fit to override the Naval Committee. Possibly it was a good thing for the House to stir up the Naval Committee. I look upon the action of last year as a move on their part to prick the committee into action, and I find no fault with it. The committee came here with a proposition which has been ruled out of order. They wanted a stoppage of work for years, while they were seeking definite plans in accordance with instructions from Congress.

But Congress has already had its say upon the matter. It said a year ago: “The time for reconstruction is now.” It ought to supplement this to-day by saying: “You have begun the work; do not turn back; go on with it.” I believe that under the action already taken the new Academy will be practically reconstructed before a joint committee can recommend and Congress sanction the work under the proposition already ruled out of order. It is a condition and not a theory that confronts us. Stop work now after the work has been begun and you hatch a brood of claim bills from contractors and others that will return to annoy us in the coming years. Let the work go on and be completed as soon as possible. Mr. Chairman, I have no more to say. Let us have a vote.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. A move to amend by striking out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pending amendment will be considered as withdrawn. The Chair hears no objection. The gentleman from Maine moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, this is the first moment I have been aware that the action of the Naval Committee in reporting a bill on this subject containing the recommendation that we made was other than the unanimous recommendation of the committee. We had the subject under consideration for some time. In our hearings there appeared before us the Secretary of the Navy and various other authorities. And we came into the House with the proposition in the bill, as I had supposed up to that time, unanimously indorsed as the project of the committee.

Mr. CUMMINGS. But it was knocked out.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Of course I regret very much to lose the very valuable and influential support of my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS]. His position on the committee for many years, his chairmanship of it for a time, his recognized ability in the House, render him an ally of great importance, especially in support of a proposition formulated by a committee. And I now say what I do only to render it impossible that any member of this Committee of the Whole shall for a moment suppose that I was aware of the present attitude of my colleague. If at any time through inadvertence during the course of this debate I may have used the word "unanimous" in stating the action of the committee on this proposition, I simply supposed such to be the fact; and so far as I have been able hastily to inquire of my colleagues on the committee, I think it was generally so supposed.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The committee was practically unanimous. I did not vote on the question.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman, I know, will do me the justice to say that I have received from him to-day the first intimation that he was not in entire accord with the proposition.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I am not in accord with it because we can not get it before the House.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I say the gentleman will do me the justice to bear me out in the statement that to-day I have for the first time had any intimation that he was not in accord with the proposition.

This is all I desire to say except that the gentleman was present when the hearings were held; and I am not at all sure but that, if he had made the very powerful and cogent speech in the committee that he has made here to-day, it might have influenced some of us in regard to this proposition, for his views are regarded with very great respect in the committee, and I am very sorry we did not have the benefit of them at the time when we were committing ourselves to the recommendation of a form of procedure to bring this question into the House.

I notice that in the hearings before our committee our colleague from New York made comparatively few inquiries. In one case I was talking about the work on the Library building and said:

They went to work on the foundations and went forward for one or two years—I forget which—under the commission, and then determined to re-examine the whole question, the result of which was an entire recasting of the plans.

Then I referred to my friend from New York as knowing more about the proceedings in connection with the Library building than I did, and here is his response:

It was originally determined to make it cost $4,000,000; and under the leadership of Mr. Kead and myself on the other side, we put up the limit to $6,000,000.

And then a little further on, when Secretary Long was making a statement, the gentleman from New York asked:

Was the Secretary authorized under act of Congress to accept the recommendations of the Matthews board?

Secretary Long. Not in terms, I understand, because that board was never authorized by Congress.

A little farther along—and this, I think, was the only other case in which the gentleman from New York joined in the hearings—he said:

Without some more definite authority there will be a question by the House, if you go ahead, in regard to the authority for it, and the probability is there will be a great deal of trouble.

From these few contributions by the gentleman from New York to the hearings when we were deciding what we would do I gathered the impression that my colleague was in sympathy with what we were about to do.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I think the Committee of the Whole have heard about all the facts involved in this matter. I doubt very much whether any more light can be thrown upon it by further discussion. I think it would have been an advantage if I could have had here a diagram of large size with which to show the effect of the legislation already had and that now proposed—how far it would bind the Government to plans which the Secretary of the Navy says have never been authorized by any legal or official body, and the extent of which has never been reported to Congress by anybody except so far as they may have been reported in this hearing in the statement of Mr. Flagg, the designer, that in his judgment the plans would involve a cost of at least $8,000,000 if the structures are built of the material of which they ought to be built.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am going to ask the committee to limit the debate on this proposition to five minutes. The committee understands thoroughly the pending question. I ask unanimous consent to limit debate, or, if necessary, I will make a motion to that effect.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine moves that all debate on this paragraph and amendments thereto be closed in five minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Gentlemen, I hope, will realize that we are rapidly reaching the end of the session and we must proceed with the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the motion.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 21, noes 31.

So the motion to limit debate was rejected.

[Mr. BERRY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. HANDY. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments are exhausted. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. HANDY. I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nevada has an amendment he desires to offer.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I propose an amendment to the bill, to be added to the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada.

The Clerk read as follows:

This appropriation shall cover the sum necessary for obtaining comprehensive plans of the Naval Academy and all buildings used or to be hereafter constructed in connection therewith, at a total cost of not more than $5,000,000, of which the said sum of $1,220,000 shall form a part.

The Secretary of the Navy may call upon the Secretary of War for the detail of such engineer officers as he may deem necessary to supervise the construction of the buildings hereby authorized and the expenditure of the moneys hereby appropriated.

Mr. MUDD. I desire to ask the gentleman a question right there.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. MUDD. This does not interfere with the previously authorized buildings?

Mr. NEWLANDS. That leaves the previously authorized buildings. It provides for the construction of the three buildings that are now in process of construction, and it provides that an additional appropriation shall cover the sum—

Mr. HILBORN. I desire to reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. HILBORN. I desire to reserve the point of order.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Too late.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I think it is too late to make the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HILBORN. I think not.

The CHAIRMAN. Discussion has been going on for two or three minutes, and the Chair is inclined to think that the gentleman is too late now to reserve the point of order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The purpose of this amendment is that a sum asked for by the gentleman from Maryland covers not only the completion of those buildings, but also cover comprehensive plans—

Mr. DAYTON. A parliamentary inquiry. I understood the Chair to rule that the point of order is not proper to this amendment just offered?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair stated that the point of order was not raised until the gentleman from Nevada had been discussing the amendment for one or two minutes.

Mr. DAYTON. I did not so understand it. The amendment was read, and immediately the gentleman from California sought recognition of the Chair. If any debate followed, it was simply because the Chair did not recognize the gentleman from California.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please be in order.

Mr. NEWLANDS. The gentleman can not take me off the floor by a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to hear the conclusion of the statement of the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. DAYTON. I say that immediately upon the reading of the amendment, so that members of the House could understand what it contained, the gentleman from California rose and said that he reserved the point of order, and tried to obtain the attention of the Chair; but the Chair did not give his attention, or did not hear him, although he was earnest in his effort to secure the attention of the Chair; and if any debate went on by the gentleman from Nevada, it was going on while the gentleman from California was earnestly seeking to obtain the attention of the Chair to make the point of order:

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California rose, as the Chair understood, and requested the Chair to procure order in the committee.

Mr. HILBORN. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from California states to the Chair that he rose for the purpose of reserving the point of order against this amendment, the Chair will say that the gentleman rose in time.

Mr. HILBORN. I certainly did so, and rose immediately on the conclusion of the reading of the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair saw the gentleman from California [Mr. HILBORN] rise at that time, but understood the gentleman rose to a point of order to request that the House be in order before the gentleman proceeded.

Mr. HILBORN. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair misunderstood the gentleman from California and will now rule that the gentleman was in time and that the point of order was reserved.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I wish to say that this simply limits the appropriation provided for by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MUDD]. It provides that it shall include comprehensive plans for the entire Naval Academy and for the buildings hereafter to be reconstructed. It also provides, simply as a limitation upon the appropriation, that the Secretary of the Treasury may call upon the Secretary of War to detail engineer officers in the Army for the purpose of supervising the construction of these buildings and the expenditure of money under this appropriation. The reason I make that suggestion is this: At West Point the Army officers receive training in architecture, in the construction of buildings. At the Naval Academy no such instruction is given.

The experience in this country is that those buildings have been the most efficiently constructed, the most economically constructed, and the most safely constructed that have been placed under the direction and control and supervision of the engineer officers of the Army, and a striking example of that is the beautiful Library building which confronts us. This suggestion does not make it mandatory on the Secretary of the Navy, but simply permits it—gives him the power to call upon the Engineer Department of the Army for such skilled service as may be required.

Now, it seems to me that the amendment as amended covers everything that can be asked for by the Naval Committee. It covers the question of comprehensive plans to be adopted by the Secretary of the Navy, either the plans already drawn or such other plans as he may hereafter select upon competition if he wishes, which is the limit of the entire appropriation, and it provides that the money shall be expended in such a way as will provide the most efficient and economical work. I submit that the amendment is not subject to a point of order; that each one of these provisions is simply a limitation upon the appropriation sought to be given by the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland and is within the entire province of the House without incurring the point of order that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California wish to discuss the point of order?

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman, the objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Nevada [Mr. NEWLANDS] is that it would be fatal to the whole proposition of rebuilding the naval establishment at Annapolis. In the first place, the plan provided could not be carried out for $5,000,000. While we had no estimate as to the cost of rebuilding of that establishment from anybody who was authorized to make any estimate, we have had estimates based upon guesswork, and they range all the way from $6,000,000 to $10,000,000. Mr. Flagg himself, who has drawn this picture, estimated the cost at $8,000,000.

Now, I want to correct an impression that has gone out, that the Committee on Naval Affairs are opposed to Annapolis as the location of this Naval Academy. I have been a constant attendant at all of the meetings of this committee, both at the last session and at this, and I have never heard a member suggest that Annapolis was not the proper place for the location of that Academy. The Committee on Naval Affairs in bringing in this resolution have not been actuated by any hostility to the Naval Academy. The Committee on Naval Affairs are proud of that school, and they want to see it housed in buildings that are proper and appropriate. They want that naval establishment, when it is completed, to be the best in the world and a model for other nations.

At the last session we passed an appropriation of $500,000 for building certain buildings which were therein named, and this year they come with estimates for a very much larger sum for the construction of other buildings, among them a building for cadets' quarters, estimated to cost $3,500,000. Now, the Committee on Naval Affairs thought the time had arrived when the House should know how many more $3,500,000 buildings would be required, and what the total cost of reconstructing that establishment would be. We have never had a plan of this establishment at Annapolis prepared by anybody who was authorized to prepare plans. We have never had an estimate of the total cost of this work made by anybody with competent authority to make such estimate. The committee would have been remiss in their duty if they had not called the attention of the House to this anomalous condition of affairs. Why, we do not build a post-office in a country town without first preparing and accepting a plan—

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. May I interrupt the gentleman at this point?

Mr. HILBORN. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. I thought that when we made an appropriation for a public building, the first thing was the appropriation. We say that the Secretary of the Treasury is authorized to prepare plans, and then we say that the building shall not cost over a certain sum. We do not first prepare the plans. Now, then, as I understand, the amendment of the gentleman from Nevada is that we shall say that the $5,000,000 shall be expended, and no more, for buildings to be constructed on the campus. I do not see the argument of the gentleman from California as to the expenditure of eight, nine, or ten million dollars, when Congress limits it to five, which of course will lead to the modification of the plans.

It will lead to the Secretary of the Navy calling for new plans, as has been often done in cases of this kind. The original plan for the Library building over here contemplated, I understand, a building which was to cost ten or twelve million dollars. Congress reduced the estimate once, and then reduced it again. The original plans were curtailed, changed, modified, and finally the expenditure was brought within the sum fixed by Congress. The fact that we say that $5,000,000 shall be the sum expended, and no more, will not necessarily result in an expenditure of $8,000,000.

Mr. HILBORN. The first mistake that my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. COOPER] makes is in overlooking the fact that in passing a bill for the construction of a post-office we do not usually make an appropriation. We simply authorize the construction of a building and limit the cost of the structure.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. We fix the amount.

Mr. HILBORN. And afterwards an appropriation has to be made. Now, the Committee on Naval Affairs are friendly to this institution at Annapolis. They want to see the naval school there rehabilitated. But if you limit the cost to $5,000,000, you forever place a quietus upon that establishment.

Mr. DAYTON. Will the gentleman pardon a suggestion? This amendment has nothing whatever to do with the grounds. The redemption of 7 acres of ground there will be so much additional expense in addition to that proposed by this amendment.

Mr. HILBORN. The estimates for this year contemplate one building, which is expected to cost $3,500,000.

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. This amendment probably prohibits the erection of that building.

Mr. HILBORN. The Committee on Naval Affairs felt that the House ought to be aware of the anomalous condition of affairs around that institution, and therefore they have called the attention of the House to this matter. After having done so, if the House is willing to go on and make these enormous appropriations, the Committee on Naval Affairs will feel that they at least have done their duty.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move that all debate on the pending paragraph be closed—

Mr. MUDD. There is a point of order pending.

The CHAIRMAN. There is a question of order pending. Upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Nevada to the amendment of the gentleman from Maryland the gentleman from California has raised the point of order that it is obnoxious to Rule XXI. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. HANDY. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move that all debate be closed—

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Does the Chair, in the ruling just made, hold that the Committee of the Whole can not limit the amount of an appropriation?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the amendment is obnoxious to Rule XXI because it proposes legislation upon an appropriation bill. It proposes to change existing law.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Some part of it?

The CHAIRMAN. Some part of it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. And therefore the Chair holds it is all bad?

The CHAIRMAN. It is offered as a whole.

Mr. MUDD. As I have made the point of order, I ask to be recognized.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move that all further debate on the pending paragraph and amendment be closed in one minute. The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Now let us have a vote.

Mr. MUDD. As mover of the pending amendment, I should like to have the one minute remaining.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I cheerfully concede it to the gentleman.

Mr. MUDD. Mr. Chairman, in the short time now at my disposal I shall have no opportunity to further discuss the amendment, nor do I desire further discussion; but I want to call the attention of the House to one fact—that the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy in 1898, a board consisting in part of some gentlemen who are members of the present House, one of them the gentleman from California [Mr. HILBORN], now opposing this proposition, have in their report embodied this statement:

Appropriations having been made on account of a new armory, a new bathhouse, and a new power house, the new buildings of pressing necessity will be supplied in the reasonably near future upon a plan and of a character befitting the dignity of the nation.

In other words, here is an inferential approval of these specific buildings, upon the same plan as now contemplated, in a report submitted by the gentleman from California and two other distinguished members of this House—Messrs. WANGER of Pennsylvania and WHEELER of Kentucky—within the last few months.

With this statement, Mr. Chairman, I am ready to have the vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MUDD. I ask that it be again read.

The amendment of Mr. MUDD was again read.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Now, let us have a vote.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment, there were—ayes 60, noes 48.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine and Mr. MUDD were appointed.

The question being again taken, there were—ayes 75, noes 53.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I give notice that I shall ask for a vote on this amendment in the House by yeas and nays.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval Observatory: For grounds and roads: For continuing grading, extending roads and paths, clearing and improving grounds, $10,000.

Mr. TODD. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

Insert after line 16, page 31:

"The Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to erect a suitable granite monument to the memory of Capt. Charles Vernon Gridley, who lost his life as a result of disability received while acting as captain of the United States flagship Olympia in the battle of Manila Harbor, May 1, 1898, and to inscribe such monument; and the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as is necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole has passed the section to which this proposition is offered as an amendment.

Mr. TODD. I trust the gentleman from Maine will not raise any point of order upon the amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman from Michigan will allow a vote to be taken at once without debate, I will waive the objection and allow the amendment to be considered.

The CHAIRMAN. But the point at which the amendment should be offered had already been passed on over the day before yesterday, and another section has been read.

Mr. TODD. Will the Chair recognize me after this section has been disposed of?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will of course recognize any gentleman where a legitimate amendment is offered.

Mr. TODD. I will say to the gentleman from Maine— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Medical Department: For surgeons' necessities for vessels in commission, navy-yards, naval stations, Marine Corps, and Coast Survey, and for the civil establishment at the several naval hospitals, navy-yards, naval laboratory and department of instruction, museum of hygiene, and Naval Academy, $75,000.

Mr. TODD. Mr. Chairman, I move as an amendment to this provision the amendment which was read a moment ago. And I would be glad to have the House in order while the amendment is being considered.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment has just been read.

Mr. TODD. I move to insert this after line 2, on page 74.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I shall be exceedingly glad, I will state, Mr. Chairman, on a proper occasion to contribute in any way in my power to honoring the memory of Captain Gridley, and I have no doubt that the House will be. But this is clearly subject to the point of order on this bill, and I am forced against my will to make objection.

Mr. TODD. What point of order does the gentleman raise?

The CHAIRMAN. What purpose does the gentleman rise for?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the Chair will kindly permit me a moment, I will explain.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to know if the gentleman wishes to discuss the question pending or submit a question of order?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I simply rose to ask the Chair to rule upon the question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. TODD. Will the gentleman from Maine kindly reserve the point of order for a moment?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Contingent, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery: For freight, expressage on medical stores, tolls, ferriages, transportation of sick to hospital, transportation of insane patients; care, transportation, and burial of the dead; advertising; telegraphing; rent of telephones; purchase of books and stationery; binding of medical records, unbound books, and pamphlets; postage and purchase of stamps for foreign service; expenses attending the medical board of examiners; rent of rooms for naval dispensary; hygienic and sanitary investigation and illustration; sanitary and hygienic instruction; purchase and repairs of wagons and harness; purchase of and feed for horses and cows; trees, plants, garden tools, and seeds; furniture and incidental articles for the museum of hygiene, naval dispensary, Washington; naval laboratory, sick quarters at Naval Academy and marine barracks, surgeons' offices and dispensaries at navy-yards and naval stations; washing for medical department at museum of hygiene, naval dispensary, Washington; naval laboratory and department of instruction, sick quarters at Naval Academy and marine barracks, dispensaries at navy-yards and naval stations and ships and rendezvous, and for minor repairs on buildings and grounds of the United States Naval Museum of Hygiene, and all other necessary contingent expenses, $30,000.

Mr. TODD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I desire in behalf of a great naval hero, whose memory should be perpetuated not only in the hearts of the American people, but upon a monument erected by the people of his country, to place his record before Congress and the country. I refer to Charles Vernon Gridley, captain of Admiral Dewey's flagship Olympia, who lost his life in the service of his country in Manila Harbor. I desire now that the Clerk shall again read the amendment I have offered to the pending bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to erect a suitable granite monument to the memory of Capt. Charles Vernon Gridley, who lost his life as a result of the disabilities received while acting as captain of the U. S. flagship Olympia in the battle of Manila Harbor, May 1, 1898, and to inscribe such monument; and the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Mr. TODD. I will state that I have already introduced a resolution in the House of Representatives (H. Res. 357) of which this amendment is a copy.

Captain Gridley's early life was spent in Michigan, in the district that I have the honor to represent. Yet proud as we of Michigan are to own him as a citizen, his fame and valor "is not to be hemmed in by State lines." His heroic services belong to the nation and to humanity. He achieved splendid renown in the battle of Mobile Bay when only 20 years old, where he was an officer on the flagship Owens, and Commodore Farragut reported that his gallantry was complete and beyond all praise.

His record was one of increasing honor from the time the civil war began during his boyhood to the time of his death.

He was, at the time of the battle of Manila or shortly preceding it, on a sick bed. Against the advice of his physicians he left Hongkong with Admiral Dewey and went to Manila Bay, where he participated in that memorable engagement that brought luster upon the American Navy. Admiral Dewey, in his report of the engagement, states that he left the beginning of the fight to Captain Gridley, directing him to open the engagement whenever he was ready.

Having risen from a sick bed, he personally managed the course of the flagship with consummate skill and courage. On account of the intense heat during that engagement, and because of his illness, he received a severe rupture which resulted in his death on his way to the United States about fifty days afterwards.

So I have introduced a bill, which has the unanimous support of the committee, providing for the erection of a monument to his memory, to cost $5,000, and to be placed in Arlington Cemetery. I now desire, Mr. Chairman, that the report of that committee, which is a document of only two pages, shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD in memory of this great man.

Without occupying the time of the House further, I simply wish to say that it seems to me that a man of such daring, of such self-sacrifice, such heroism, such gallantry, who rose from a sick bed when he knew that it meant his death to go into the conning tower in the greatest naval engagement of all history, which has overshadowed Salamis and Trafalgar—that such a man should receive a monument worthy of his heroism, to be built by the American people. So I trust that the honorable chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs will withdraw his objection to this and allow a vote upon this amendment.

The report of the committee, which was unanimous, is as follows:

The Committee on the Library, to whom was referred House joint resolution (H. Res. 357) to erect a monument to the memory of Capt. Charles

Vernon Gridley in the Arlington Cemetery, having duly considered the same, report as follows:

Captain Gridley's death was the direct result of severe exposure while acting as captain of Admiral Dewey's flagship, the Olympia, at the memorable naval battle in Manila Bay May 1, 1898.

His record in that great engagement, which did so much for speedily deciding the result of the recent war, is one peculiarly worthy of the nation's recognition. Captain Gridley arose from a sick bed and took command of his ship on Sunday morning, May 1, 1898, and remained at his post as one of Admiral Dewey's faithful assistants in the destruction of the Spanish fleet. To him Admiral Dewey intrusted the opening of the great naval engagement, saying to him early in the morning, "You may fire whenever you are ready, Gridley." How well he fulfilled his trust is shown by the results of the battle.

He took his position in the conning tower, whence he directed both the course of the ship and the firing upon the Spanish fleets and forts. The heat in the conning tower was intense, and this, with a breach which he received during the day, aggravated his disease from which he was at the time suffering, so that on the 25th of May he was ordered to the United States; but the results of the strain and exposure of the battle were too great to be overcome, and he died at Kobe, Japan, on the 5th day of June, 1898. Before breathing his last he said: "The battle of Manila caused my death, but I would do the same thing again."

Captain Gridley distinguished himself for like bravery during the civil war, receiving the highest praise for gallantry from his commander, which will be referred to hereafter. A brief sketch of his life is herewith submitted, together with a testimonial from the crew of the Olympia and a letter from Admiral Dewey:

"Capt. Charles Vernon Gridley, United States Navy, was born at Logansport, Ind., in 1844. When 3 months of age his parents removed to Hillsdale, Mich., where he attended the public schools until he commenced a course of studies at Hillsdale College. In 1860 he received an appointment from the Hon. Henry Waldron, the Representative from that district, to the Naval Academy, from which he graduated in 1863, one year in advance of the usual time, in order that he might take part in the war of the rebellion. He was in the class with Captain Coughlan, of the Raleigh, Captain Wilder, of the Boston, and Captain Sigbee, of the Maine. He was assigned to duty with Admiral Farragut on the Owens before Vicksburg as an ensign, where he remained until the end of the war, doing gallant service.

"He was in Mobile Bay August 5, 1864, on the Owens, and though a young man, distinguished himself in the fight. His conduct was praised thus by his commander: 'The conduct of Acting Ensign Charles V. Gridley is beyond all praise.' He had charge of the master's division and assisted in conning the ship from the topgallant forecastle.

"He was promoted to master May 10, 1866; lieutenant, February 21, 1867; lieutenant-commander, March 12, 1868; commander, March 10, 1869; captain, March 14, 1869.

"After the war of the rebellion he was assigned to the Brooklyn, the flagship of the Brazilian Squadron, on which he served until 1867.

"In 1870 he was assigned to the steamer Michigan, on which he served two years.

"In 1873 he was assigned to the Monongahela.

"In 1875 he was appointed instructor at the Naval Academy, where he served four years.

"In 1879 he was made executive officer of the Trenton.

"From October, 1882, to February, 1884, he was chief of the navigation office in the Boston Navy-Yard.

"February 5, 1884, he was ordered to command the training ship Jamestown.

"May 11, 1886, assigned to the Portsmouth.

"July, 1887, appointed inspector of light-houses in Tenth light-house district.

"July, 1891, assigned to special duty in the Washington Navy-Yard.

"February, 1892, assigned to the command of the Marion.

"March, 1897, ordered to the Asiatic Squadron.

"July 28, 1897, assigned to the command of the Olympia, which, at the battle of Cavite, in Manila Bay, was the flagship of Admiral Dewey, where he rendered valuable service to his country."

The crew of the Olympia, in their testimonial to the family, say: "His death, though directly from sickness, was really caused by his unswerving fidelity to his country and anxiety to serve her cause. History offers no greater example of unflinching heroism and patriotic devotion than that shown by our dear departed captain. Well knowing the fatal results that would attend his doing so, Capt. Charles V. Gridley, hero, persisted in his purpose and nobly did more than his duty on that fateful 1st of May."

[Letter from Admiral Dewey to Mrs. Gridley.]

FLAGSHIP OLYMPIA, Cavite, Philippine Islands, August 13, 1898.

DEAR MADAM: I am just in receipt of your letter in regard to the death of your son, Capt. Charles V. Gridley, and I wish to extend to you my most sincere sympathy in your great bereavement. His loss is mourned by all who knew him, and especially by me, whose friend and trusted and gallant assistant he was. His illness began in Hongkong, but he bravely clung to his post, and not until after the battle and victory in which he assisted so much would he consent to leave his ship and return to the United States. His death was caused by a complication of diseases, including diarrhea and dropsy, all due to the diseased condition of the liver and aggravated by a rupture sustained in the day of battle.

The immediate cause of his death was a severe hemorrhage of the stomach, which occurred at Kobe. This was entirely unexpected. Indeed, our surgeon had no idea that it would occur, or that Captain Gridley was dangerously ill, although, of course, it was known he could not remain on duty.

It is a matter of some gratification to me that I was instrumental in obtaining for him an advancement in his grade for highly distinguished conduct in battle, which he richly deserved, although he did not live to enjoy it.

With heartfelt sympathy, very sincerely, yours,

GEORGE DEWEY.

The committee unanimously report the resolution favorably, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent that he may print as a portion of his remarks the report which he has indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. SHATTUC. I object.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I hope my friend will not object.

Mr. TODD. I ask the gentleman if he understands that this is only the putting into the RECORD of an official recognition of the gallantry and heroism of one of our great naval heroes?

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, a personal explanation. The reason why I have objected is because I understand the gentleman who makes the request is the gentleman who a short time ago published some twenty pages of matter that was expunged from the RECORD.

A MEMBER. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. SHATTUC. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. TODD. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection. If there be no objection, the informal amendment will be withdrawn and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Construction plant, naval station, Puget Sound, Washington: Repairs to and improvement of plant at Puget Sound Naval Station, Washington, $25,000.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I move to strike out the last clause. I should like the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington moves to strike out the last clause, and states that he desires the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am listening to the gentleman.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. The provision in the bill on page 42, allowing $25,000 for the Puget Sound Naval Station, brings me to the question which I wish to ask, and that is if it is the policy of the Government to abandon the naval station at Port Orchard, and why it is that the recommendation for $230,000 which has been made for the improvement of that station has been either ignored by the committee or not submitted to the committee?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Where does the gentleman find the paragraph he refers to?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Page 42, lines 16, 17, and 18.

Mr. DAYTON. Is not that for Port Orchard?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What is it the gentleman wants further to know?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I want to ask the chairman of the committee if he will inform me whether it be true that it is the policy or intention of the Department to abandon the naval station at Port Orchard, as has been rumored?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have not been officially informed.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Second, if he will inform me why, if that be not true, the recommendation for $235,000 which was made for that naval station was not favorably acted upon, and why that amount was not allowed instead of the $25,000 which appears in the bill? Why was it not agreeable to the committee to appropriate $300,000 more than the amount named in this paragraph?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Well, I think perhaps it might answer the purposes at present to say to the gentleman that the bill is entirely correct if the estimates of the Department are correct, and if the gentleman will only wait until we get to the point where these appropriations properly come in I think he will find them.

Mr. DAYTON. The bill is in strict accord with the estimates.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Perhaps it would be a little more kindly to the gentleman from Washington to state that the appropriations in the bill are made under different heads, and that this appropriation is made under the Bureau of Construction, and the other amounts to which I assume he refers are appropriated under the general head of public works, and are further along in the bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I will say to my friend from Maine—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I should say that we have passed over that part of the bill. It is further back in the bill.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. In a preceding paragraph there is an appropriation of $48,000, of which I am cognizant, but there are no paragraphs subsequent in the measure that appropriate anything. I merely desire to ascertain from the honorable chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Will the gentleman look upon page 30 and see if he does not find his questions all answered there?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I have examined page 30, and I only want to know from the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs if it is within his information whether the policy of the Department is for the abandonment of the Port Orchard station, as has been rumored and as has been reported by the constructor in his report recommending the abandonment of it?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. How can the gentleman expect me to answer a question which I have never heard raised?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I merely wished to know if the gentleman had any information on the subject.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have no information whatever on the question, and never heard anything of the kind suggested. I never heard any such suggestion or read it.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. And the gentleman also informs me that such estimates as have been made by the Department have been complied with in the bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I understand that to be the fact, without exception.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I take the gentleman's suggestion and rely upon it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have no doubt you will find my statements correct. They usually are.

The Clerk read as follows:

Course in naval architecture, Naval Academy: For course in naval architecture for instruction of graduated naval cadets for naval constructors in the Navy, to be immediately available: Four professors, one of naval architecture, one of mathematics, one of mechanics, and one of marine engineering, at $2,500 each per annum, $10,000; one assistant professor of naval architecture, to have charge of the drafting room, $2,500; one clerk, who shall be a stenographer and typewriter, $1,000; one attendant in drafting room, who shall also act as messenger and janitor, $400; a temporary construction to accommodate the constructor's office, drafting room, and lecture rooms, and for furniture for the same, $2,500; purchase of books and scientific periodicals, and for the necessary expenses of the constructor's office, $1,000; in all, $21,900.00.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the chairman of the committee to this provision, and I want to move to strike it out. It is the provision in regard to the course in naval architecture. Upon investigation of that matter, Mr. Chairman, we ascertained that by the personnel bill there would be 40 naval constructors. We have 37 of them now; so that that would be $21,000 simply to educate three men. Under the circumstances, as a member of the committee, I think it would be unwise to go to this expense; and I believe in that view the chairman of the committee agrees with me.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out all of lines 16 to 25, inclusive, on page 43, and from line 1 to 10, both inclusive, on page 49.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

INCREASE OF THE NAVY.

That for the purpose of further increasing the naval establishment of the United States the President is hereby authorized to have constructed by contract three seagoing coast-line battle ships, carrying the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance for vessels of their class upon a trial displacement of about 12,500 tons, to be sheathed and coppered, and to have the highest practicable speed and great radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $3,600,000 each; three armored cruisers of about 12,000 tons trial displacement, carrying the heaviest armor and most powerful ordnance for vessels of their class, to be sheathed and coppered, and to have the highest practicable speed and great radius of action, and to cost, exclusive of armor and armament, not exceeding $4,000,000 each; and six protected cruisers of about 2,500 tons trial displacement, to be sheathed and coppered, and to have the highest speed compatible with good cruising qualities, great radius of action, and to carry the most powerful ordnance suited to vessels of their class, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $1,141,800 each; and not more than two of said battle ships, and not more than two of said armored cruisers, and not more than two of said protected cruisers shall be built in one yard or by one contracting party, and the contracts for the construction of each of said vessels shall be awarded by the Secretary of the Navy to the lowest best responsible bidder, having in view the best results and most expeditious delivery; and in the construction of all said vessels all of the provisions of the act of May 4, 1896, entitled "An act making appropriations for the naval establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes," shall be observed and followed, except that no proposals for any of these vessels shall be considered unless the bidder is already in possession of an adequate plant; and, subject to the provisions hereinafter made, one and not more than one of the aforesaid seagoing battle ships, and one and not more than one of the aforesaid armored cruisers, shall be built on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean or in the waters connecting therewith: Provided, That if it shall appear to the satisfaction of the President of the United States, from the biddings for such contracts when the same are opened and examined by him, said vessels, or either of them, can not be constructed on or near the coast of the Pacific Ocean at a cost not exceeding 4 per cent above the lowest accepted bid for the other battle ships or cruisers provided for in this act, he shall authorize the construction of said vessels, or either of them, elsewhere in the United States, subject to the limitations as to cost hereinbefore provided.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. DOCKERY. I make a point of order against the paragraph.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What paragraph?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will state the point of order.

Mr. DOCKERY. I make a point of order on the paragraph on page 60 beginning after the word "followed," down to and including the word "and," in line 8. In other words, I raise the point of order against that part of the paragraph which reads:

Except that no proposals for any of these vessels shall be considered unless the bidder is already in possession of an adequate plant.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman, I suppose, is aware that that is the exact language of the bill of last year?

Mr. DOCKERY. The chairman of the committee is in error. If he will turn to the bill of last year—

Mr. HOPKINS. I desire to make an additional point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois in a minute to make an additional point of order. Has the gentleman from Missouri concluded the statement of his point of order?

Mr. DOCKERY. I simply desire to say, in reply to the chairman of the committee, who says that this is the language of the current law—

Mr. HOPKINS. On page 59, lines 20, 21, and 23, I desire to make the point of order against the words "and not more than two armored cruisers and not more than two of said protected cruisers shall be built in any one yard or by one contracting party."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is not a change of existing law.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest to the gentleman from Maine that we first dispose of the point of order raised by me.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is what I desire to do, if the gentleman will only hold the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor.

Mr. DOCKERY. In reply to the suggestion of the chairman, I desire to call his attention to the language of the current law, which is this: "That no proposal for torpedo vessels shall be considered unless the bidder is already in possession of an adequate plant."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. We had to strike out the word "torpedo" because we do not provide for any torpedo boats in this bill.

Mr. DOCKERY. I know.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman does not object to that reduction.

Mr. DOCKERY. But that does not touch the question. Here is a proposition to build 13 cruisers, and the gentleman incorporates in the bill a limitation as to bidding. I would like to be heard.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am listening to the gentleman.

Mr. DOCKERY. I want the Chair also to hear. The gentleman incorporates in the bill a prohibition against competition except where the bidder already has an adequate plant.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Does not the gentleman think that desirable?

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not, allow me to say to the gentleman from Maine, because the effect is to limit this business to the Carnegie Company and the Bethlehem Company. If there were a dozen companies—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I want to interrupt my friend, simply to prevent him from a misapprehension. The Carnegie and Bethlehem companies have nothing to do with building these ships at all.

Mr. DOCKERY. Who does?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. They have heretofore furnished a great deal of armor.

Mr. DOCKERY. Who constructs them?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Anybody with big plants. They construct them at Wilmington, at Baltimore, at Bath, at Philadelphia, at Newport News, at San Francisco, and all over the country.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is exactly what I want done. I want "anybody" to have the right to bid for the construction of the ships.

The principle of the bill is vicious; it is exceedingly obnoxious, in my opinion. It limits the bidding to plants already in existence, and is therefore a change of existing law. If, however, it is existing law, as a matter of principle, it would be reprehensible; but not being existing law, and inaugurating, as I view it, a policy which will tend to build up trusts in this particular line of work, I am constrained to insist upon the question of order. I am opposed to trusts and to all legislation which tends to encourage combinations, thus making it inevitable that competition will be destroyed.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I do not see how this language can be possibly subject to a point of order. Does the gentleman raise the point of order that it changes existing law?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes; and that it is legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. This provision has been in the bill year after year. I think that possibly year before last it may not have been in, but it was in other bills, and the provision was in the bill passed by the last Congress. It was in the last appropriation bill. It provided that the torpedo boats, or not more than two, should be built in any one yard.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the committee please be in order?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I do not think it is possible, Mr. Chairman, and I will endeavor to struggle on in the disorder. [Laughter.] The provision of the bill of last year was that no bids should be considered except from those who had an adequate plant. Bids for any of the torpedo boats should not be considered unless made by people in possession of an adequate plant. That was the bill of last year. This year we have no torpedo boats recommended, and that was struck out, so that the paragraph should apply to what it was intended to apply to—the subject-matter in the appropriation immediately preceding. I can not see any departure in principle from the existing law which would make it subject to a point of order.

On the other hand, I think if the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] would look into this question a little he would withdraw any point of order he might have made, even if he thought it technically was well taken, on account of the merits of the question.

Mr. CLARDY. Will the gentleman from Maine permit me?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman will permit me, I am trying to address myself to the Chair on this point of order.

Mr. CLARDY. But I wanted to ask the gentleman a question. This applies to all the vessels named in the paragraph?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It does.

Mr. CLARDY. Do I understand you that no vessel is to be bid for except by a party that already has the plant?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is the object of the provision.

Mr. CLARDY. It is a very bad object.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The committee were of the other opinion, and consequently they put it in the bill. It is for the House to determine. Under the operation of that provision, these vessels at different times have been bid for by shipbuilding firms at Wilmington, Baltimore, Philadelphia, Newport News, Bath, Me., San Francisco, and other places all over the country. The object of it is apparent. The Navy Department, in my judgment, ought not to be authorized to accept bids from persons proposing to build gigantic craft like a battle ship who have not in their possession, and ready at the time when the bids are received, adequate facilities for entering upon their construction. We want these ships within a reasonable time, as well as to obtain them. Everybody who has given a moment's thought to this subject knows perfectly well that an establishment—

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I insist that I shall have an opportunity to speak without being interrupted.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine was speaking to the House, and I rose to address myself to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine has been recognized by the Chair.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman from Illinois thinks he has a right to address the Chair—

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman from Maine was paying no attention to the Chair, nor was the Chair paying any attention to him. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is incorrect in the latter part of his statement.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. When the distinguished parliamentarian from Illinois has got through with the floor, I would like to occupy it for a moment. He seems to spread himself out over the Chair and the floor most of the time [great laughter], and he at least ought to be a little considerate of modest people when they are trying once in a while to get in a word. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, the object of this provision in the bill is to secure prompt work; it does not restrict competition. It does put an obstacle in the way of speculators who might want to put in bids for gigantic operations that they knew they could not execute, as in the case of the Illinois Steel Company a year or two ago, when they held the House and Congress and the United States Government up for two years or so in procuring armor for its ships on a bogus proposition put in here and used as a bugaboo to scare Congress away from a common-sense duty. But it is not to prevent a fair and equitable competition, which will enable us to get the best ships in the world constructed at a fair and equitable price.

No man can prepare a plant for this purpose in much less time than two years. Any gentleman who has attended the launchings of these great battle ships and seen the facilities required to construct them can not have failed to observe the enormous character of the requisites for facilities for building one of these great battle ships. No man will pretend that he can begin on the ground and get up a plant adequate to commence the great battle ship or an armed cruiser inside of two years or more.

I contend, and the committee hold, and I am quite sure this House will hold, that in making contracts, with all the facilities we have developed in this country from the Pacific to the Atlantic, from far northern Maine down to Fortress Monroe—with all these magnificent facilities which we possess to-day, we have a right to demand, when we put out contracts for ships which we want as soon as we can reasonably get them, and for which we have the money to pay—we have a right to demand that the propositions submitted for their construction shall have with them the guaranty of good faith—something which will show that the men who ask these contracts have the facilities for building the ships.

Mr. STEELE. Such a provision, I believe, has been in the law for some time.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It has been in the law year after year—at any rate, for the last two years. It has had the sanction of Congress repeatedly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish the gentleman from Maine would state where he finds such a provision. I have before me the act of 1898 with reference to torpedo boats and the act of 1897, and I fail to find any such provision.

Mr. HEPBURN. Even though such a provision was, as the gentleman claims, in the law of last year and the year before, would not that provision apply only to the vessels to be constructed under those acts and not to these vessels?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The provision was not in the law referred to.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am inclined to think that the suggestion of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] may be correct. I had in my mind the paragraph in regard to not more than a given number of vessels being built in one year, which applied to the torpedo vessels. That was afterwards stricken out. But the desirability of such a provision is obvious on its face. It is in the interest of honest dealing. It does not and can not restrict fair competition, because we have had the evidence in the past that competition is full and ample.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. How does the provision safeguard the Government against bogus bidders?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. We have the evidence of that—

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. But how does the provision safeguard the Government against bogus bidders?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Because we have in this country so many plants of adequate capacity, and it has been demonstrated there is ample competition.

Mr. BRUCKER. In all these contracts for the building of vessels for the Government is there not a forfeiture clause and a time-limit clause?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. There can be such limitations, undoubtedly. But at the same time a man may bid for the construction of a battle ship, may be willing to give heavy bonds guaranteeing that he can build the ship within a given time—say within two years—when the Department may have actual knowledge that it would take him all that time to construct a plant and begin the building of the ship. Of course in such a case it would not be businesslike on the part of the Government to make a contract.

Mr. BRUCKER. The Government would always be protected under such clauses as I have mentioned, would it not?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Not at all. The Government might lose valuable time by entering into such a contract.

Mr. LENTZ. May not a provision of this kind prevent further competition in this way? The Government, as the gentleman concedes, may protect itself by forfeiture clauses and time clauses and bonds.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. But that does not protect the Government in respect to what is more valuable to it than money—the getting of ships at the earliest possible date.

Mr. LENTZ. But there is another consideration, if the gentleman will allow me. Is it not now generally understood in this House and throughout the country that we are going to go on and strengthen our Navy? Why, then, should we insert in a bill of this kind a clause like this, shutting out the hope of other establishments being organized? Will not such a provision as this prevent other men from arranging to do the same kind of work? Why not leave the matter open, as it has been in the past, and let the Navy Department protect itself by insisting upon proper conditions?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. As soon as any new parties get the plant they can make bids.

Mr. LENTZ. But is not the proposition open to this objection: That the five or six companies now in this business can easily make a combination, as bidders for Government work of this kind generally do? May they not agree to add half a million dollars to the price of each vessel, and then divide up that extra amount? Is not that a greater danger than the danger that some new and irresponsible establishments may come in and bid?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The Government is not obliged to give these contracts.

Mr. LENTZ. That is the point. It is not obliged to give them to these new establishments unless it appears wise to do so, is it?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No, sir.

Mr. LENTZ. Then why not leave the matter open, and if some other gentlemen than those now engaged in the business see fit to undertake shipbuilding, permit them to submit their bids? If they can not comply with the proper conditions which the Government may impose as to time limit or other guaranties, then their bids can be rejected just as any other bids may be rejected by the Government. Would we not in that way be safe?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. We have had experience year after year that irresponsible parties will make bids, not only for building ships, but for other things, with the sole purpose of levying tribute in some way or other upon the people who come in and submit their bids in good faith.

Mr. RIDGELY. Is it not the custom of the Government to require bonds in these cases?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Of course it is. But the Government would be liable, even if the bonds were given, which is likely, to a long delay in the construction. But the Government wants something more than the bond. It wants to begin the building of the battle ship. It is not so much the question of a bond as to getting the ships. The bond does not guarantee the building of the ships. It is only a guaranty on the part of the contractor who undertakes to build the ship. It does not facilitate the building of it; and even if the bond were forfeited to the Government and should be paid in full, the ship would not be built.

Mr. RIDGELY. But is the ownership of a plant, I would ask the gentleman, an absolute guaranty for the protection of the Government?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It has been so heretofore. We have found that those people who have the facilities can do the work.

Mr. LENTZ. If the gentleman from Maine will permit another suggestion?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. LENTZ. It seems to me that you are cutting off all opportunity, or all inducement, to other men, who might come in hereafter as competitors for building ships, and therefore limiting the shipbuilding possibilities of the country in the future, not only with reference to battle ships but to all other vessels, even our merchant marine; and I think we ought to leave it open to-day to all competitors to make bids for these ships, and if the man now prepared to build the ships will satisfy the Government that his proposition is good, and the proposition of somebody else is not good, that he is responsible and can do the work, it eliminates a very serious source of trouble in dealing with these questions. But you enable the Government and the people of the United States in the future to avail themselves of facilities which are not now afforded.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, the clause in the bill is an exceedingly important one; and it seems to me, and it seemed to the committee, that the sole and important purpose was to legislate for the construction of more battle ships. It had nothing to do whatever with the price of the ships. That is an entirely independent question. We wanted to provide for the construction of these ships within a reasonable time.

Now, we know that if people are permitted to make plans and bids who have not the facilities for doing the work, it will retard matters; and it is manifest that if this matter were permitted to proceed in that way we could not get the ships within a reasonable time. The Navy Department, or the officers in charge of this matter, would have to consider every proposition that is presented, and delays would necessarily occur. We have to consider all of these matters; and we have also to consider the expense to the Government of preparing the plans before we can even begin to build the ships. Our effort, therefore, was in the direction of doing what we could for what seems to be a popular demand or spirit on the part of the people of the United States, as recommended by the Navy Department, for the construction of more battle ships; and we wanted not only to increase our Navy but to increase it as soon as possible.

Now, let me make a suggestion to the gentleman. Suppose the building of a plant for the construction of battle ships would involve ten years' time. You certainly would not be in favor of allowing the Secretary of the Navy to make a contract with an establishment of that kind, if it would require that length of time to prepare even the place to begin the building of the ship and prepare for the purpose of the construction of our vessels as proposed by this bill. The very suggestion itself is an absurdity, because unless we can get this work done rapidly it is useless to have it done at all.

Who would agree, on the floor of the House, to make an appropriation for the construction of a battle ship that would require ten years before the beginning of the work could be entered upon? Now, the principle involved is precisely similar here. It is not so much a question of encouraging a private enterprise as it is of upholding the absolute requirements and necessities of the nation, and the other question is not in any manner involved. We can not wait; we can not afford to wait on private enterprise in matters of this kind.

Mr. LENTZ. But is not that suggestion answered by the suggestion that the Government officials would not grant a contract to any individual or corporation or firm which would not begin the work in ten years?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. But they give their bond. How can you prevent it?

Mr. LENTZ. And in the same connection another suggestion: I do not see, while I am willing to concede that we want another and a larger navy—I do not see the absolute necessity of it, and we are not going into an immediate renewal of the hostilities with Spain or with anybody else. I do not see the need of going pell mell into the construction of a new navy, therefore.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That question, of course, the gentleman must perceive is not involved here.

Mr. LENTZ. Of course I understand that. But I assume that we can take our own time to build our Navy, because it is not a matter of pressing or immediate importance, and I made the suggestion only because of the gentleman's own statement as to the length of time required to equip a private plant for this work.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. We can never tell how soon this work may be necessary.

Mr. LENTZ. But your argument seems to be based on the assumption that we are going into naval warfare at once.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Let me ask the gentleman if we not shipping soldiers abroad to-day?

Mr. LENTZ. Are we doing that in naval vessels?

A MEMBER. We do not ship them by the Navy.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It may be necessary to do so at some time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the question of order presented by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, does the Chair intend to rule on both points of order?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman desire to discuss the point of order of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. HOPKINS. No; but the point of order raised by myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will then dispose of that raised by the gentleman from Missouri first.

It will hardly be contended, it seems to the Chair, that the provision in the bill to which exception is made is not a legislative provision in the face of Rule XXI, and therefore, unless a foundation can be raised for it in some previous bill, it must be ruled out on the point of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri.

The contention that the provision of the bill of last year will maintain this provision is not well taken, for that provided only for adding certain torpedo boats and complying with certain provisions of law then in force.

The Chair, therefore, is constrained to sustain the point of order raised by the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, Mr. Chairman, the points which I desire to be heard upon, just for a moment only, will be found in lines 19, 20, 21, and 22, on page 59:

And not more than two of said battle ships, and not more than two of said armored cruisers, and not more than two of said protected cruisers, shall be built in one yard or by one contracting party.

I claim, if the Chair please, that that is a change of existing law. We, of course, have a general law that provides for the increase of the Navy, but we have no general law that provides that in the construction of the vessels of the Navy any one shipyard in the country can take a contract but for two vessels. Gentlemen in charge of the bill have stated that in a previous appropriation bill it was provided that—

Not more than two of said battle ships and not more than one of said armored defense vessels—shall be built in any one yard; but the Chair will note that the word "said" relates back to the vessels provided for in that particular appropriation bill, and that was not a change of existing law further than related to the vessels supposed to be constructed under that appropriation bill, leaving the general law exactly as it is now. So there is no general law making this limitation, and to my mind the ruling of the Chair just made, on the point made by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY], fits exactly the point made by myself on this clause.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the same reasoning applies to the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois as to that made by the gentleman from Missouri, and therefore sustains his point of order.

Mr. RIXEY. I offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

In line 11, page 59, after the word "each," strike out the following:

"And six protected cruisers of about 2,500 tons trial displacement, to be sheathed and coppered, and to have the highest speed compatible with good cruising qualities, great radius of action, and to carry the most powerful ordnance suited to vessels of their class, and to cost, exclusive of armament, not exceeding $1,141,500 each."

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, I shall detain the committee but a few minutes, but I should like to have the privilege of extending my remarks in the RECORD, and I now make that request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia that he may extend his remarks in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

Mr. RIXEY. Mr. Chairman, some weeks ago, in response to a communication, I wrote the following letter, as indicating my views in regard to the naval establishment:

I am in favor of making liberal provision for our Navy, as the surest and best guaranty for our protection against foreign aggression. This is equally true whether we confine our boundaries to their natural limits and abandon the imperial idea of foreign conquest and colonization, as I think should be done, or adopt the opposite course. A strong navy does not indicate that there is a necessity for a large standing army. On the contrary, it will minimize such necessity by providing such Regular Army as may be necessary to insure protection and peace within our borders.

I think the naval establishment should be our chief bulwark against danger to our extended coast, and for protection of our trade and commerce with foreign countries. A strong Navy does not necessarily mean, however, a great Navy in point of numbers, but rather a well-equipped, efficient establishment both in material and men.

Such a Navy we now have. It is the fourth in size of all of the powers of the world, Great Britain, France, and Russia alone outstripping us in this respect. I trust that the time will never come when we shall feel called upon to try to surpass all others in point of the number of the vessels of war and of the fighting force.

As a matter of fact, I doubt not our naval force is comparatively greater than that of Great Britain. Her colonies extend around the world. The sun, it is said, never sets upon her domain. Outside of her home territory she controls vast colonies in Europe, America, Asia, and Africa. Her dependencies in America alone are greater than the whole territory of the United States. She controls 381,937,374 inhabitants, and has never found her navy to be a source of weakness or of danger to her liberties. We can, therefore, deal generously by our Navy. More especially so, if for our land forces and home defense we continue to rely upon the State militia and our volunteers, thus fostering and encouraging the patriotism of our people.

The pending bill has received the careful consideration of the Committee on Naval Affairs, and while it carries a very large increase as compared with the appropriation bill for previous years, as explained by the chairman, it was in the main thought to be justified by the changed conditions by which we are now surrounded and which confront the country. But for the new foreign policy of acquisition at least one-half of the expenditure of the many millions which this bill will cause could be saved.

It is sad to contemplate that this is but one departure among many others, and, I regret to say, only the beginning of the larger and greater volume of expense which must necessarily follow from the acquisition and retention by force of far distant territory beyond the seas, inhabited by people foreign in race, religion, and customs to our own.

The special war revenue bill was passed to provide revenue for conducting the war with Spain, but is to be retained and continued for the purpose of subjugation and conquest after the close of the Spanish war.

The burdens of this colonial policy are not yet appreciated nor felt in their full force. Even now every man, woman, and child of the United States contributes in some way to the burden of this colonial policy; all who draw their own money out of bank upon a check have to contribute 2 cents to this policy.

Every farmer or laboring man who, not having the cash, sends an order to the store for a pound of sugar or a yard of cotton contributes 2 cents to this policy. Every employer who is unable at the end of the month or year to pay the balance due his employees and has to execute his duebill or note has to contribute to this colonial policy. Every person who borrows money and executes a mortgage to secure it must pay a tax upon the note or bond and mortgage in support of this foreign policy.

Every housekeeper who, for the family, buys a pound of tea contributes 10 cents to this policy, and so on with many other of the necessities of life. In some way every person in the United States is taxed for this foreign establishment; and, we are told, there is no hope in the near future of the repeal of any of the special taxes, but rather we will be fortunate if others are not imposed.

In addition to all of this, another bond issue looms up as one of the probabilities of the near future.

All this in a time of so-called "general prosperity." What will be our condition in the days of depression and adversity? "A prudent man foreseeth the evil and hideth himself; but the simple pass on and are punished."

What can we gain from the Philippine Islands to justify this assessment upon our citizens? Why should the people here—farmers, laborers, and mechanics—be taxed upon the necessities of life to subjugate, hold, or govern the Asiatic races? What are we to gain by it? If only those able to bear the increased tax could be reached, it would be less objectionable; but, as a matter of fact, this class escapes this taxation to a large extent, as no income tax is allowable under present conditions.

I was one of those who thought the treaty with Spain should be rejected, unless amended by the absolute elimination of the provision for taking the Philippine Islands.

Who now claims that we should take them because of services rendered us by the Filipinos? Many of our soldiers are slaughtered in battle. Many, very many, victims of the dread disease and millions of treasure expended in the effort to subjugate them. Of course we will be successful, but what must be the end? Our soldiers, if not killed in battle, will continue to die exposed to the deadly climate, while the people in the United States will continue to borrow money and pay taxes to support this ruinous policy.

It is perfectly apparent that all of this cry of good faith to the Filipinos and of manifest destiny is but a catchy excuse for persons who have no sound argument to advance. I have, however, but little hope or expectation that the American people will consent to let go the Philippine Islands, annexed by the treaty just ratified. It is human nature to hold by force what some one else desires to take from us by force. The expenditure of blood and money will be used, not only as justification for not parting with the islands, but rather as a reason for the extension of our possessions deeper into Asia. A horde of office seekers, army sycophants, and parasites will all dilate upon the necessity, and the imaginary glory to our flag, and benefits to our commerce.

Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty. Eternal, persistent effort will be necessary to restrain these people in their frenzied efforts to destroy our Government. I hold it to be true in morals as in law that the first duty of our Government is to the people within our borders who formed it and who maintain it.

Not so, however, with the expansionist. He is perfectly willing that the people here shall furnish the soldiers and the revenue, without the possibility of any benefit to them, for extending our jurisdiction farther into Asia and Africa.

The end is not yet, according to these people, and it is not, unless the patriotic people of the United States awake from their lethargy and hurl from power the people who have so falsely abused their trust and confidence and place in the councils of the country men pledged to a return to the principles of Washington and Monroe and the Jeffersonian principles of simplicity and economy.

But for the incorporation of the Philippine Islands the expenses made necessary by the pending naval bill would have been reduced one-half. It is our patriotic duty, however, to provide for the conditions as we find them to exist; at the same time it is our right to try to reduce or minimize these conditions for the future by removing the causes which make such expenses necessary.

I concur in the opinion of the Secretary of the Navy that but for the retention of the Philippine Islands it would not be necessary at this time to build a single battle ship; but, as we know not what complications with foreign powers, growing out of the retention of these islands, the future may have in store for us, it was thought the wiser policy to provide for the building of three battle ships of the largest and most powerful kind, 13,500 tons displacement, and of three armored cruisers of 12,000 tons displacement, which are almost as large and effective as the battle ship itself.

About thirty months are required in the building of a battle ship, and though we can not tell what will be the conditions which then surround us, it is proper to provide against the serious complications which, as the wisest of our people fear, will grow out of our new foreign policy.

The total estimated cost of these six heavy armored war vessels is $35,527,500, and while it is not all to be paid out of the appropriations for any one year, it must be paid. This estimate is based upon the cost of armor herein recommended of $545 per ton.

Surely such a large amount is a sufficient authorization for vessels for the Navy for one year. While for the reasons stated I feel compelled to go thus far, I do not consider that there are any such imperative reasons to justify the provision for the building of six third-class cruisers of 2,500 tons displacement, and in this respect I dissent from the opinion of the majority of the committee.

I have but little idea, however, that this amendment will prevail, not because of any lack of merit, but because, no matter how wild the proposition might be to build ships under present conditions, I think it would receive the favorable consideration of this House.

These six third-class armored cruisers can not be considered in any respect as battle ships. The Secretary of the Navy—

Mr. HILBORN. Has not the gentleman fallen into an error? These are not armored vessels; they are only protected.

Mr. RIXEY. They are cruisers.

Mr. HILBORN. But they are not armored vessels.

Mr. RIXEY. Here I have in my hand a statement from Commodore O'Neil, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, who, in estimating the cost of these cruisers, estimates for 56 tons of armor.

Mr. HILBORN. That is merely for the protected decks.

Mr. RIXEY. Perhaps that is so, but the point that I make about this is that these cruisers are at the present time absolutely unnecessary for the Navy.

They are estimated to cost $7,682,200. They are not vessels which would be effective in war. They would probably be ornamental in time of peace. Suitable, perhaps, for cruising and less expensive to maintain than battle ships or first-class cruisers. But have we not enough of such vessels? Before the war with Spain we had ample cruisers. We lost none in that war, but in addition purchased more than 100 vessels, of which the Assistant Secretary of the Navy says:

It may be remarked that this work was managed with the utmost care as regards selection of vessels for their strength and adaptability to naval uses, as well as with respect to the price paid. . . . What I wish to emphasize especially is the fact that no vessel was purchased until after it had been thoroughly inspected and had been pronounced thoroughly satisfactory by officers whose professional training made them experts.

The Secretary of the Navy, in his Annual Report, says:

One hundred and twenty-one auxiliary vessels and 14 regular vessels received batteries and complete ordnance outfits at the various navy-yards.

Many of these vessels cost us as much as the cruisers. The Secretary of the Navy reports that the vessels purchased have been provided with batteries and ordnance, and are especially suited to the needs of the Navy. Can we not, should we not, make use of some of these vessels, if such are needed? It is estimated, besides the cost of building, that it takes $1,000 per day to keep a battle ship in commission and only about $200 per day for one of these third-class cruisers. If the cruiser would take the place of the battle ship, of course it would be better to have it and omit the battle ship; but such is not the case. Because we are forced to have the battle ship is no reason of itself for building the third-class cruiser also.

Painstaking and careful consideration I know has been bestowed upon the provisions of this bill; and while, as a member of the committee, I was opposed to the provision allowing contracts to be made for armor plate at $545 per ton, upon the ground that there was no evidence before the committee to justify the payment of that amount, still I am unwilling to deprive the chairman of the committee of the opportunity to present to this House any evidence he may have to show that that is a proper provision. I am therefore willing that the letter which the chairman of the committee now has, and which he says he has obtained from the Navy Department, may be read in my time. Does the gentleman desire to have that letter read?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia requests the gentleman from Maine to have a letter read in his time.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; I do not propose to do that. I think I will have an opportunity some time as chairman of the committee to read this letter. If not, it will not be read.

Mr. RIXEY. Then what I have to say will be based upon the testimony as I understood it before the Naval Committee.

Under the present law armor plate is purchased by this Government at a price not exceeding $400 per ton. Under the provision in the bill it is to be purchased at a price not exceeding $545 per ton. It takes 3,100 tons of armor for a single battle ship of the first class. The difference, therefore, between $400 a ton and $545 a ton for this amount of armor is $449,500 in the construction of a single battle ship.

Mr. SMITH of Kentucky. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him for a single question? You figure on the difference in price, as I understand, for a ton of the new process of armor and the old harveyized armor. But it has been suggested that a ton by the new process will go very much further, being lighter, than a ton made according to the old process.

Mr. RIXEY. I will come to that in a moment, if the gentleman will permit me to proceed. I will state now, in this connection, that there is no evidence before the committee as to that fact. It has been suggested, I know. The contention, as I understand it, before the committee was that the use of the new process and of the same weight would offer much greater resistance. That I understand to be the claim. But there was no evidence before the committee that the proposed armor would cost a cent more to the manufacturers than the harveyized armor plate heretofore used.

Mr. DAYTON. Now, if my colleague will allow me, is it not a fact that we have an experimental station to test this armor plate, and to determine matters of this kind, at Indian Head? And is it not also a fact that, in accordance with certain tests made there, Commodore O'Neil has made the statement that the armor according to the new process tested there was found to be 25 per cent stronger than the old armor plate? Can you find better evidence upon which to act than that?

Mr. RIXEY. The statement, as I understand it, was that the new armor of the same weight would offer greater resistance.

Mr. DAYTON. But did he not state that he had been present from the beginning to the conclusion of the tests, and that originally he was opposed to the use of the new armor plate, but was convinced by witnessing the tests that it was 25 per cent stronger, weights being equal, than the other? Is that not good evidence, I ask the gentleman?

Mr. RIXEY. The gentleman must not misunderstand me. I am not objecting to the provision for getting the very best armor that the Government can procure, whether it be the Krupp system or the harveyized system. The only point I make is that, unless the proposed armor—the Krupp armor—costs the manufacturer more than the harveyized plate, we ought not to pay more for it. [Applause on the Democratic side.] And there is no evidence to justify the conclusion that it costs a single solitary cent more.

The testimony of Commodore O'Neil, to which reference has been made during this debate, was as to the relative cost of the two kinds, merely his opinion, as he stated he had no means of ascertaining the cost of the armor, but he gave his opinion that the new armor did not cost any more than the other.

Mr. HILBORN. The gentleman is mistaken about that.

Mr. DAYTON. I hope the gentleman from Virginia will not allow that remark to go into the RECORD before revision.

Mr. RIXEY. I will put the exact statement in the RECORD. There is no question as to what was said by him on that point.

Mr. DAYTON. Allow me to state that in substance his language was that nobody knew the cost of the manufacture, because it was to the interest of the manufacturers to keep it secret; that it was a secret process, and that the manufacturers would not be foolish enough to give it away.

Mr. RIXEY. I have already stated that he gave simply his opinion with reference to the matter. I repeat that we have no evidence before us as to the actual cost of the armor.

I take it that it is a duty on the part of the manufacturer, when he comes to demand an advance of $145 a ton on the price heretofore received, that he shall give some valid reason for the increase. Now, the cost of $400 a ton, when the matter was investigated some years ago by the Secretary of the Navy, was decided upon as the limit which should be paid.

Under an act of Congress providing for the investigation, he reported that the "cost of the labor and material in a ton of double-forged nickel-steel harveyized armor, including allowances for losses in manufacture, is $197.78, which comprises every element of cost in its manufacture save and except only the maintenance of plant."

He then allowed 10 per cent on $1,500,000, the value of the plant, or $150,000, which, apportioned among 3,000 tons of armor, would be a cost per ton of $50; a total of $247.78 for cost of labor and material and value of plant, or, in round numbers, $250 as the cost of a ton of armor when the companies have fair orders for work.

Fifty per cent is then added for profit, $125; to this is added for nickel, $20; making the total cost of manufacture and profit $395, or, in round numbers, $400 per ton.

I believe such a price is excessive, certainly the proposed price, $545, is exorbitant. Perhaps if there were some vital necessity, some overpowering necessity upon us, we should be compelled to stand and deliver just as an innocent victim of some highway robber may be unable to defend himself; but there is no such critical emergency, and I therefore refuse thus to be fleeced. This armor-plate trust is one of the greatest monopolies of the country.

But two companies in this country make it—the Bethlehem and the Carnegie—and they have a complete monopoly and divide between them the contracts of the Government. It is no wonder that an armor-plate magnate is able to donate hundreds of thousands of dollars to public libraries throughout the country.

The steel armor plate heretofore furnished, and now contracted for, is what is known as the harveyized steel, because hardened under what is known as the Harvey process. This was considered the best up to a recent period. Now, however, it is insisted that what is known as the Krupp process, or Krupp's armor, is the best. It is now recommended by that very capable and efficient officer, Commodore O'Neil, Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance.

It is worthy of note, however, that Commodore O'Neil is himself a recent convert to the excellence of the Krupp armor. He says that as late as 1898 he gave it as his opinion before the Senate Committee on Naval Affairs that the harveyized steel was the superior. He does not contend that the Krupp armor is the most costly to manufacturers; on the contrary, I understand he does not think that it is. He says they, the manufacturers, argue in this way: "If the harveyized armor is worth $400 and the Krupp is 25 per cent better, then it is worth $500, besides the royalty of $45." This argument is not sound, and could only be effective in the hands of a monopoly.

The world by reason of the advancement in science, machinery, and knowledge, is continually improving the quality of the material, and at the same time reducing the cost of the article produced; but monopoly works by the opposite rule. But one guide measures its conscience, and that is what will the necessities of its consumers justify it in extorting. If the question of cost enters at all, it is of the smallest consideration.

I understand that the Krupp plan is not patented, but is claimed to be a secret. Strange, if true, that the armor-plate men do not know it. If, for the privilege of using it, the manufacturer has to pay $45 per ton, why should he charge an additional $100 per ton? There is no evidence that I have seen or heard of which justifies us in believing that it costs the manufacturer one cent more than the plate now used by the Government. I can not, therefore, concur in the authorization to the Secretary of the Navy to contract for this armor at $545 per ton. At the proper time I shall offer an amendment limiting this to $400 per ton exclusive of royalty.

This is the price we are paying for the harveyized armor, and no one doubts that it is exorbitant. Thirty-one hundred tons of armor is required for a single battle ship.

At $500 per ton the cost would be .....	$1,550,000
At $400 per ton the cost would be .....	1,240,000

A difference for each battle ship, exclusive of the royalty, of ..... 310,000

We can thus readily understand why the steel-armor plants insist on this increase. An advance of $100 per ton is $310,000 in their pocket for each battle ship. Ten thousand tons of armor are about to be contracted for. If this price is retained in the bill at $100, this is a donation of $1,000,000 to this monopoly. Shall we pay it without some assurance that it is reasonable?

Let this monopoly understand that we will not pay over $400 per ton; that we now have five battle ships complete, and eight building; that the battle ships and cruisers herein provided for can wait another year, and will do so if they persist in their demands for $545 per ton, and doubtless the armor will be furnished at the present price; but if not, we can wait, and I am in favor of doing so rather than submit to such demands. It is such conduct as this that is building up a sentiment in favor of Government control; that drove the Government to build its smokeless-powder factory, and unless curbed may force the Government to build its own armor-plate factory from which to supply itself with its steel armor, as it is prepared to do with its guns, ships, and powder.

I am not, per se, an advocate of Government ownership and conduct of business enterprises, but I am still less an advocate of the Government, or individuals, being victimized by giant monopolies. Self-preservation, self-protection against grinding and excessive demands will justify the Government, in my opinion, in providing its own plant for an armor-plate factory and the manufacture of so much armor as it needs for its own ships.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. MITCHELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, who also announced that the President had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

- On February 11, 1899:
H. R. 12009. An act to provide for the removal of snow and ice in the city of Washington, in the District of Columbia.
- On February 14, 1899:
H. R. 10563. An act to provide for the holding of terms of the district and circuit courts of the United States at Hammond, Ind.
- On February 15, 1899:
H. R. 375. An act to remove the charge of desertion standing against Dennis Fitzpatrick;
H. R. 886. An act for the relief of Charles T. Plunkett, of Lynchburg, Va.; and
H. R. 10398. An act providing for the entry, free of customs duties, of certain bells presented by Edwin M. Stanton to the Iowa Agricultural College, of Ames, Iowa.
- On February 18, 1899:
H. R. 11143. An act granting to the mayor of the city of Victor, in the county of El Paso and State of Colorado, the right to enter certain lands, therein described, for city purposes;
H. R. 6718. An act for the relief of Samuel Racey;
H. R. 8336. An act to correct the military record of William D. Kurfiss;
- H. R. 26. An act for the establishment of a light and fog signal station on or near Hog Island Shoal, Narragansett Bay, Rhode Island; and
H. R. 5019. An act for a light vessel off Tail of Horse Shoe, Chesapeake Bay.
- On February 20, 1899:
H. R. 11440. An act to locate the office of the deputy collector of the port of East Pascagoula, Miss., at Scranton, Miss.;
H. R. 10281. An act authorizing the Light-House Board to provide a steam whistle at Michigan City, Ind.;
H. R. 599. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay the sum of $400 to The Brownell & Co., Dayton, Ohio, on account of penalty erroneously imposed by the Light-House Board;
- On February 21, 1899:
H. R. 2683. An act for the establishment of a light-house and fog signal at or near Point Arguello, California;
H. R. 4382. An act to amend section 3237 of the Revised Statutes of the United States concerning the drawing off, gauging, marking, and removal of spirits;
H. R. 11358. An act for a roadway in the District of Columbia from Brightwood avenue across Rock Creek Park; and
H. R. 11098. An act to extend and amend the provisions of an act entitled "An act to grant the right of way to the Kansas, Oklahoma Central and Southwestern Railway Company through the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes," approved December 21, 1893, and also to extend and amend the provisions of a supplemental act approved February 15, 1897, entitled "An act to extend and amend an act entitled 'An act to grant the right of way to the Kansas, Oklahoma Central and Southwestern Railway Company through the Indian Territory and Oklahoma Territory, and for other purposes.'"

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move to strike out the last word.

The committee in framing these recommendations were very careful in seeking to obtain from all possible sources the best information as to the needs of the service and the feeling of the people at large as to what should be done. We have conscientiously attempted to make our recommendations along the line of the best judgment of the best authorities in the country.

This recommendation for 3 first-class battle ships, 3 large armored cruisers, and 6 protected cruisers of moderate size is taken from the annual report of the Secretary of the Navy, where his recommendation is made verbatim in the language of the recommendation made to him by the board of officers intrusted with the duty of recommending future construction—the board of construction—and is by 6 vessels less than were recommended by the Secretary. In addition to the 3 battle ships and the 3 armored cruisers, the Secretary recommended 3 cruisers of about 6,000 tons, which are about the Baltimore and Philadelphia class, and then 6 protected cruisers of about 2,500 tons, which are recommended to the committee as among the most useful and most economical vessels we have.

It will be readily understood that in a large portion of the service where it is absolutely necessary to have our flag afloat the necessity at all times of carrying a heavy battery to the station is not nearly so great; and one of these vessels of 2,500 tons will perform the duty just as well and more economically than a vessel of the Baltimore or the Philadelphia class, which are very much heavier; and it involves, of course, a very great deal of expense to the Government to maintain those ships. It has been considered economical to provide six vessels of that kind. That has been thought wise, and especially are they recommended by the Secretary of the Navy. Owing to recent circumstances which have extended the area of naval cruising and the necessity of the presence of the naval vessels, perhaps small, but representing the flag, and with a battery in the territories and remaining there at a port, it would be necessary in case of a collision to have a battery of a small nominal size.

They are considered much more economical than vessels of a larger class, which were also recommended. We concluded that wise economy would be best served by leaving off the vessels of the 6,000-ton class and providing six of these vessels of more moderate size. I hope that the Committee of the Whole House will sustain the Committee on Naval Affairs in its recommendation, which every member of the Naval Committee, and I am sure most of the members of the House, will very frankly admit is an exceedingly modest one in comparison with the general expressions that have been flying through the air in the summer, fall, and winter in reference to the carrying on and building up of our Navy upon which we relied so successfully last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the yeas appeared to have it.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Division, Mr. Chairman.

The committee divided; and there were—yeas 16, noes 76.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment on behalf of my colleague, Mr. BROWNE, who has left the city.

Amend by adding, at the end of line 22, page 60, the following:

"That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized to bestow upon any one of the vessels, the construction of which has been authorized in this bill, the name of The American Boy."

"That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be received and placed in the Treasury of the United States as a special fund, to be applied to the construction of said vessel, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, any and all contributions of money which may be tendered to him for the purpose of defraying the expenses thereof, the said contributions to be in addition to any amount that has been or may hereafter be appropriated for the construction of naval vessels."

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Ohio anything to say on the point of order?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think I will not detain the House. There seem to be plenty of other subjects for discussion.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

Armor and armament: Toward the armament and armor of domestic manufacture for the vessels authorized by the act of July 26, 1894, of the vessels authorized under the act of March 2, 1895, of those authorized by the act of June 10, 1896, of those authorized by the act of March 3, 1897, of those authorized by the act of May 4, 1898, and of those authorized by this act, $4,000,000. In all future contracts for armor for any of the vessels above mentioned, the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to procure armor of the best obtainable quality at an average cost not exceeding $545 a ton of 2,240 pounds, including all royalties.

Several members rose.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman from Illinois rise?

Mr. HOPKINS. I rise for the purpose of making a point of order against a part of that section.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman state the point of order?

Mr. HOPKINS. It is a change of existing law where it directs and authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to procure a certain kind of armor plate.

The CHAIRMAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois designate by lines and words the portion of the paragraph against which the point of order is made?

Mr. HOPKINS. If it is agreeable to the Chair, I will reserve the point of order at the request of gentlemen around me and hear the discussion.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I think that would be desirable, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be heard on the question of limitation, the question of the point of order made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

The CHAIRMAN. Until the gentleman from Illinois designates by lines and words the provision against which he makes the point of order—

Mr. HOPKINS. While the chairman of the Naval Committee is explaining the paragraph, I will mark and send to the Chair the words against which I raised the point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have an amendment, Mr. Chairman, which I wish to offer.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I desire to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not care to hear any remarks on the point of order until he knows what it is. The Chair will wait until the gentleman from Illinois designates that portion of the paragraph against which he raises the point of order.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, what is before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The naval appropriation bill. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes; but what is the question before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois raises a point of order.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have marked and sent to the desk the provision against which I reserve the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois raises the point of order against all of the provision beginning on line 13 and down to and including line 17, on page 61.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry. Having made a motion to strike out the whole paragraph, I submit to the Chair whether or not a motion to strike out the whole paragraph does not take precedence?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington has made no such motion, for he has not been recognized by the Chair for that purpose.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Well, Mr. Chairman, it may be true that the gentleman from Washington was not recognized, although I spoke the motion. Not having been recognized, I agree with the Chair that my parliamentary inquiry is not in order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. There will be a time when the gentleman's motion will be in order.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the Clerk read the provision against which the point is made.

The Clerk read as follows:

In all future contracts for armor for any of the vessels above mentioned the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to procure armor of the best obtainable quality at an average cost not exceeding $545 a ton of 2,240 pounds, including all royalties.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I do not see how that is subject to a point of order.

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, on what ground is the point of order made?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois will state the ground.

Mr. HOPKINS. It is a violation of section 2 of Rule XXI.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine will proceed.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, it has been held in this House time out of mind that a naval appropriation bill can carry, as germane to its purpose and provisions, appropriations that are essential for carrying on the functions of the Navy, which are referred, under the annual President's message, to the Committee on Naval Affairs; that whatever is proper and necessary to the maintenance of the naval establishment and the provisioning and caring for the Navy is legitimate legislation upon the naval appropriation bill. That has been held repeatedly, until it has become the fixed policy of Congress. It has been reaffirmed time after time.

The point of order has been repeatedly made against appropriations providing for new ships under the head of "Increase of the Navy" that it changed existing law, that it was new legislation upon appropriation bills, and the point of order has been invariably ruled out. The House has established as emphatically as any proposition in regard to the administration of its rules of which I am aware its determination and its interpretation that a provision for the construction of new ships is a legitimate function of the maintenance of the naval establishment, and that it is germane as legislation, and must be germane, upon an appropriation bill that was made for no other purpose than to provide a navy.

I hold that it is clearly a proper exercise of the function of the House, and that if that paragraph is obnoxious to the point that it is new legislation, then every word of that bill is obnoxious to the same point. If the fact that the provision in the bill is different from that which previous bills have hitherto made makes it obnoxious to the point that it is new legislation, then every provision in the bill is obnoxious for the same reason. It is simply putting a limitation upon the appropriation of this money which is perfectly legitimate and does not, in my judgment, affect in any way the germaneness of the proposition.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, by a ruling made in the Fifty-first Congress it was held that it was within the power of the House to prescribe the manner in which an appropriation should be expended. The ruling was made under these circumstances: To a proposition to give relief to foreign countries an amendment was offered prescribing that the money be distributed indiscriminately among certain classes of people. The point of order being raised, it was held by the Chair that legislation prescribing the manner of expending the money was legitimate.

There has been a subsequent ruling in the House adverse to that. In view of these discordant rulings, there is room for doubt upon the parliamentary point; and under the circumstances I have this to urge: I think this provision is pernicious and ought to go out of the bill because it will give birth to scandals and crimes.

Mr. Chairman, I hold that in no instance has absolute disgrace been so marked as in the era during our late war, when, without competition or the opportunity for competition by bids, this Government was literally held up as one might be held up by brigands or roadway assassins and compelled to pay the most fabulous prices for pleasure yachts owned by gentlemen who no longer felt daring enough to cruise the seas because of the fear of Spanish privateers. [Laughter.] In an hour of supreme national danger those gentlemen, prating of their honor and loyalty, tendered their private pleasure yachts to the Government for sums far in excess of the cost of building them or of their actual worth, having had many years of use. [Applause.]

It was upon the heels of these transactions that we witnessed the spectacle of certain armor-plate companies of the United States meeting in the outer office of the Secretary of the Navy and there, by specious manipulation of bids, arranging that a price should be fixed absolutely, so that the Government must either accept the armor plate at that price or be driven to the alternative of having no armor plate at all.

The pending provision contemplates the doing away of the heretofore existing provision of law which called for competitive bids from competitive manufacturers, which gave a stimulus to genius to compete with genius, which gave an opportunity for manufacturer to compete with manufacturer, which enabled the Government to avail itself of the privilege of choosing among the different commodities offered, basing its preference either upon price or material. All this is done away with, and the whole matter is specifically put within the unguarded discretion of a ministerial officer for all the future—a provision unlimited in time as well as subject-matter, leaving it solely to this officer, supervised and controlled by no one. He is alone to choose with whom he will deal and what he shall choose, fixing only a minimum limit of price. Here is the language of the provision:

In all future contracts for armor for any of the vessels above mentioned the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to procure armor of the best obtainable quality at an average cost not exceeding $545 a ton of 2,240 pounds, including all royalties.

In other words, the provision is not that the Secretary of the Navy shall obtain the best armor plate nor that he shall only accept armor plate not exceeding in price the sum of $545 a ton, but that he shall "procure armor of the best obtainable quality at an average cost not exceeding $545 a ton." Under this provision, the construction of which is left to the discretion of the Secretary of the Navy, if, by reason of the machinations of the specious lot of gentlemen who have of late been engaged in pillaging the Government under the guise of loyalty, it should be impossible to obtain the best armor for that price, and if the best obtainable at that figure should be the very worst of armor, then the Secretary of the Navy will have the discretion, upon the announcement of that fact, to assert his right to pay a higher sum, without limit upon his discretion, for the "best" armor, upon the ground that this limitation covers only the best armor obtainable for the specified sum.

The man who drew that provision was a skillful draftsman. Whether this matter has heretofore been called to the attention of the committee or not, they must concede, now that the matter is pressed upon them, that the provision bears this construction and that unless properly amended now may result in great danger and injustice to this Government. Mr. Chairman and gentleman, either this provision should be radically amended or completely stricken out, as I now move ore tenus, or if a point of order can be sustained, let it be stricken out upon such point.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Will the gentleman from Washington allow me to interrupt him with a question for information? Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I yield to the gentleman with pleasure.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Is it your contention that under the provision in question it is simply provided that the Secretary of the Navy is to obtain the best armor plate available for the price fixed?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. My contention is, if the gentleman will permit me, that this is a direction that the Secretary of the Navy—at least, I so construe it—shall obtain the best armor plate obtainable for the price fixed.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, there is no such meaning to be applied to the provision, and I do not see how language can be distorted to infer that such is the meaning.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Of course, I am not responsible for the understanding of the gentleman from Maine. We may differ, as other gentlemen differ, on the floor of the House, but I do not see why the gentleman should become so indignant about it. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am not indignant.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. The gentleman has expressed himself in a forcible manner. [Laughter.]

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Let me ask the gentleman from Washington further, if this provision does not mean simply that the Secretary shall procure the armor plate of the best quality—in other words that he shall procure the best armor he is able to obtain—and that for the armor so obtained he is authorized only to pay a certain price?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Why, of course.

Mr. CUMMINGS. That he shall not pay exceeding that sum.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I am not able to agree, I regret, with my friends from Nebraska and New York. I hold that under the provision in question the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, and so far as it limits that discretion, is to obtain the best armor that he is able to obtain for the sum of money provided in the bill. It must mean that; it can mean nothing else. That is to say, it is a provision, or a limitation, that the armor plate necessary for the uses of the Government shall be obtained, if obtainable, only at the sum fixed in the bill. In other words, the language is indefinite and obscure.

I hold that a proper construction of the language embodied in this provision will justify the Secretary of the Navy in the conclusion that he is limited only and directed solely to obtain the best armor plate desirable for the Navy at the sum of money named in the bill; and when he reports in the ordinary course of business that in the exercise of his discretion he can not obtain the armor plate for the sum fixed, then he has unlimited discretion, under the provisions of the preceding paragraph in the bill, to pay any sum that he sees fit to pay in order to secure the armor plate.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Oh, not at all.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Now, my distinguished friends on the Committee on Naval Affairs and the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs, for whose judgment I have the very highest respect, take issue with me upon this point, and claim that the language has no such meaning. But the fact that they differ in the construction is evidence of the necessity for a change in the phraseology or the elimination of the paragraph.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It does nothing whatever of the kind. But of course I could not expect the gentleman from Washington to accept a reasonable interpretation of the provision.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Of course, Mr. Chairman, no one ever expected the gentleman from Maine to recognize an interpretation that is either wise or reasonable. I said that some wise men differed. I did not say the gentleman from Maine. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is entirely satisfactory to me. I wanted the gentleman from Washington to have the opportunity of passing that bouquet. [Laughter.]

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I appreciate the gentleman's courtesy. There is no one who could so gracefully bear it as my friend from Maine. He is the very burst of the bloom itself. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I must insist that this is all very nice, but it does not give us any light on the point of order pending.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, if I had the power of the X-rays or the flash light of one of our modern ships combined, it would not enable me to throw any light upon the murky mental recesses of the gentleman from New York. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The whole discussion, the Chair will state, is within the discretion of the Chair.

The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order and is quite satisfied with its conclusion.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I find, Mr. Chairman, a great deal of satisfaction, and I felicitate myself that my argument has produced that result. [Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, rather than to rule, desires to make a suggestion. It seems to the Chair perfectly clear that it is in order to put a limitation upon the appropriation contained in this bill only; but this appropriation provides:

Toward the armament and armor—and so forth, indicating that it is expected that a future appropriation must be necessary in order to complete this armament. And in reference to this future appropriation, it is not proper to put a limitation in this bill.

The Chair suggests that if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] would withdraw his point of order the wording might be changed, so that, in line 12, the words "all future" be stricken out, and after the word "armor," in line 13, the words "herein appropriated for" be inserted, and that would bring the provision where it would not be obnoxious to the rule. It would be a limitation upon the appropriation and would be admissible under the rule.

Mr. HOPKINS. I will state to the Chair that ordinarily I would follow the suggestion of the Chair upon that, but the Chair will remember that for a number of years there has been a good deal of controversy in this House and in the Senate as to the amount per ton that should be paid for armor plate. This House directed this committee, on two previous occasions, to limit the amount, and the Secretary of the Navy has made contracts for armor at $400 per ton.

Now they come in here with a new wording, and provide for $545 a ton "on an average." That takes in all kinds of armor plate, at $545 a ton, or $145 a ton more than the Secretary has already contracted for on three of our vessels, and more, in my judgment, than this Congress ought to allow. For that reason I made the point of order, and for that reason I am constrained to insist upon it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I will state to the Chair that the committee, upon the suggestion of men wiser than myself—

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Impossible! [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Illinois declines to withdraw his point of order, the Chair, for the reasons that he has stated, will sustain the point of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move to amend by inserting in lieu of the language stricken out on the point of order, the following, which meets the suggestion of the Chair—

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended except in procuring armor of the best obtainable quality at an average cost not exceeding $545 a ton of 2,240 pounds, including royalties.

Mr. HOPKINS. I make the point of order against that for the time being, and desire to know of the gentleman in charge of this bill if these previous acts, where the amount was limited by Congress to $400 per ton, cover any vessels which are appropriated for in this provision?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am not absolutely sure. I think not. I think the only vessels to which it would apply are the last battle ships appropriated for and those provided for in this bill.

Mr. BUTLER. The armor has been contracted for and is under construction.

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman, contracts are let for all of the battle ships, except the three of the Maine class and the four harbor-defense vessels provided for last year.

Mr. SOUTHARD. Provided for last year?

Mr. HILBORN. Provided for last year.

Mr. HOPKINS. But that does not meet the inquiry. This refers to six different acts, for it says:

For the vessels authorized by the act of July 26, 1894, of the vessels authorized under the act of March 2, 1895, of those authorized by the act of June 10, 1896, of those authorized by the act of March 3, 1897, of those authorized by the act of May 4, 1898, and of those authorized by this act, $4,000,000.

The Chair will remember that in the later appropriations Congress limited the amount that should be paid per ton for armor plate, and this $545 is a change of that law, changing it from $400 per ton to $545, which clearly comes within the objections raised under section 2 of Rule XXI.

Mr. DAYTON. Let me suggest to the gentleman that the amendment be withdrawn and that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the Chair permit me for a moment? The Chair will remember that in the previous bill the House fixed the limitation at $300 per ton. The Senate, after debate, fixed it at $400 per ton, and the conferees agreed to $400 per ton, and that was the amount fixed in the appropriation bill. Now, it is suggested to me by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] that the language at that time was of a general nature; that it provided that hereafter armor plate should only be contracted for at $400 per ton.

Now, if that is correct, then my point of order is well taken that this is a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will be compelled to await the production of the law of last year. Has the gentleman from Illinois the last year's statute in his hand?

Mr. HOPKINS. I will get it. The gentleman from Maine, I understand, desires to make a motion that the committee rise, and I will yield the floor for that reason.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If I can have the attention of the committee for a moment, I desire to say we have reached a point in this bill of very great importance, over which there seems to be a great deal of controversy. The committee have acted with great deliberation and upon authority that we deemed very reliable. We believe that this matter when properly presented to the House will carry with it an indorsement of what the committee has done; but it is manifest it is a subject of great interest. These various points of order that have been raised are likely to throw the matter in some confusion, and it ought to be carefully and very deliberately considered.

Therefore I think it wise, as chairman of the committee, desiring to have this acted upon calmly and intelligently, to present documents here. We have got to bring evidence here, we have got to discuss the different phases of this question to satisfy the House of the reasons that prompted us to bring the matter before the consideration of the House. The suggestion as to limitation that is attempted here is not new. We have met and surmounted that question before, and there is nothing new about it. We have got to explain this matter, and we want to do this with perfect frankness, and I trust the gentleman from Illinois, too, desires very careful consideration.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Before the gentleman moves that the committee rise, I would like to ask him if there is anything printed in his report or any other publication about this increase for armor plate? I understand this increase of $145 a ton for armor plate over what we paid last year is by reason of some new process. Now, I want to know whether the committee has published any document or made any published statement showing their reasons for bringing in that recommendation?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. We have made no publication whatever.

Mr. CUMMINGS. It is not $145.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is an increase of $145.

Mr. CUMMINGS. We paid a royalty on $400, and we pay no royalty on this.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This is $545, and the other was $400.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. For the very reason that gentlemen are going to be at cross-purposes on the details of that question, I think it proper to have the committee rise and take this matter up and discuss it to the satisfaction of gentlemen to-morrow.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to look into the matter to-night.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 6551) withdrawing from entry and sale and granting unto the State of Wisconsin certain lands therein described.

The message also announced that the Senate had disagreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5260) to amend an act entitled "An act to reimburse the governors of the States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise and organize and supply and equip the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain," approved July 8, 1898, and for other purposes, asked a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WARREN, Mr. CARTER, and Mr. MITCHELL as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendment a joint resolution of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. Res. 358. Joint resolution to amend section 25 of the act passed June 13, 1898, entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 3425) for the relief of George A. Dickel & Co., at Nashville, Tenn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. R. 252. Joint resolution to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in the District of Columbia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 11683) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

ANNUAL REPORTS OF CONSULAR OFFICERS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message of the President of the United States, which was read, and referred to the Committee on Printing:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a communication from the Secretary of State, accompanying the Commercial Relations of the United States for the year 1898, being the annual reports of the consular officers upon the industries and commerce of foreign countries. In view of the value of these reports to the manufacturing and exporting interests of the country, I indorse the recommendation of the Secretary of State that Congress authorize the printing of the usual editions of 10,000 copies of the general summary, entitled "Review of the World's Commerce," and of 5,000 copies of Commercial Relations (including this summary), to enable the Department of State to meet the demand for such information.

WILLIAM MCKINLEY.

EXECUTIVE MANSION,
Washington, February 21, 1899.

RELIGIOUS SERVICE IN MEMORY OF THE LATE PRESIDENT OF THE FRENCH REPUBLIC.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communication from the Secretary of State:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 21, 1899.

SIR: I have the honor to advise you, for the information of the House of Representatives, that a religious service in memory of the late President of the French Republic will be held at St. Matthew's Church, Rhode Island avenue between Seventeenth street and Connecticut avenue, on Thursday, the 23d instant, at 11 o'clock a. m.

By request of the chargé d'affaires of France, the attendance of the members of the House of Representatives is respectfully invited.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN HAY.

Hon. THOMAS B. REED,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PASADENA AND MOUNT WILSON RAILWAY COMPANY.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following request of the Senate; which was considered, and agreed to:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 19, 1899.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 5446) to grant to the Pasadena and Mount Wilson Railway Company right of way and certain lands for railroad purposes through the San Gabriel Forest Reserve.

FRANCIS SCOTT.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following request of the Senate; which was considered, and agreed to:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 18, 1899.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (S. 1649) granting an increase of pension to Francis Scott.

NAVAL PERSONNEL BILL.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following requests of the Senate; which were considered, and the latter one agreed to:

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 20, 1899.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 10403) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States.

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES, February 20, 1899.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate its message recalling the bill (H. R. 10403) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States.

REIMBURSEMENT OF STATES FOR AID IN WAR WITH SPAIN.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the bill (S. 5260) to amend an act entitled "An act to reimburse the governors of States and Territories for expenses incurred by them in aiding the United States to raise organizations and supply the Volunteer Army of the United States in the existing war with Spain," approved July 8, 1898, and for other purposes, with House amendments.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House insist on its amendments and agree to a conference.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. MAHON, Mr. OTJEN, and Mr. COOPER of Texas.

SPREAD OF CONTAGIOUS DISEASES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I desire unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate joint resolution on the spread of contagious diseases; and in that connection I send up a letter from the District Commissioners to explain it.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I move that we now adjourn.

Mr. CANNON. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will not insist on that motion.

Mr. CALLAHAN. I hope the gentleman from Mississippi will withdraw the motion.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. Well, I withdraw it.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution No. 253, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated, to be immediately available, one half out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated and one half out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, to enable the Commissioners of said District to provide for the proper care of smallpox patients and to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in said District, including a house-to-house inspection, and such compulsory vaccination as may be deemed necessary by the health officer of said District in accordance with existing law, and for other extraordinary emergencies.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I would like to inquire if the resolution can not pass over until to-morrow?

Mr. CANNON. If my friend from Indiana will hear the letter from the District Commissioners read, I think he will be more anxious than I am to have it disposed of now. If it be true that there are hundreds of cases of smallpox about the city, he will be extremely desirous that the matter should be disposed of now.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Does the gentleman think it ought to be met by the public Treasury?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly; half from the District and half from the United States Treasury.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I have been informed within the last few days that the taxes in this city are higher than any other city in the United States. If you go on in this way, I do not wonder at it.

Mr. CANNON. I do not think they are; but let that be as it may, the smallpox does not have much regard for taxes.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I am sorry to say that some people are much like the smallpox.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, and yet some people are exempt from the smallpox. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read the letter from the District Commissioners, as follows:

EXECUTIVE OFFICE COMMISSIONERS DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, February 20, 1899.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners of the District of Columbia have the honor to inclose herewith the draft of a joint resolution, with the request that the same be introduced into the House, and that you will endeavor to secure its early passage in order that proper steps may be taken to prevent the spread of smallpox, the existence of which is now in the city and which the Commissioners have every reason to believe is likely to increase rapidly if heroic steps are not taken to stamp it out.

From careful investigation of the whole situation the health officer reports to the Commissioners that there is grave apprehension of a spread of this disease in the community, owing largely to the fact that those persons already confined in the smallpox hospital are known to have been in close contact with others in thickly populated buildings and portions of the city. It would be the greatest possible misfortune if this disease should be scattered throughout the city at any time, but especially so at this time, when so many officials and strangers are here incident to the meetings of Congress. The health and lives of the President and his Cabinet and of officials of all degrees, as well as of members of Congress and the residents, make it essentially important that nothing should be left undone to eradicate the trouble at the earliest possible moment.

The appropriation asked for is for the employment of the necessary physicians, watchmen to guard quarantined premises, food and fuel for such cases as may need it in quarantined houses, and for the maintenance of the smallpox hospital. The hospital itself has accommodations for about forty patients, and is about half full. Should it be necessary to accommodate more than this number, the Commissioners would be obliged to erect a frame structure for the use of the additional patients. This expense would be met from the amount asked for in this resolution.

In the city of Alexandria, only 8 miles from Washington, there are reported to-day 212 cases in a population of 18,000.

The discovery of cases of smallpox among the inmates of the workhouse of the Washington Asylum has rendered it impossible to commit any more prisoners to that building. It has also been deemed inexpedient to permit the guards and other employees of the asylum grounds to leave the said premises until the period shall have passed during which any possible contagion may be developed. The duty has, therefore, been devolved upon the Commissioners to provide some other building for the detention of prisoners sentenced by the police court during the time that such prisoners can not be safely sent to the workhouse.

The female workhouse of the Washington Asylum is situated a sufficient distance from the male workhouse to avoid any danger of contagion therefrom.

The Commissioners have ascertained that certain changes can be made in the female workhouse building by the erection of partitions, etc., which will enable them to accommodate about 100 male prisoners in that building. Some new furniture will be required, and some additional guards in lieu of those now quarantined in the male workhouse must be employed.

The Commissioners have estimated that about $1,000 of the sum of $50,000 named in the accompanying joint resolution will be needed to fit up the female workhouse and to provide for the proper care of prisoners therein during the period of danger from smallpox in that vicinity.

Copy of the report of the health officer is herewith inclosed, to which attention is respectfully invited.

Very respectfully,

JOHN B. WIGHT,

President Board of Commissioners, District of Columbia.

Hon. J. G. CANNON,

Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

Mr. CANNON. I will state that the report of the health officer is too long to read, unless gentlemen desire it. It goes much more into detail than does the letter from the president of the Commissioners. I have looked over it, and I have no doubt that this appropriation ought to be made, and made at once.

Mr. TODD. I should like to inquire whether the Committee on Appropriations has had a session and discussed this matter?

Mr. CANNON. No; it has been passed by the Senate to-day.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Who owns the hospital?

Mr. CANNON. It is public property, owned by the United States.

Mr. TODD. Has the committee discussed this matter at all?

Mr. CANNON. The committee has had no formal session, but I am satisfied, after conversation with several members of the committee, that the appropriation is necessary and should be disposed of at once.

Mr. DOCKERY. I will say that in view of the urgency and the emergency some members of the committee made an informal investigation so as not to delay the passage of the bill by calling a formal meeting of the committee. It has my hearty approval, after investigation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CANNON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

ENTRY OF LANDS IN GREER COUNTY, OKLA.

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11771) to amend section 1 of an act to provide for the entry of lands in Greer County, Okla., to give preference right to settlers, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 1 of an act to give preference right to settlers in Greer County, Okla., is hereby so amended as to allow parties who have had the benefit of the homestead laws of the United States, and who had purchased lands in Greer County from the State of Texas prior to the annexation of said county to said Territory, to perfect titles to said lands according to the provisions of section 1 hereinbefore mentioned: Provided, That no settler shall be permitted to acquire to exceed 320 acres under this provision.

The following committee amendments were read:

Strike out the words "the annexation of said county to said Territory" and insert the words "March 14, 1884."

Insert after the word "mentioned," in line 10, the following:

"Under such regulations as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may prescribe, and according to the legal subdivisions of the public surveys, if no adverse rights have attached."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. SHAFROTH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. LOUD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill 11683, making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, with Senate amendments, and I move that the House disagree with the Senate amendments and ask for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chair appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. LOUD, Mr. SMITH of Illinois, and Mr. SWANSON.
Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE.

Pending the motion, the following leaves of absence were granted:
To Mr. ERMENROUT, for four days, on account of the death of a friend.

To Mr. BULL, for ten days, on account of important business.
To Mr. GAINES, for two days, on account of illness in his family.
To Mr. COUSINS, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. MAHON, for two days, on account of important business.
And then the motion of Mr. PAYNE was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting detailed statement of extra services rendered by employees of the War Department—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting communications from the acting chief of the division of loans and currency and the Register of the Treasury submitting the applications of certain employees for compensation for overtime work—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of War, relating to the purchase of the patent of the Gerdon gas check—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Secretary of the Interior submitting estimates of appropriations for the support of certain Sioux and Chippewa Indians—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions of the following titles were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several Calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. LANHAM, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill of the House (H. ## SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 22, 1899.

The Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who art the Ruler of heaven and earth, we praise Thee that we belong to a race which through a thousand years has enriched the world with blood and brain and conscience in the persons of eminent men, whom Thou hast sent to teach us the high and great lessons which conserve our well-being—Alfred, Wycliffe, Cromwell, Chatham, and our own, most illustrious of them all, Washington, whom we call the Father of the Country. And now, as the Conscript Fathers of the nation gather to sit at his feet and to listen to his words of wholesome instruction and counsel, grant that these may be written upon the tablets of our memories and upon the memory of the nation.

Nor would we forget that as we come here to-day it is to pay the last tribute of our respect, admiration, and love to the memory of the late patriarch of the Senate, whose gravity, wisdom, gentleness, and kindness were a lesson to all who came in contact with him. Grave his name in indelible characters upon the tablets of the Senate, and grant to his son and to all connected with him by ties of blood the consolation which alone comes from the faith of our Lord and Saviour. We humbly ask in His divine name, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of yesterday's proceedings, when, on motion of Mr. GALLINGER, and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with.

RELIGIOUS SERVICE IN MEMORY OF PRESIDENT FAURE.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following communication from the Secretary of State, which was read:

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, February 21, 1899.

SIR: I have the honor to advise you, for the information of the Senate, that a religious service in memory of the late President of the French Republic will be held at St. Matthew's Church, Rhode Island avenue between Seventeenth street and Connecticut avenue, on Thursday, the 23d instant, at 11 o'clock.

By request of the chargé d'affaires of France, the attendance of the members of the Senate is respectfully invited.

I have the honor to be, sir, your obedient servant,

JOHN HAY.

HON. GARRET A. HOAR,
Vice-President of the United States, United States Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, I move that the invitation be accepted.

Mr. HOAR. I understand that the invitation is not addressed to the Senate as a body, but it is addressed to the members of the Senate as individuals. It seems that it does not require any action by the Senate.

Mr. CULLOM. It seemed to me that some action was necessary. If such is not the case, I withdraw the motion.

READING OF WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the following order.

The Secretary read as follows:

December 20, 1898. Mr. HOAR submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That on Wednesday, February 22, 1899, immediately after the reading of the Journal, Washington's Farewell Address be read to the Senate by Mr. WOLCOTT, a Senator from the State of Colorado, and that thereafter the Senate will proceed with its business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators, in pursuance of the resolution which the Senate has heretofore passed, I have the honor to introduce Senator WOLCOTT of Colorado, who will read to the Senate the Farewell Address of President Washington.

Mr. WOLCOTT, at the Vice-President's desk, read the address, as follows:

To the people of the United States:

FRIENDS AND FELLOW-CITIZENS: The period for a new election of a citizen to administer the Executive Government of the United States being not far distant, and the time actually arrived when your thoughts must be employed in designating the person who is to be clothed with that important trust, it appears to me proper, especially as it may conduce to a more distinct expression of the public voice, that I should now apprise you of the resolution I have formed to decline being considered among the number of those out of whom a choice is to be made.

I beg you at the same time to do me the justice to be assured that this resolution has not been taken without a strict regard to all the considerations appertaining to the relation which binds a dutiful citizen to his country; and that in withdrawing the tender of service, which silence in my situation might imply, I am influenced by no diminution of zeal for your future interest, no deficiency of grateful respect for your past kindness, but am supported by a full conviction that the step is compatible with both.

The acceptance of and continuance hitherto in the office to which your suffrages have twice called me have been a uniform sacrifice of inclination to the opinion of duty and to a deference for what appeared to be your desire. I constantly hoped that it would have been much earlier in my power, consistently with motives which I was not at liberty to disregard, to return to that retirement from which I had been reluctantly drawn. The strength of my inclination to do this previous to the last election had even led to the preparation of an address to declare it to you; but mature reflection on the then perplexed and critical posture of our affairs with foreign nations and the unanimous advice of persons entitled to my confidence impelled me to abandon the idea. I rejoice that the state of your concerns, external as well as internal, no longer renders the pursuit of inclination incompatible with the sentiment of duty or propriety, and am persuaded, whatever partiality may be retained for my services, that in the present circumstances of our country you will not disapprove my determination to retire.

The impressions with which I first undertook the arduous trust were explained on the proper occasion. In the discharge of this trust I will only say that I have, with good intentions, contributed toward the organization and administration of the Government the best exertions of which a very fallible judgment was capable. Not unconscious in the outset of the inferiority of my qualifications, experience in my own eyes, perhaps still more in the eyes of others, has strengthened the motives to diffidence of myself; and every day the increasing weight of years admonishes me more and more that the shade of retirement is as necessary to me as it will be welcome. Satisfied that if any circumstances have given peculiar value to my services they were temporary, I have the consolation to believe that, while choice and prudence invite me to quit the political scene, patriotism does not forbid it.

In looking forward to the moment which is intended to terminate the career of my political life my feelings do not permit me to suspend the deep acknowledgment of that debt of gratitude which I owe to my beloved country for the many honors it has conferred upon me; still more for the steadfast confidence with which it has supported me, and for the opportunities I have thence enjoyed of manifesting my inviolable attachment by services faithful and persevering, though in usefulness unequal to my zeal. If benefits have resulted to our country from these services, let it always be remembered to your praise and as an instructive example in our annals that under circumstances in which the passions, agitated in every direction, were liable to mislead; amidst appearances sometimes dubious; vicissitudes of fortune often discouraging; in situations in which not unfrequently want of success has countenanced the spirit of criticism, the constancy of your support was the essential prop of the efforts and a guaranty of the plans by which they were effected. Profoundly penetrated with this idea, I shall carry it with me to my grave as a strong incitement to unceasing vows that Heaven may continue to you the choicest tokens of its beneficence; that your union and brotherly affection may be perpetual; that the free Constitution which is the work of your hands may be sacredly maintained; that its administration in every department may be stamped with wisdom and virtue; that, in fine, the happiness of the people of these States, under the auspices of liberty, may be made complete by so careful a preservation and so prudent a use of this blessing as will acquire to them the glory of recommending it to the applause, the affection, and adoption of every nation which is yet a stranger to it.

Here, perhaps, I ought to stop. But a solicitude for your welfare which can not end but with my life, and the apprehension of danger natural to that solicitude, urge me on an occasion like the present to offer to your solemn contemplation and to recommend to your frequent review some sentiments which are the result of much reflection, of no inconsiderable observation, and which appear to me all-important to the permanency of your felicity as a people. These will be offered to you with the more freedom as you can only see in them the disinterested warnings of a parting friend, who can possibly have no personal motive to bias his counsel. Nor can I forget as an encouragement to it your indulgent reception of my sentiments on a former and not dissimilar occasion.

Interwoven as is the love of liberty with every ligament of your hearts, no recommendation of mine is necessary to fortify or confirm the attachment.

The unity of government which constitutes you one people is also now dear to you. It is justly so, for it is a main pillar in the edifice of your real independence, the support of your tranquility at home, your peace abroad, of your safety, of your prosperity, of that very liberty which you so highly prize. But as it is easy to foresee that from different causes and from different quarters much pains will be taken, many artifices employed, to weaken in your minds the conviction of this truth, as this is the point in your political fortress against which the batteries of internal and external enemies will be most constantly and actively (though often covertly and insidiously) directed, it is of infinite moment that you should properly estimate the immense value of your national union to your collective and individual happiness; that you should cherish a cordial, habitual, and immovable attachment to it, accustoming yourselves to think and speak of it as of the palladium of your political safety and prosperity; watching for its preservation with jealous anxiety; discountenancing whatever may suggest even a suspicion that it can in any event be abandoned, and indignantly frowning upon the first dawning of every attempt to alienate any portion of our country from the rest or to enfeeble the sacred ties which now link together the various parts.

For this you have every inducement of sympathy and interest. Citizens by birth or choice of a common country, that country has a right to concentrate your affections. The name of American, which belongs to you in your national capacity, must always exalt the just pride of patriotism more than any appellation derived from local discriminations. With slight shades of difference, you have the same religion, manners, habits, and political principles. You have in a common cause fought and triumphed together. The independence and liberty you possess are the work of joint counsels and joint efforts, of common dangers, sufferings, and successes.

But these considerations, however powerfully they address themselves to your sensibility, are greatly outweighed by those which apply more immediately to your interest. Here every portion of our country finds the most commanding motives for carefully guarding and preserving the union of the whole.

The North, in an unrestrained intercourse with the South, protected by the equal laws of a common government, finds in the productions of the latter great additional resources of maritime and commercial enterprise and precious materials of manufacturing industry. The South, in the same intercourse, benefiting by the same agency of the North, sees its agriculture grow and its commerce expand. Turning partly into its own channels the stream of the North, it finds its particular navigation invigorated; and while it contributes in different ways to nourish and increase the general mass of the national navigation, it looks forward to the protection of a maritime strength to which itself is unequally adapted. The East, in a like intercourse with the West, already finds, and in the progressive improvement of interior communications by land and water will more and more find, a valuable vent for the commodities which it brings from abroad or manufactures at home. The West derives from the East supplies requisite to its growth and comfort, and what is perhaps of still greater consequence, it must of necessity owe the secure enjoyment of indispensable outlets for its own productions to the weight, influence, and the future maritime strength of the Atlantic side of the Union, directed by an indissoluble community of interest as one nation. Any other tenure by which the West can hold this essential advantage, whether derived from its own separate strength or from an apostate and unnatural connection with any foreign power, must be intrinsically precarious.

While, then, every part of our country thus feels an immediate and particular interest in union, all the parts combined can not fail to find in the united mass of means and efforts greater strength, greater resource, proportionably greater security from external danger, a less frequent interruption of their peace by foreign nations, and what is of inestimable value, they must derive from union an exemption from those broils and wars between themselves which so frequently afflict neighboring countries not tied together by the same governments, which their own rivalships alone would be sufficient to produce, but which opposite foreign alliances, attachments, and intrigues would stimulate and embitter. Hence, likewise, they will avoid the necessity of those overgrown military establishments which, under any form of government, are inauspicious to liberty, and which are to be regarded as particularly hostile to republican liberty. In this sense it is that your union ought to be considered as a main prop of your liberty, and that the love of the one ought to endear to you the preservation of the other.

These considerations speak a persuasive language to every reflecting and virtuous mind, and exhibit the continuance of the Union as a primary object of patriotic desire. Is there a doubt whether a common government can embrace so large a sphere? Let experience solve it. To listen to mere speculation in such a case were criminal. We are authorized to hope that a proper organization of the whole, with the auxiliary agency of governments for the respective subdivisions, will afford a happy issue to the experiment. It is well worth a fair and full experiment. With such powerful and obvious motives to union affecting all parts of our country, while experience shall not have demonstrated its impracticability, there will always be reason to distrust the patriotism of those who in any quarter may endeavor to weaken its bands.

In contemplating the causes which may disturb our union, it occurs as matter of serious concern that any ground should have been furnished for characterizing parties by geographical discriminations—Northern and Southern, Atlantic and Western—whence designing men may endeavor to excite a belief that there is a real difference of local interests and views. One of the expedients of party to acquire influence within particular districts is to misrepresent the opinions and aims of other districts. You can not shield yourselves too much against the jealousies and heart-burnings which spring from these misrepresentations; they tend to render alien to each other those who ought to be bound together by fraternal affection. The inhabitants of our Western country have lately had a useful lesson on this head. They have seen in the negotiation by the Executive and in the unanimous ratification by the Senate of the treaty with Spain, and in the universal satisfaction at that event throughout the United States, a decisive proof how unfounded were the suspicions propagated among them of a policy in the General Government and in the Atlantic States unfriendly to their interests in regard to the Mississippi. They have been witnesses to the formation of two treaties—that with Great Britain and that with Spain—which secure to them everything they could desire in respect to our foreign relations toward confirming their prosperity. Will it not be their wisdom to rely for the preservation of these advantages on the union by which they were procured? Will they not henceforth be deaf to those advisers, if such there are, who would sever them from their brethren and connect them with aliens?

To the efficacy and permanency of your union a government for the whole is indispensable. No alliances, however strict, between the parts can be an adequate substitute. They must inevitably experience the infractions and interruptions which all alliances in all times have experienced. Sensible of this momentous truth, you have improved upon your first essay by the adoption of a Constitution of Government better calculated than your former for an intimate union and for the efficacious management of your common concerns. This Government, the offspring of our own choice, uninfluenced and unawed, adopted upon full investigation and mature deliberation, completely free in its principles, in the distribution of its powers, uniting security with energy, and containing within itself a provision for its own amendment, has a just claim to your confidence and your support. Respect for its authority, compliance with its laws, acquiescence in its measures, are duties enjoined by the fundamental maxims of true liberty. The basis of our political systems is the right of the people to make and to alter their constitutions of government. But the constitution which at any time exists till changed by an explicit and authentic act of the whole people is sacredly obligatory upon all.

The very idea of the power and the right of the people to establish government presupposes the duty of every individual to obey the established government.

All obstructions to the execution of the laws, all combinations and associations, under whatever plausible character, with the real design to direct, control, counteract, or awe the regular deliberation and action of the constituted authorities, are destructive of this fundamental principle and of fatal tendency. They serve to organize faction; to give it an artificial and extraordinary force; to put in the place of the delegated will of the nation the will of a party, often a small but artful and enterprising minority of the community, and, according to the alternate triumphs of different parties, to make the public administration the mirror of the ill-concerted and incongruous projects of faction rather than the organ of consistent and wholesome plans, digested by common counsels and modified by mutual interests.

However combinations or associations of the above description may now and then answer popular ends, they are likely in the course of time and things to become potent engines by which cunning, ambitious, and unprincipled men will be enabled to subvert the power of the people and to usurp for themselves the reins of government, destroying afterwards the very engines which have lifted them to unjust dominion.

Toward the preservation of your Government and the permanency of your present happy state it is requisite not only that you steadily discountenance irregular oppositions to its acknowledged authority, but also that you resist with care the spirit of innovation upon its principles, however specious the pretenses. One method of assault may be to effect in the forms of the Constitution alterations which may impair the energy of the system, and thus to undermine what can not be directly overthrown. In all the changes to which you may be invited remember that time and habit are at least as necessary to fix the true character of governments as other human institutions; that experience is the surest standard by which to test the real tendency of the existing constitution of a country; that facility in changes upon the credit of mere hypothesis and opinion exposes to perpetual change, from the endless variety of hypothesis and opinion; and remember especially that for the efficient management of your common interests in a country so extensive as ours a government of as much vigor as is consistent with the perfect security of liberty is indispensable. Liberty itself will find in such a government, with powers properly distributed and adjusted, its surest guardian. It is, indeed, little else than a name where the government is too feeble to withstand the enterprises of faction, to confine each member of the society within the limits prescribed by the laws, and to maintain all in the secure and tranquil enjoyment of the rights of person and property.

I have already intimated to you the danger of parties in the state, with particular reference to the founding of them on geographical discriminations. Let me now take a more comprehensive view, and warn you in the most solemn manner against the baneful effects of the spirit of party generally.

This spirit, unfortunately, is inseparable from our nature, having its root in the strongest passions of the human mind. It exists under different shapes in all governments, more or less stifled, controlled, or repressed; but in those of the popular form it is seen in its greatest rankness and is truly their worst enemy.

The alternate domination of one faction over another, sharpened by the spirit of revenge natural to party dissension, which in different ages and countries has perpetrated the most horrid enormities, is itself a frightful despotism. But this leads at length to a more formal and permanent despotism. The disorders and miseries which result gradually incline the minds of men to seek security and repose in the absolute power of an individual, and sooner or later the chief of some prevailing faction, more able or more fortunate than his competitors, turns this disposition to the purposes of his own elevation on the ruins of public liberty.

Without looking forward to an extremity of this kind (which nevertheless ought not to be entirely out of sight), the common and continual mischiefs of the spirit of party are sufficient to make it the interest and duty of a wise people to discourage and restrain it.

It serves always to distract the public councils and enfeeble the public administration. It agitates the community with ill-founded jealousies and false alarms; kindles the animosity of one part against another; foment occasionally riot and insurrection. It opens the door to foreign influence and corruption, which find a facilitated access to the Government itself through the channels of party passion. Thus the policy and the will of one country are subjected to the policy and will of another.

There is an opinion that parties in free countries are useful checks upon the administration of the government and serve to keep alive the spirit of liberty. This within certain limits is probably true, and in governments of a monarchical cast patriotism may look with indulgence, if not with favor, upon the spirit of party. But in those of the popular character, in governments purely elective, it is a spirit not to be encouraged. From their natural tendency it is certain there will always be enough of that spirit for every salutary purpose, and there being constant danger of excess, the effort ought to be by force of public opinion to mitigate and assuage it. A fire not to be quenched, it demands a uniform vigilance to prevent its bursting into a flame, lest instead of warming it should consume.

It is important, likewise, that the habits of thinking in a free country should inspire caution in those intrusted with its administration to confine themselves within their respective constitutional spheres, avoiding in the exercise of the powers of one department to encroach upon another. The spirit of encroachment tends to consolidate the powers of all the departments in one, and thus to create, whatever the form of government, a real despotism. A just estimate of that love of power and proneness to abuse it which predominates in the human heart is sufficient to satisfy us of the truth of this position. The necessity of reciprocal checks in the exercise of political power, by dividing and distributing it into different depositories, and constituting each the guardian of the public weal against invasions by the others, has been evinced by experiments, ancient and modern, some of them in our country and under our own eyes. To preserve them must be as necessary as to institute them. If in the opinion of the people the distribution or modification of the constitutional powers be in any particular wrong, let it be corrected by an amendment in the way which the Constitution designates. But let there be no change by usurpation; for though this in one instance may be the instrument of good, it is the customary weapon by which free governments are destroyed. The precedent must always greatly overbalance in permanent evil any partial or transient benefit which the use can at any time yield.

Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports. In vain would that man claim the tribute of patriotism who should labor to subvert these great pillars of human happiness—these firmest props of the duties of men and citizens. The mere politician, equally with the pious man, ought to respect and to cherish them. A volume could not trace all their connections with private and public felicity. Let it simply be asked, Where is the security for property, for reputation, for life, if the sense of religious obligation desert the oaths which are the instruments of investigation in courts of justice? And let us with caution indulge the supposition that morality can be maintained without religion. Whatever may be conceded to the influence of refined education on minds of peculiar structure, reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle.

It is substantially true that virtue or morality is a necessary spring of popular government. The rule indeed extends with more or less force to every species of free government. Who that is a sincere friend to it can look with indifference upon attempts to shake the foundation of the fabric? Promote, then, as an object of primary importance, institutions for the general diffusion of knowledge. In proportion as the structure of a government gives force to public opinion, it is essential that public opinion should be enlightened.

As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible, avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering also that timely disbursements to prepare for danger frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions in time of peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burden which we ourselves ought to bear. The execution of these maxims belongs to your representatives; but it is necessary that public opinion should cooperate. To facilitate to them the performance of their duty it is essential that you should practically bear in mind that toward the payment of debts there must be revenue; that to have revenue there must be taxes; that no taxes can be devised which are not more or less inconvenient and unpleasant; that the intrinsic embarrassment inseparable from the selection of the proper objects (which is always a choice of difficulties) ought to be a decisive motive for a candid construction of the conduct of the Government in making it, and for a spirit of acquiescence in the measures for obtaining revenue which the public exigencies may at any time dictate.

Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct. And can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it? It will be worthy of a free, enlightened, and at no distant period a great nation to give to mankind the magnanimous and too novel example of a people always guided by an exalted justice and benevolence. Who can doubt that in the course of time and things the fruits of such a plan would richly repay any temporary advantages which might be lost by a steady adherence to it? Can it be that Providence has not connected the permanent felicity of a nation with its virtue? The experiment, at least, is recommended by every sentiment which ennoble human nature. Alas! is it rendered impossible by its vices?

In the execution of such a plan nothing is more essential than that permanent, inveterate antipathies against particular nations and passionate attachments for others should be excluded, and that in place of them just and amicable feelings toward all should be cultivated. The nation which indulges toward another an habitual hatred or an habitual fondness is in some degree a slave. It is a slave to its animosity or to its affection, either of which is sufficient to lead it astray from its duty and its interest. Antipathy in one nation against another disposes each more readily to offer insult and injury, to lay hold of slight causes of umbrage, and to be haughty and intractable when accidental or trifling occasions of dispute occur.

Hence frequent collisions, obstinate, envenomed, and bloody contests. The nation prompted by ill will and resentment sometimes impels to war the government contrary to the best calculations of policy. The government sometimes participates in the national propensity, and adopts through passion what reason would reject. At other times it makes the animosity of the nation subservient to projects of hostility, instigated by pride, ambition, and other sinister and pernicious motives. The peace often, sometimes perhaps the liberty, of nations has been the victim.

So, likewise, a passionate attachment of one nation for another produces a variety of evils. Sympathy for the favorite nation, facilitating the illusion of an imaginary common interest in cases where no real common interest exists, and infusing into one the enmities of the other, betrays the former into a participation in the quarrels and wars of the latter without adequate inducement or justification. It leads also to concessions to the favorite nation of privileges denied to others, which is apt doubly to injure the nation making the concessions by unnecessarily parting with what ought to have been retained, and by exciting jealousy, ill will, and a disposition to retaliate in the parties from whom equal privileges are withheld; and it gives to ambitious, corrupted, or deluded citizens (who devote themselves to the favorite nation) facility to betray or sacrifice the interests of their own country without odium, sometimes even with popularity, gilding with the appearances of a virtuous sense of obligation a commendable deference for public opinion or a laudable zeal for public good the base or foolish compliances of ambition, corruption, or infatuation.

As avenues to foreign influence in innumerable ways, such attachments are particularly alarming to the truly enlightened and independent patriot. How many opportunities do they afford to tamper with domestic factions, to practice the arts of seduction, to mislead public opinion, to influence or awe the public councils! Such an attachment of a small or weak toward a great and powerful nation dooms the former to be the satellite of the latter. Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow-citizens) the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake, since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. But that jealousy, to be useful, must be impartial, else it becomes the instrument of the very influence to be avoided, instead of a defense against it. Excessive partiality for one foreign nation and excessive dislike of another cause those whom they actuate to see danger only on one side, and serve to veil and even second the arts of influence on the other. Real patriots who may resist the intrigues of the favorite are liable to become suspected and odious, while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.

The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is, in extending our commercial relations, to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements, let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies, the causes of which are essentially foreign to our concerns. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics or the ordinary combinations and collisions of her friendships or enmities.

Our detached and distant situation invites and enables us to pursue a different course. If we remain one people, under an efficient government, the period is not far off when we may defy material injury from external annoyance; when we may take such an attitude as will cause the neutrality we may at any time resolve upon to be scrupulously respected; when belligerent nations, under the impossibility of making acquisitions upon us, will not legally hazard the giving us provocation; when we may choose peace or war, as our interest, guided by justice, shall counsel.

Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalry, interest, humor, or caprice?

It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliances with any portion of the foreign world, so far, I mean, as we are now at liberty to do it; for let me not be understood as capable of patronizing infidelity to existing engagements. I hold the maxim no less applicable to public than to private affairs that honesty is always the best policy. I repeat, therefore, let those engagements be observed in their genuine sense. But in my opinion it is unnecessary and would be unwise to extend them.

Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

Harmony, liberal intercourse with all nations are recommended by policy, humanity, and interest. But even our commercial policy should hold an equal and impartial hand, neither seeking nor granting exclusive favors or preferences; consulting the natural course of things; diffusing and diversifying by gentle means the streams of commerce, but forcing nothing; establishing with powers so disposed, in order to give trade a stable course, to define the rights of our merchants, and to enable the Government to support them, conventional rules of intercourse, the best that present circumstances and mutual opinion will permit, but temporary and liable to be from time to time abandoned or varied as experience and circumstances shall dictate; constantly keeping in view that it is folly in one nation to look for disinterested favors from another; that it must pay with a portion of its independence for whatever it may accept under that character; that by such acceptance it may place itself in the condition of having given equivalents for nominal favors, and yet of being reproached with ingratitude for not giving more. There can be no greater error than to expect or calculate upon real favors from nation to nation. It is an illusion which experience must cure, which a just pride ought to discard.

In offering to you, my countrymen, these counsels of an old and affectionate friend I dare not hope they will make the strong and lasting impression I could wish—that they will control the usual current of the passions or prevent our nation from running the course which has hitherto marked the destiny of nations. But if I may even flatter myself that they may be productive of some partial benefit, some occasional good—that they may now and then recur to moderate the fury of party spirit, to warn against the mischiefs of foreign intrigue, to guard against the impostures of pretended patriotism—this hope will be a full recompense for the solicitude for your welfare by which they have been dictated.

How far in the discharge of my official duties I have been guided by the principles which have been delineated the public records and other evidences of my conduct must witness to you and to the world. To myself, the assurance of my own conscience is that I have at least believed myself to be guided by them.

In relation to the still subsisting war in Europe my proclamation of the 23d of April, 1793, is the index to my plan. Sanctioned by your approving voice, and by that of your representatives in both Houses of Congress, the spirit of that measure has continually governed me, uninfluenced by any attempts to deter or divert me from it.

After deliberate examination, with the aid of the best lights I could obtain, I was well satisfied that our country, under all the circumstances of the case, had a right to take, and was bound in duty and interest to take, a neutral position. Having taken it, I determined as far as should depend upon me, to maintain it with moderation, perseverance, and firmness.

The considerations which respect the right to hold this conduct it is not necessary on this occasion to detail. I will only observe that, according to my understanding of the matter, that right, so far from being denied by any of the belligerent powers, has been virtually admitted by all.

The duty of holding a neutral conduct may be inferred, without anything more, from the obligation which justice and humanity impose on every nation, in cases in which it is free to act, to maintain inviolate the relations of peace and amity toward other nations.

The inducements of interest for observing that conduct will best be referred to your own reflections and experience. With me a predominant motive has been to endeavor to gain time to our country to settle and mature its yet recent institutions, and to progress without interruption to that degree of strength and consistency which is necessary to give it, humanly speaking, the command of its own fortunes.

Though in reviewing the incidents of my Administration I am unconscious of intentional error, I am nevertheless too sensible of my defects not to think it probable that I may have committed many errors. Whatever they may be I fervently beseech the Almighty to avert or mitigate the evils to which they may tend. I shall also carry with me the hope that my country will never cease to view them with indulgence, and that, after forty-five years of my life dedicated to its service with an upright zeal, the faults of incompetent abilities will be consigned to oblivion, as myself must soon be to the mansions of rest.

Relying on its kindness in this as in other things, and actuated by that fervent love toward it which is so natural to a man who views in it the native soil of himself and his progenitors for several generations, I anticipate with pleasing expectation that retreat in which I promise myself to realize without alloy the sweet enjoyment of partaking in the midst of my fellow-citizens the benign influence of good laws under a free government—the ever-favorite object of my heart, and the happy reward, as I trust, of our mutual cares, labors, and dangers.

Go: WASHINGTON.

UNITED STATES, September 19, 1796.

MEMORIAL ADDRESSES ON THE LATE SENATOR MORRILL.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. President, in pursuance of the notice heretofore given, I submit resolutions relating to the death of the late Senator MORRILL, and ask for their present consideration.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The resolutions submitted by the Senator from Vermont will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That it is with deep regret and profound sorrow that the Senate hears the announcement of the death of Hon. JUSTIN SMITH MORRILL, late a Senator from the State of Vermont.

Resolved, That the Senate extends to his family and to the people of the State of Vermont sincere condolence in their bereavement.

Resolved, That, as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay fitting tribute to his high character and distinguished services.

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit to the family of the deceased and to the governor of the State of Vermont a copy of these resolutions, with the action of the Senate thereon.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That, as an additional mark of respect, at the conclusion of these exercises the Senate do adjourn.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. President, the late distinguished Senator, JUSTIN SMITH MORRILL, entered upon Congressional life when nearing the close of his forty-fifth year. I first knew him the summer preceding. Since then his work has been continuously for the nation—for the first twelve years in the House of Representatives and afterwards in the Senate. During this period my work, in his native State, has been along different lines. We seldom met. Personally I know no more of his very effective, able, and useful Congressional career than is open to every citizen of the nation. Others, long his associates in Congressional life and work, will fully and ably describe him as a man, his methods in judging of and accomplishing great national objects, and characterize his legislative work, its effectiveness, and its scope.

I shall devote the slight tribute which I have to offer to his memory mainly to an endeavor to discover the sources in which his great strength of manhood, his unusual ability, breadth, and power as a legislator have their origin and development.

He came of good English stock. His grandparents moved from Massachusetts to Vermont in 1795. His parents occupied a humble station in life. His mother was of more than average intelligence and culture. As usual, she was the first to open and give direction to his active young mind and thought. He was born at Strafford April 14, 1810, among the green, beautiful hills of Vermont, where every onward movement of a few rods presents a new scene, often a picture of rare beauty; where the hills and valley intermingle in every conceivable manner; where the summer foliage is rich in changing tints of green and brown; where in autumn it becomes a flower garden of most varied and beautiful colors; where in winter the pure snow and the trees, often clothed to their smallest tips in ice, in the bright sunlight resemble a palace of purest crystals. No wonder that he developed, if he did not inherit, an eye quick to apprehend and a mind apt to comprehend the harmony of colors and the beauty of proportions.

He was the eldest child, and from earliest years required to be useful and helpful in the family and to himself. His advantages for school education were extremely limited. He attended the common district school until he was 14, and then a term or two at Thetford Academy. The instruction in the district schools was quite primitive. They were not graded nor much classified. The instruction there given did not extend much beyond reading, spelling, writing, and arithmetic in their simpler forms and methods. He must have been a quick, attentive, laborious pupil to have accomplished so much as he did so early in life.

When 15 years old he entered a country store in his native town, and, except a service as bookkeeper and shipping clerk for two years in Portland, there served as clerk until nearing majority. Then he became and remained a partner in such store until he graduated therefrom into Congress. He was the active manager of the partnership business, except for the last seven years, which he devoted mostly to the pursuit of agriculture.

Mr. MORRILL's management of the store was able and judicious and brought the firm substantial results. A country store of those days was a little kingdom within itself, which exists now only in memory. It was the central point of the community whose business it transacted. Its business was conducted almost entirely in barter and exchange. The products of the household and farm were there exchanged for the necessities which the household and farm could not produce. The household produced most of the articles required for clothing the entire family and the farm most of those demanded for its sustenance. The overplus went to the store and was there exchanged for such other necessities as the family needs demanded. Markets were distant, communication and transportation slow and difficult. There were no traveling salesmen. The manager of the store visited the market twice each year. At these visits he must secure a supply which would meet the demands of his customers for six months at least. This required of him close and careful study of the needs of his customers, of the salable prices of the articles which they would require, as well as of the products which they would be likely to bring him, and of the prices at which these could be marketed.

The successful management of such a business demanded close attention and study, exact bookkeeping, unquestioned honesty, untiring industry, thoughtful forecast and judgment. After more than twenty-five years of training in such a school I do not think it is wonderful that Mr. MORRILL was found well equipped in habits of persistent industry, of careful investigation, and in the exercise of conservative, practical judgment necessary to grapple with the finance of the nation at a time when its proper management was as essential to success as was the marshaling of its armies. In managing the store Mr. MORRILL was brought into the closest touch with its customers. He knew the character of the products of each household, what expectations they entertained and whether their hopes were realized. If misfortune or calamity befell any his ear must be open to the tale of their sorrow. He must be firm in his opinions and views, yet sympathetic and generous in his treatment when any were overtaken by misfortune.

By nature possessed of a kind, generous heart, and a temperament not easily ruffled, these natural qualities were drawn out, cultivated, and strengthened by such training. He brought these well-trained qualities to the discharge of his Congressional duties. He could approach his associates easily, even when his views were firmly fixed and in conflict with theirs. He did not present them in an offensive, but rather in a courteous manner. He never allowed himself to be carried beyond pleasant railery and sarcasm. I never heard of an angry collision between him and any of his associates. He early learned and carried into practice through his long, varied, and useful life the sentiment so well expressed by the poet:

Have you had a kindness shown?

Pass it on.

'Twas not given for you alone—

Pass it on.

Let it travel down the years,

Let it wipe another's tears,

Till in Heaven the deed appears—

Pass it on.

The same kind helpfulness characterized his home life and relations. His home was ever full of "good cheer" to all its inmates and to all who came within its influence.

The community in which he was reared and transacted business consisted mostly of farmers, descendants from the early settlers of Vermont, filled with the spirit and wisdom of their fathers. They were patriotic, thoughtful, intelligent, self-reliant men of fixed, unyielding views of right and wrong, honest and upright in their dealings, independent and unswerving in the maintenance of their views. The early settlers of Vermont came largely from the best Puritan stock of Connecticut, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island. It was only the most enterprising of that stock who would venture into the wilderness of Vermont to subdue it and make themselves homes. For more than twenty years they maintained title to their homes against the claims of New Hampshire on the east; the importunate and exacting demands of New York on the west; the indifference and disregard of the Continental Congress, and the threats and attacks of the mother country. They were tried in the hard school of perplexity and of conflict. Out of the white heat of this most unequal conflict the State of Vermont was born, founded upon principles of natural right and justice, clearly set forth in its bill of rights and constitution, which essentially remain unchanged to the present time, still a worthy model for the government of every patriotic, intelligent, independent, liberty-loving people. The principles thus thought out and settled by the fathers permeated and became fixed in their sons and daughters, among whom Mr. MORRILL was reared and did business, with whose ideas and principles he was thoroughly infused.

Books were few and difficult to obtain, knowledge of proceedings in Congress did not reach them until fully two weeks after the events recorded had transpired. The store was the place of common meeting. There the leaders in the community gathered and discussed the history of the town, the State, and the nation, and all important and current events. Among the great national questions thus considered were the Missouri compromise in 1820; the memorable debate over the anti-slavery clause in the ordinance of 1787, between Mr. Hayne and Mr. Webster, in 1829-30; the nullification ordinance of South Carolina in 1832; the right to petition Congress for the abolition of slavery in the Territories and in the District of Columbia, championed by John Quincy Adams, during the years from 1835 to 1844; the formation of the Abolition party; the annexation of Texas and war with Mexico in 1845; the Wilmot proviso and formation of the Free-Soil party in 1848; the admission of California; the passage of the fugitive slave law, and the compromise of 1850, and the Nebraska Territorial act of 1853—all questions of intense, burning interest, growing out of and revolving round the subject of slavery.

All these arose just before and during the time Mr. MORRILL was engaged in business. He entered into their discussion and became more or less of a leader among his patrons. By them he was led to settled convictions on the subject of slavery, as declared in a letter written while a candidate for his first election to the House of Representatives. He there said:

I am opposed to the admission of any more slave States into the Union, and in favor of prohibiting slavery in all Territories belonging to the United States.

Out of these discussions came fixed and certain conclusions; out of them, an earnest, almost uncontrollable, desire to investigate and ascertain the underlying foundation principles; out of them, a desire for good books and a habit of using every leisure moment in reading, studying, and thinking. These habits thus early formed remained and were in constant exercise to his dying day. They led him to love, trust, and keep near the people. The people knew they could trust and lean upon him. In reading, as in every other thing, his motto was, "Duty first, then pleasure."

He carried into his Congressional work these habits thus early formed, and they abode with him to the end. In their exercise he became a well-informed, well-educated man, with every faculty alert, developed, and within control. He was self-educated. So is every man who gains that distinction. Eminent schools, colleges, and teachers are great aids in obtaining an education, but education can not be put on outwardly, as one dons his garment. It springs from the man, his innermost being, reaches out and seizes the least as well as the greatest opportunities, and faithfully uses them to strengthen and bring into subjection, for ready use, every God-given faculty. To such an one every calling in life is an educational school. He always lamented that his early opportunities for an education were so limited. I am sure this regret led to his earnest, untiring, and successful efforts for the erection of a beautiful house for the Congressional Library, and to set apart a portion of the public domain for the establishment of agricultural colleges.

These, with his long and earnest labors in managing and giving direction to the finance of the nation, will longest perpetuate his memory. His life covers a most remarkable period in the history of mankind—remarkable in the changes in the methods of living; in the methods of communication and transportation; in the skill and ease of manufacturing; in the multiplicity of newspapers, magazines, books, pictures, paintings, and statuary; remarkable for the events and changes among nations, and especially in this nation.

Mr. MORRILL, coming from so humble circumstances and narrow surroundings, kept abreast with and enjoyed all these changes. He was conservative and firm in his views and beliefs, brave in maintaining them, but never a pessimist. He believed in an unerring, Master Hand that guides and directs the affairs of mankind. He believed in and trusted the intelligence and judgment of the people of the nation and of his State. He was not a born genius, nor possessed of abnormal intellectual faculties, nor of special grace of manners, nor of speech. He was an industrious, great-hearted, well-balanced, kind, intelligent, self-reliant, patriotic, honest man; a good, but not uncommon, outgrowth of the people, institutions, and principles of the State of Vermont.

His character was pure and unselfish, frank and courteous, known and loved by all with whom he came in contact. In all his early life, in all his long Congressional career, the breath of scandal, the suspicion of dishonesty or of selfishness or of meanness, never tinged nor clouded his character. Without external help, from humble and circumscribed beginnings, by self-directed, honest effort he grew and broadened into an active, useful, noble, national life. He accomplished a great and lasting work. Though we miss, with sad regret, his manly form, his cheerful countenance, his words of wisdom, his work is not done. The law of influence is as fixed and unchangeable in its operation as the law of gravitation. An influence once generated never dies, but goes on, and on, and on, broadening and mingling with other influences until the final consummation of human affairs.

In ages to come Mr. MORRILL's name may become forgotten, but the influence of his life on his associates, in the affairs of the nation, in the management of its finances, in the fair proportions, beauty, and amplitude of the Congressional Library, and in the establishment of 64 agricultural colleges will never die, nor cease to be operative forces. Such a life is filled with inspiration, especially for the young, if they will heed the command of the Great Teacher, "Go and do thou likewise."

Mr. MORRILL well deserved the full tribute of praise which I am sure all who knew him will willingly bestow—that of duty faithfully, fearlessly, kindly, conscientiously done.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, on this, the anniversary of the birthday of George Washington, the Father of his Country, we are engaged in paying the last sad tribute to the memory of JUSTIN S. MORRILL, the father of the Senate.

By the death of Senator MORRILL the country has lost a pure, illustrious, and valued citizen and public servant, and many of us a very dear friend.

When I came into the Senate, at the first session of the Forty-sixth Congress, in March, 1879, there were seventy-six members of this body. Senator MORRILL is the fifty-second of that number who have passed across the dark river and into that shadowy realm to which we all hasten. There are now but eight members of the Senate who were here in 1879; and this ghastly statement shows the energy and pertinacity of death, and that every human pathway leads to an open grave.

It is said that death is the great enemy of our race, but under certain circumstances and environments this is not true. When the young, vigorous, ambitious, and hopeful are stricken down, we stand shocked, as if before some unfinished painting or statue where the pencil or chisel has fallen from the nerveless hand of a great artist; but when life's work is done, when the task is finished, and we simply await the inevitable end, death is oftentimes a friend.

Let me not live * * *
After my flame lacks oil, to be the snuff
Of younger spirits, whose apprehensive senses
All but new things disdain.

Every intellectual man will appreciate these lines of Shakespeare. He meant that he did not wish to live after passion and appetite were dead; when life had become an everyday hand-to-hand conflict with disease and pain, and when we were about to sink into that stage of senility and second childhood when we become objects of pity, if not of contempt.

Senator MORRILL was never "the snuff of younger spirits," nor disdained by their "apprehensive senses." He retained his mental vitality to the last, and his sun went down not in intellectual eclipse, but full-orbed and lustrous.

Mr. President, it is not my purpose, in the few words I shall speak, to dwell upon the details of the long and illustrious career of Mr. MORRILL. He had the extreme felicity of living, let me say, to see the great doctrine for which he contended so many years—that of tariff protection—adopted by his country, and a man elected to be President whose first celebrity in public affairs was the framing of a tariff bill modeled after one of which Mr. MORRILL was himself the author.

I prefer to speak of my friend as I knew him during twenty years' association in this Chamber, where we often differed upon public questions, but without a shadow upon our personal relations.

It was my fortune when I came into the Senate to be assigned to duty upon the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, of which he was the oldest member and had been the chairman. I afterwards served with him as a member of the Committee on Finance, of which he was the chairman. It was, however, upon the committee I have first named that I knew him best.

He was devoted to architecture, and studied it as an expert. He often said to me that no people could arrive at the first rank in civilization and refinement who were not devoted to architecture and its majestic and beautiful forms of art.

His great desire was to see Washington City the most beautiful capital in the world and this Capitol building in which we are assembled worthy of the greatest Republic upon the earth.

I remember very well his anxiety and solicitude about the disproportion architecturally of this building by reason of its width being too great for its height, and he consulted for years with the most eminent architects as to the feasibility of elevating the central dome so as to remove this defect. Finding this impracticable, he at last adopted the idea of a partial remedy in the construction of the terraces upon the western exposure, in which I was his faithful lieutenant, taking charge of the measure when he was confined to his house by long and serious illness. Mr. MORRILL was largely instrumental in the erection of the beautiful structure occupied now by the State, War, and Navy Departments, and in the erection of the Washington Monument, the location and structure of which he was always ready to defend. But it was upon the Congressional Library that he poured his earnest and affectionate service, and he lived to see that structure a dream of architectural beauty, the wonder and admiration of all the world.

In his private relations as husband, father, friend, Mr. MORRILL was one of the most loyal and lovable men I have ever known. He was kind, courteous, genial, and he never turned away from the poor and distressed. If all those to whom he did acts of kindness could whisper across his grave, it would make an anthem sweeter and more sonorous than any that ever pealed through cathedral aisle. Sir, he sleeps and sleeps well in the granite mountains of his native State, and until those mountains are melted by fervid heat his memory will be loved and cherished, not only by the people who loved and trusted him, but by those of the entire Union.

MR. ALLISON. Mr. President, the late Senator MORRILL, whose memory and public services we commemorate, served longer continuously in the two Houses of Congress than anyone else since the adoption of the Constitution, and longer continuously in the Senate than anyone during that period, although the service of Senator Sherman, of Ohio, in the Senate was about of equal duration. Both entered the House of Representatives at the same time, in March, 1855, but Senator Sherman preceded Senator MORRILL in the Senate six years. Senator Sherman's service in the Senate, however, was interrupted for a period of four years by a seat in the Cabinet of President Hayes, and terminated in March, 1897, by his again accepting a high place in the Cabinet, this time that of President McKinley. So these two eminent men served about the same number of years in the Senate, the service of Senator MORRILL being six years longer in the House, and continuous in the two Houses. Length of service alone counts but little; work done and results accomplished constitute the basis of reputations. By this standard we are judged, and by this standard our departed friend will be judged in the future.

It was the fortune of Senator MORRILL to enter the House of Representatives when the two sections of our country were widely at variance upon the question of slavery and greatly agitated upon the subject, this continued agitation resulting in civil war five years later. Mr. MORRILL, during his first term, took an active part in the affairs of the House, expressing his views, especially upon the subject of the tariff, offering amendments and suggestions to the then proposed modification of the tariff of 1846; which modifications, as then proposed, were in the line of the reduction of the tariff for the purpose of increasing the revenue. When his second term commenced he was placed on the important Committee of Ways and Means in the House, and later was assigned by its chairman to take charge of the consideration of all matters relating to the revenue.

Early in 1860 he presented to his colleagues on the committee a project for the revision of the tariff of 1846, proposing in its stead a tariff on the lines of protection to American industries, and the bill, thus prepared under his guidance, passed the House of Representatives during the long session of the Thirty-sixth Congress, being the last Congress before the civil war. It was not considered in the Senate, however, until the short session, when it passed this body and became a law, and was always known thereafter as the Morrill tariff act. The preparation and discussion of this important bill in the House placed him thus early in his public service in a conspicuous position as respects all matters relating to import duties, and it must have been, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] has just said, a source of gratification to him to see the policy thus by him pressed through the House finally embedded in our financial system.

During the Thirty-sixth Congress, this being his third term, Mr. MORRILL also introduced and pressed to final action in both Houses another important public measure, having for its purpose the development of the agricultural interests of our country. He represented a purely agricultural State, and believed that the public lands were properly the inheritance of all the States and that they should be utilized especially for the benefit of the older States which originally had not within their borders public lands. He believed that a portion of those lands or the revenue derived from their sale should be distributed among all the States of the Union and dedicated to the instruction of the youth in scientific agriculture for the promotion of that great interest which is the foundation of our national prosperity.

During that Congress he secured the passage of a measure dedicating a portion of the public domain to agricultural education by means of the establishment of agricultural colleges in all the States, and granting lands to the States for this purpose, such distribution being based upon the representation, respectively, in the House of Representatives. This bill was vetoed by President Buchanan, but was reintroduced by Mr. MORRILL in 1861, and those of us who knew him well here know with what pertinacity he pursued every subject that was near his heart. This bill thus reintroduced in 1861 passed both Houses and received the signature of Abraham Lincoln in 1862, and has since been known as the "agricultural college act." By this donation of the General Government agricultural colleges have been established in every State in the Union and in the Territories. This measure, with subsequent amendments also earnestly pressed by Mr. MORRILL, placed the agricultural colleges of our country on a permanent and enduring basis, achieving year by year the great purposes contemplated by the original act. This great contribution by him to the interests of agriculture will be of lasting benefit not only to our own country, but to all countries where agriculture is an honored occupation. These two measures brought Mr. MORRILL into prominence in the House as one of its most capable, painstaking, and wisest public servants.

Quickly following the beginning of the civil war it became necessary to raise additional revenue with which to carry it on. Senator MORRILL was naturally looked upon as a safe counselor and guide, and became an active participant, if not the most active, in the promotion of the great measures for raising revenue by means of tariff and tax laws. He was charged in the House by the chairman of the committee with the conduct of the first two great financial measures of 1862, namely, a revision of the tariff, being a revision of the tariff of which he himself had secured the passage in 1860, and also the establishment of a widely extended system of internal taxation.

These laws, though raising large sums of money, proved to be wholly ineffectual to meet the great expenditures daily made to maintain our armies in the field, and it became necessary in 1864 to again revise them, in order to largely increase our internal taxation, and also to correspondingly increase duties on imports. These measures were in charge of Mr. MORRILL in the House, and were successfully carried through by him.

It may be said of him, as it was said of Alexander Hamilton, that "he smote the rock of the public credit and streams of revenue gushed forth," these laws of 1864 yielding, in the last year of their existence, more than $600,000,000 of revenue. Similar laws passed now, with our enormous increase of wealth and production, would probably yield nearly two thousand millions annually. Such were the necessities of this great Government in the trying period of our war, and such were the means and the methods and the instrumentalities whereby our credit was supported.

Mr. MORRILL also participated at the close of the war in the necessary preparatory measures to reduce these enormous burdens of taxation and to place our credit upon a stable and enduring basis. During the last eight years of his service in the House he was actively and constantly engaged as its leader in connection with the financial measures necessary to carry on the war, and, after its close, in making preparations for a gradual reduction of taxation and a gradual reduction of our national expenditures and our national debt. During this trying period we must remember there were many able and experienced men in both Houses who participated in shaping this legislation, but none more useful or influential than Mr. MORRILL.

When he entered the Senate in 1867 he came equipped with a wide knowledge of our public affairs, a large experience in shaping legislation, and possessing a national reputation as a safe and trusted leader upon all questions relating to the public finances. Properly and naturally he soon became a member of the Finance Committee of the Senate and participated in the consideration and formation of all the various measures for the reestablishment of our public credit upon a sound and safe basis by a refunding of the public debt and making provisions necessary to secure the convertibility of our currency into the world's standard of money.

It should be said that Senator Sherman, who participated largely in shaping financial legislation in the Senate, was early in his service in this body made chairman of the Finance Committee, and remained so until 1877, when, though just reelected, he left his place in the Senate to take up the important work of Secretary of the Treasury during President Hayes's Administration. Senator MORRILL then became chairman, and from 1877 to the date of his death was chairman of that great committee, with a hiatus of four years only—from 1879 to 1881, when Senator Bayard was chairman, and from 1893 to 1895, when Senator Voorhees was chairman.

Having old-fashioned notions respecting a paper currency, Senator MORRILL opposed and voted against the issue of greenbacks in 1862, but after their incorporation into our currency he was one of those who believed that they should not be suddenly retired or suddenly abandoned as a part of our circulating medium. In 1864 he set his face against every attempt to enlarge that circulation beyond $400,000,000 in all, arguing that it was necessary to safely limit their quantity in order to assure their convertibility at the earliest practicable period after the close of the war.

Mr. President, it was my fortune to become a member of the Committee on Finance in March, 1877. Before that I had also served with Mr. MORRILL on the Committee on Ways and Means during the last two years of his service in the House. So, speaking from personal knowledge, I can say that during all this period (with the exception, perhaps, of the last year or two, when, because of infirmity of age, he was unable to give his usual attention to the details of matters before the committee) he was assiduous, alert, and active as respects every important measure that came before the committee, giving his personal attention to all important details and shaping the phraseology to be employed in the various bills presented to the Senate. It may, therefore, be said that all the great revenue measures during this long period of time, whether as respects internal taxation or tariff laws and currency laws, received at his hands careful, intelligent, and thorough consideration.

Though a protectionist, he was never an extreme one, finding it often necessary to restrain the ardor of his associates who desired higher duties than he thought were wise; and the student of our financial history during this important period will find very much to admire and little to criticize with respect to his participation in shaping these great measures.

Although Mr. MORRILL'S time was thus largely absorbed, he also interested himself in other leading public questions, watching with care, as we all remember, every public interest. His natural conservatism led him to oppose, on every occasion, suggestions of the acquisition of insular territory. In 1871 he opposed the acquisition of Santo Domingo, and during his later years he opposed with great vigor of statement and argument the acquisition of Hawaii.

He also had but little respect for what are called reciprocity treaties; and whenever such were presented in any form, whether by treaty or statutory provision, he was for their minimization and confining such legislation to the smallest number of subjects. He was active in opposition to the reciprocity treaty of 1854 with Canada, and pressed the absolute repeal of the treaty at the earliest possible moment consistent with its provisions. He opposed vigorously the treaties of reciprocity with the Hawaiian Islands, and sought in vain to abrogate them, believing as he did in the old-fashioned way of protecting American industries and American labor.

As was stated by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], from his long residence here he naturally took deep interest in the improvement and development of the capital of our country, and to him more than to any other Senator we are indebted for our National Museum and our great Congressional Library. One of the last public utterances he made in the Senate Chamber was his advocacy of a bill to provide for the acquisition of a site for, and the erection of a building thereon, for the use of the Supreme Court of the United States. Such a measure was advocated by him for many years, and on his motion the bill passed the Senate at the present session.

Mr. President, this brief outline of some of the measures which make up the record of Senator MORRILL'S great public service marks him as one of the distinguished legislators of the country during the period of his activity. He did not participate in the active and what may be called the running debates of the Senate, but during every session since I have been a member he made one or two carefully prepared speeches on some important question pending. These speeches were always illumined with agreeable humor and pleasing anecdote, and oftentimes by keen satire and wit, aimed at those who held opposing opinions.

His colleague has already spoken of his early life, and of his private life and associations, and I need only add that in social life and in his official life, in the committee room and in the Chamber, he was always agreeable and entertaining. During all the period of my acquaintance with him I have never known an unkind suggestion to be made by him to his associates or of them. On the contrary, he was always courteous in his intercourse and deferential to the opinions and suggestions of others.

Mr. President, his loss is deeply deplored in the Senate and in the country. He won the affection and esteem of all who knew him; and those who knew him best will revere his memory most. He made a lasting impress upon the country and upon his countrymen, and a study of his life will be useful to every youth in the country as the generations come and go. Intimately associated with him for a period of thirty-six years, I present this sincere though imperfect tribute to his memory.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, when JUSTIN MORRILL died, not only a great figure left the Senate Chamber—the image of the ancient virtue of New England—but an era in our national history came to an end. He knew in his youth the veterans of the Revolution and the generation who declared independence and framed the Constitution, as the young men who are coming to manhood to-day know the veterans who won our victories and the statesmen who conducted our policy in the civil war. He knew the whole history of his country from the time of her independence, partly from the lips of those who had shaped it, partly because of the large share he had in it himself. When he was born Washington had been dead but ten years. He was 16 years old when Jefferson and Adams died. He was 22 years old when Charles Carroll died. He was born at the beginning of the second year of Madison's Presidency, and was a man of 26 when Madison died. In his youth and early manhood the manners of Ethan Allen's time still prevailed in Vermont, and Allen's companions and comrades could be found in every village. He was old enough to feel in his boyish soul something of the thrill of our great naval victories, and of the victory at New Orleans in our last war with England, and, perhaps, to understand something of the significance of the treaty of peace of 1815. He knew many of the fathers of the country as we knew him. In his lifetime the country has grown from seventeen hundred thousand to thirty-six hundred thousand square miles, from seventeen States to forty-five States, from four million people to seventy-five million. To the America into which he was born seventeen new Americas had been added before he died.

A great and healthful and beneficent power has been lost from our country's life. If he had not lived, the history of the country would have been different in some very important particulars; and it is not unlikely that his death has changed the result in some matters of great pith and moment, which are to affect profoundly the history of the country in the future. The longer I live, the more carefully I study the former times or observe my own time, the more I am impressed with the sensitiveness of every people, however great or however free, to an individual touch, to the influence of a personal force. There is no such thing as a blind fate; no such thing as an overwhelming and pitiless destiny. The Providence that governs this world leaves nations as He leaves men, to work out their own destiny, their own fate, in freedom, as they obey or disobey His will.

Man is his own star; and the soul that can Render an honest and a perfect man
Commands all life, all influence, all fate;
Nothing to him falls early or too late;
Our acts our angels are, for good or ill;
Our fatal shadows that walk by us still.

It is wonderful what things this man accomplished alone, what things he helped others to accomplish, what things were accomplished by the political organization of which he was a leader, which he bore a very large part in accomplishing.

Mr. MORRILL'S public life was coincident with the advent of the Republican party to national power. His first important vote in the House of Representatives helped to elect Mr. Banks to the office of Speaker, the first national victory of a party organized to prevent the extension of slavery. From that moment for nearly half a century Vermont has spoken through him in our National Council, until, one after another, almost every great question affecting the public welfare has been decided in accordance with her opinion.

It would be impossible, even by a most careful study of the history of the country for the last forty years, to determine with exactness what was due to Mr. MORRILL'S personal influence. Many of the great policies to which we owe the successful result of the civil war—the abolition of slavery, the restoration of peace, the new and enlarged definition of citizenship, the restoration of order, the establishment of public credit, the homestead system, the foundation and admission of new States, the exaction of apology and reparation from Great Britain, the establishment of the doctrine of expatriation, the achievement of our manufacturing independence, the taking by the United States of its place as the foremost nation in the world in manufacture and in wealth as it was already foremost in agriculture, the creation of our vast domestic commerce, the extension of our railroad system from one ocean to the other—were carried into effect by narrow majorities, and would have failed but for the wisest counsel. When all these matters were before Congress there may have been men more brilliant or more powerful in debate, but I can not think of any wiser in counsel than Mr. MORRILL. Many of them must have been lost but for his powerful support. Many owed to him the shape they finally took.

But he has left many a personal monument in our legislation, in the glory of which no others can rightfully claim to rival him. To him is due the great tariff, that of 1861, which will always pass by his name, of which every protective tariff since has been but a modification and adjustment to conditions somewhat changed, conditions which in general, so far as they were favorable, were the result of that measure. To him is due the first antipolygamy bill, which inaugurated the policy under which, as we hope and believe, that great blot on our national life has been forever expunged. The public buildings which ornament Washington, the extension of the Capitol Grounds, the great building where the State, War, and Navy Departments have their home, the National Museum buildings, are the result of statutes of which he was the author and which he conducted from their introduction to their enactment. He was the leader, as Mr. Winthrop in his noble oration bears witness, of the action of Congress which resulted in the completion of the Washington Monument after so many years' delay. He conceived and accomplished the idea of consecrating the beautiful chamber of the old House of Representatives as a memorial hall where should stand forever the statues of the great men of the States. So far, of late, as the prosperity and wise administration of the Smithsonian has depended upon the action of Congress it has been due to him. Above all, the beautiful National Library building, unequalled among buildings of its class in the world, was in a large measure the result of his persistent effort and powerful influence, and stands as an enduring monument to his fame. There can be no more beautiful and enviable memorial to any man than a portrait upon the walls of a great college in the gallery where the likenesses of its benefactors are collected. Mr. MORRILL deserves this expression of honor and gratitude at the hands of at least one great institution of learning in every American State. To his wise foresight is due the ample endowment of agricultural or technical colleges in every State in the Union.

He came from a small State, thinly settled, from a frontier State. His advantages of education were those only which the public schools of the neighborhood afforded. All his life, with a brief interval, was spent in the same town, except when absent in the public service. But there was no touch of provincialism in him. Everything about him was broad, national, American. His intellect and soul, his conceptions of statesmanship and of duty, expanded as the country grew and as the demands upon him increased. He was in every respect as competent to legislate for fifty States as for thirteen. He would have been as competent to legislate for an entire continent so long as that legislation were to be governed, restrained, inspired by the principles in which our Union is founded and the maxims of the men who builded it.

He was no dreamer, no idealist, no sentimentalist. He was practical, wise, prudent. In whatever assembly he was found he represented the solid sense of the meeting. But still he never departed from the loftiest ideals. On any question involving righteousness or freedom you would have as soon have had doubt of George Washington's position as of his. He had no duplicity, no indirection, no diplomacy. He was frank, plain spoken, simple-hearted. He had no faculty for swimming under water.

His armor was his honest thought
And simple truth his utmost skill.

The Apostle's counsel to his young disciple will serve for a life-like portraiture of JUSTIN MORRILL:

Be sober-minded;
Speak thou the things which become sound doctrine;
In all things showing thyself a pattern of good works: in doctrine shewing uncorruptness, gravity, sincerity;
Sound speech than can not be condemned; that he that is of the contrary part may be ashamed, having no evil thing to say of you.

If you wish to sum up the quality of JUSTIN MORRILL in a single word, mind, body, and soul, that word would be Health. He was thoroughly healthy, through and through, to the center of his brain, to his heart's core. Like all healthy souls, he was full of good cheer and sunshine, full of hope for the future, full of pleasant memories of the past. To him life was made up of cheerful yesterdays and confident to-morrows. But with all his friendliness and kindness, with all his great hold upon the love and respect of the people, with all his large circle of friends, with all his delight in companionship and agreeable converse, he dared to be alone. He found good society enough always, if no other were at hand, in himself. He was many times called upon to espouse unpopular causes and unpopular doctrines. From the time when in his youth he devoted himself to the antislavery cause, then odious in the nostrils of his countrymen, to the time when in the last days of his life he raised his brave voice against a policy upon which the majority of his political associates seemed bent, he never yielded the conclusions of his own judgment or the dictates of his own conscience to any majority, to any party dictation, or to any public clamor. When freedom, righteousness, and justice were on his side he considered himself in the majority. He was constant in his attendance on the worship of a small and unpopular religious denomination. He never lost his good nature, his courage, or his supreme confidence in the final triumph of truth.

Mr. MORRILL was not a great political leader. Great political leaders do not often come to the Senate nowadays. He was contented to be responsible for one man; to cast his share of the vote of one State; to do his duty as he conceived it, and let other men do theirs as they saw it. But at least he was not a great political follower. He never committed himself to the political currents, nor studied the vanes to see how the winds were blowing, nor sounded the depths and the shallows before he decided on his own course. There was no wire running to his seat from any center of patronage or power. To use a felicitous phrase, I think of the Senator from Alabama, he did not "come out of his door and cry 'Cuckoo!' when any clock struck elsewhere."

Mr. MORRILL was a brave man—an independent man. He never flinched from uttering his thought. He was never afraid to vote alone. He never troubled himself about majorities or Administrations, still less about crowds or mobs or spasms of popular excitement. His standard of excellence was high. He was severe, almost austere, in his judgments of other men. And yet, with all this, everybody liked him. Everybody who came to know him well loved him. It seems strange that he never incurred enmities or provoked resentments. I suppose the reason is that he never had any controversy with anybody. He did not mingle in the debates of the Senate as a debater. He uttered his opinion and gave his reasons as if he were uttering judgments. But he seldom or never undertook to reply to the men who differed from him, and he rarely, if ever, used the weapons of ridicule or sarcasm or invective, and he never grew impassioned or angry. He had, in a high degree, what Jeremy Taylor calls "the endearment of prudent and temperate speech."

He was one of the men that Washington would have loved and Washington would have leaned upon. Of course I do not compare our good friend with him to whom no man living or that ever lived on earth can be compared. And Mr. MORRILL was never tried or tested by executive or by military responsibilities. But the qualities which belonged to Washington belonged to him—prudence, modesty, sound judgment, simplicity, absolute veracity, absolute integrity, disinterestedness, lofty patriotism. If he is not to be compared with Washington, he was at least worthy to be the countryman of Washington, and to hold a high place among the statesmen of the Republic which Washington founded.

Neither ambition nor hatred, nor the love of ease nor the greed of gain, nor the desire of popularity nor the love of praise, nor the fear of unpopularity found a place in that simple and brave heart.

Like as a ship that through the ocean wide
By conduct of some star doth make her way—no local attraction diverted the magnet in his soul, which ever pointed to the star of duty.

As I just said, he was one of the men that Washington would have loved and that Washington would have leaned upon. If we do not speak of him as a man of genius, he had that absolute probity and that sound common sense which are safer and better guides than genius. These gifts are the highest ornaments of a noble and beautiful character; they are surer guides to success and loftier elements of true greatness than what is commonly called genius. It was well said by an early American author, now too much neglected, that—

There is no virtue without a characteristic beauty. To do what is right argues superior taste as well as morals; and those whose practice is evil feel an inferiority of intellectual power and enjoyment, even where they take no concern for a principle. Doing well has something more in it than the mere fulfilling of a duty. It is a cause of a just sense of elevation of character; it clears and strengthens the spirits; it gives higher reaches of thought. The world is sensible of these truths, let it act as it may. It is not because of his integrity alone that it relies on an honest man, but it has more confidence in his judgment and wise conduct, in the long run, than in the schemes of those of greater intellect who go at large without any landmarks of principle. So that virtue seems of a double nature, and to stand oftentimes in the place of what we call talent.

He was spared the fate of so many of our great New England statesmen, that of closing his life in sorrow and in gloom. His last days were days of hope, not of despair. Summer came to his seat in the Senate Chamber as to a solitude. When he was struck with death there was found upon his table a volume of Shakespeare with this passage, probably the last printed text, on which his eyes ever gazed, marked with his own hand:

Would I were dead, if God's good will were so,
For what is in this world, but care and woe.

The last days of Samuel Adams were embittered by poverty, sickness and the death of his only son.

Daniel Webster laid wearily down his august head in disappointment and sorrow, predicting with dying breath that the end had come to the great party to whose service his life was given.

When John Quincy Adams fell at his post in the House of Representatives a great newspaper declared that there could not be found in the country another bold enough or bad enough to take his place.

But Mr. MORRILL's last days were filled with hope and not with despair. To him life was sweet and immortality assured. His soul took its flight

On wings that fear no glance of God's pure sight,
No tempest from his breath.

And so we leave him. His life goes out with the century of which he almost saw the beginning. What the future may have in store for us we can not tell. But we offer this man as an example of an American Senator and American citizen than which so far we have none better. Surely that life has been fortunate. He is buried where he was born. His honored grave is hard by the spot where his cradle was rocked. He sleeps where he wished to sleep, in the bosom of his beloved Vermont. No State ever mourned a nobler son; no son was ever mourned by a nobler State. He enjoyed to a ripe old age everything that can make life happy—honor, love, obedience, troops of friends,

The love of friends without a single foe,
Unequaled lot below.

He died at home. The desire of the wise man,

Let me die in my nest, was fulfilled to him. His eyes in his old age looked undimmed upon the greatness and the glory of his country in achieving which he had borne so large a part.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, there are few, if any, members of the Senate who witnessed the introduction of JUSTIN S. MORRILL to Congressional service as a member of the House of Representatives from Vermont in 1855, and only one Senator now holds a seat here who was a member of this body when Mr. MORRILL took his seat as a Senator from that State in 1867.

He stood here in conspicuous vigor of intellectual force, without apparent decay, until he had almost spanned the nineteenth century, and, at its close, with all its marvelous rapidity of advance, beyond its predecessors, he was in the front rank of active men, keeping pace with every event, discovery, revelation, and grand achievement, and pressing on with active movement in every great advance, as he had done when the century was young.

His untiring work for the people, through the long period of his public service, upon which no shadow of discredit ever fell, has earned their reverence and gratitude. He died possessed of the riches of their love, and this was all the wealth he had or desired. He has bequeathed to his country the priceless fruits of his life work, the outgrowth of duty, labor, and honor. We have not known a man in the Senate, nor do we believe that any man ever held a seat in this body, who was more sincerely conscientious in every utterance and in every vote that he gave on any measure. Nor has any Senator been more diligent and careful to inform himself on the questions that are constantly presented here for just, wise, and patriotic determination. The task of a true Senator is a burden of ceaseless responsibilities that needs a strong, rugged will and a pure heart for its support. Senator MORRILL was blessed with that high capacity in an unusual degree.

His patience in labor and his forbearance in controversy indicated his unselfish purpose, in all his work in the Senate, to limit his personal wishes and endeavors to the lines of duty as a representative of the people. He seemed to have no ambition other than an earnest desire to benefit the country in dealing with the measures that came up in Congress, and he was not known among the class of politicians who work with active zeal for personal advancement or for party success. He was too broad to be selfish and too earnest in his desire to benefit the people to take into account his own political fortunes. He was faithful to his party, but was never its slave.

I recall my last conversation with him with sincere pleasure. It illustrates his strong sense of duty and his anxious care for the general welfare of the people, and for the progress and elevation of the great Republic in its influence among the nations of the world.

At a late hour of the day, when the progress of the debate seemed to indicate that a vote on the Nicaragua Canal bill was possible, Mr. MORRILL left his seat and came across the Chamber to my desk.

He never approached my seat in the Senate that I did not rise to acknowledge the honor of his visit. He said that he came to inquire if it was likely that a vote would be reached on the bill during the evening, adding that he was somewhat weary and desired to go home, unless it was necessary to remain. On being assured that the absence of his vote would not endanger the measure, he said:

However that may be, I wish to give my vote to that measure as the one that I approve above all others pending in the Senate. It is a work of world-wide importance and honorable to this generation. I very much desire to record my vote for this bill.

It was not until I had assured him that a vote could not be taken before a subsequent day that he got his consent to retire from the Senate Chamber. He went away, never to return to us, except as a sacred symbol of the mysterious majesty of death, while the Senate and the Government, and the representatives of the nations of the earth, gathered about the catafalque where the body lay in state to testify their reverence for the venerable father of the Senate.

I have stated his last words to me, which I believe were the last expression of his will as a Senator, and I now record his vote for that measure.

It may be justly stated that every day of Mr. MORRILL's presence in Congress is marked with some valuable contribution, on the floor of the Houses or in the committees, to the legislative history of the United States. He did not appear to work with unusual toil in building up the splendid structure of his public record. His task seemed to be easy and his burden light, because of the steady uniformity and the method of his labors.

His adventures in legislation were never rash or startling, yet they were as bold and as firmly cast with reference to principle and for the achievement of great results as were the great conceptions of the illustrious men who laid the foundations of this wonderful system of American Republics.

He had not the faculty of eloquence to summon his colleagues to sudden and dangerous movement in dealing with questions that arouse the enthusiasm or excite the indignation of the whole people. Had he possessed such power, his conservatism would have controlled his action and he would always have counseled the greatest deliberation when the danger or the temptation was greatest.

Mr. MORRILL was a deviser of methods for the upbuilding of the country in its material interests, and he did not hesitate in his work to search for a precedent or a theory to sustain his plans when convinced that they would result in the good of the people under the Constitution. The general welfare was so great a desideratum in his political creed that he found it difficult to restrain his zeal by recurring to the theories of government that might stand in the way. But the welfare of the people rather than the prosperity of classes was the real motive of his action.

He gathered his ideas and information as to the needs of the people at large from his study of the interests of his immediate constituency. This loyalty to the proper conception of merely representative duty and the force and persistence which he employed in its advocacy made him a leading champion of a doctrine known as protection in customs taxation for the sake of protection. This contention involved him in a great national controversy that will never be settled in our domestic policy until reciprocal freedom of trade has become so general between nations that it will be virtually a fixture of the laws or usage of nations. His work in promoting our domestic development in productive and manufacturing industries and in the independence of American labor was prompted chiefly by the duty which has become a criterion of Christian civilization, that of providing for the household first and then for assisting the strangers. It can not be justly said of this humane statesman that he ever supported a policy of government that he did not believe was just and helpful to the laboring man.

Those who differ with his policy, as I do, must still acknowledge that it has given such rewards to American genius and enterprise, at whatever cost, as have produced an excellence in our manufactures of which we are all very proud. In this line of encouragement to the efforts of labor to win higher rewards in the mechanic arts Mr. MORRILL has builded for himself and with his own work a title to fame that is as broad and conspicuous as that which Thomas Jefferson, with a just pride, claimed for himself as the founder of the University of Virginia.

The agricultural and mechanical colleges of the United States are the work of JUSTIN S. MORRILL, and are the proudest monuments to his fame.

This grand system was instituted by the act of July 2, 1862, of which Mr. MORRILL was the author. While a civil war was flagrant which involved more in its desperate struggle than ever fell to the lot of any nation and excited the battling contestants with animosities as deep and bitter as ever aroused the soul of man, this cool-headed, far-seeing, and benevolent statesman found in his hopes a coming time of peace, restoration, and brotherhood in which the education of the youth of the land would be a blessed benediction to a country that needed the help of every humane restorative.

He surveyed with careful outlook the vast public domain as the resources of endowment for schools of high grade for the agricultural and mechanical classes. He studiously examined the delicate question of Federal endowment and State control of educational institutions, and, with the eye of a seer, he found the neutral ground where these sovereign powers, then in open warfare, could meet under the banners of peace and act together in perfect harmony for the lifting up of these great industrial classes and uniting their energies in a final union of devout patriotism.

In that act was manifested the wisdom of the statesman, the keen discernment of the safe legislator, and the noblest aspiration of a generous soul.

In thirty-six years the universities and colleges that have been founded under that law number more than 50 for Caucasians and 15 for the negro race in the different States and Territories. In 1896-97 more than 25,000 Caucasian pupils were taught in those institutions by more than 1,400 male and female teachers, and more than 4,000 negro pupils were taught in the colleges for that race. The income from land grants and the aid of States for 1896-97 was more than $5,000,000, while the accumulated property in buildings, libraries, apparatus, cultivated farms, and furnished workshops is a vast sum.

Death whispers its funeral sighs through this Chamber in memory of our aged and beloved dean of the Senate; but there must be a note of triumph in every heart when we recur to facts so grand as those I have quoted, and feel the reality of that pledge of immortal renown given to the dead who loved the living, that "their works do follow them." Out of these colleges have come already a great number of men and women who have had marked success in all the honorable pursuits in this free country; others will follow who will improve upon the example of their predecessors, and as each generation appears there will be still a greater number who will honor the memory of JUSTIN S. MORRILL and "will rise up and call him blessed."

I refer to only a few facts in the life of this aged public servant out of a great number that make up the record of a pure and grand career, suited to the genius of his country, the excellence of its institutions, the upward march of its ennobling influence, and the glory which will be revealed in its future history. He worthily represented its character and anticipated its grand success in that highest mission that Heaven has ordained for any nation.

The temples around us, and others he projected, that so impressively remind us of his care for learning and justice, and the beauty and strength of this Capitol, where he took so active a part in legislation, are monuments that he loved to aid in building in honor of the great Republic and of the name and memory of George Washington, its founder and father.

Mr. MORRILL would not have asked of his countrymen a higher or more fitting testimony of their regard for him than that the Senate would celebrate his obsequies in this Chamber and on this anniversary after the reading of the Farewell Address of George Washington. He lived up to the spirit of that great legacy to the Republic, and followed its admonitions with an abiding faith and resolute purpose to the day of his death.

May he rest in peace.

Mr. CULLOM. Mr. President, the distinguished statesman whose death we are commemorating to-day was an American citizen in all those elements of character which have made our Republic prosperous and great; and during many years, for nearly half a century, indeed, he stood before the country a splendid example to its youth, a public man of perfect moral proportions, and one of whose integrity, honesty, and purity of purpose there was never either a private or public suspicion.

During nearly half a century he served his country well in the House of Representatives and in the Senate. He was a conspicuous figure during the period of the civil war, and his name became attached to the first protective legislation in the real sense of that word. On all questions of legislation he was well informed; in all fiscal matters he took a deep interest; and while he kept abreast with the times, his old-time ideas of the powers and duties of the Government restrained and made him sometimes hesitate to follow his party when it advanced upon what he regarded as new paths.

But, Mr. President, no matter what his opinions were on public questions, no matter how vigorously he put himself into opposition, no matter how effectively he might resist the most cherished schemes of Senators, he never created a resentful or really angry feeling on the part of any of his colleagues. Every Senator knew that he acted always upon a conscientious sense of duty, and he at all times maintained the respect of this body.

Indeed, Mr. President, I may say that for many years he was not only respected by all his colleagues, but he was honored and even loved by them.

Senator MORRILL was a man who, from the beginning of his public life, never hesitated to declare his views. When he was first nominated for Congress in 1854, he avowed himself as opposed to the spread of slavery, in favor of the modification or repeal of the fugitive-slave law, in favor of money for liquor rations to soldiers, and for the annihilation of "grogeries," as he termed them, in and around the Capitol at Washington.

When the civil war began, and even before that time, there arose the necessity for greater revenues. The bill known as the Morrill tariff bill, which was prepared and introduced by him, became one of the most important war measures. He was chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House in the Thirty-ninth Congress, and had charge of legislation for raising revenue during the war. He was chairman of that great committee when I became a member of the Thirty-ninth Congress, and I first met him as the leader of that body in all financial measures. He was elected to the House for six successive terms, covering a period of twelve years. He was then elected to the United States Senate, and took his seat in March, 1867, as the colleague of Senator George F. Edmunds, who was one of the ablest and most distinguished Senators. He became in 1877 chairman of the Committee on Finance, succeeding Senator Sherman, who entered the Cabinet of President Hayes. He was six times elected to the Senate, his last election occurring when he had reached his eighty-seventh year.

Thomas H. Benton served in the United States Senate for thirty consecutive years. Senator MORRILL served nearly forty-four years in the two Houses of Congress, nearly thirty-two years of which were in the Senate. Some writer stated before Senator MORRILL's death that, since the death of Mr. Gladstone, the distinction of being the oldest living statesman of the Anglo-Saxon type clearly belonged to the patriarch of the upper branch of Congress, Senator MORRILL. Mr. President, there was much in the life of this oldest statesman, "this grand old American," to challenge the attention of the world.

I have said he was the author of the war tariff, the great measure under which it became possible for President Lincoln to prosecute to a successful end the greatest war struggle of modern history. He was prominent in establishing the internal-revenue system, and the success attending this measure made possible the national-bank system of the United States.

Senator MORRILL took a great interest in the endowment of the land-grant colleges which have become such an enduring monument to his memory. He pressed to a successful result the measures for the erection and completion of the great building now occupied by the State, War, and Navy Departments, the National Museum building, the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, the enlargement of the Capitol, and more recently of the new Congressional Library. His name in connection with his advocacy of the building of these great public structures gave character to the work and confidence to the public.

Senator MORRILL was an embodiment of American legislative history. He was a contemporary with Sumner, Blaine, Conkling, Morton, Trumbull, Fessenden, Logan, and Thurman. He remained a stalwart worker in the forum of politics after these great and brilliant statesmen had passed away, and he still wore the toga of Senatorial dignity when the death-angel's message came to him.

He was a lisping boy when the war of 1812 began, and a lad of 13 years when the Monroe doctrine was enunciated. He was in Congress when the first Republican candidate for the Presidency, John C. Frémont, was defeated by James Buchanan. He was in active public life several years before the civil war of 1861, and he was a part of the entire Congressional history of the events leading to that war, as well as of the war itself and of the period of reconstruction.

His years of life covered six wars of the United States: The war of 1812, the so-called Black Hawk war of the Northwest, the Seminole Indian wars of Florida, the war with Mexico, the civil war of 1861, and the war with Spain in 1898.

His friends and neighbors were the descendants of Stark and of Ethan Allen. Within a short distance from his home are the historic places of Bennington, of Crown Point, and Ticonderoga, while the wheat fields of Saratoga, Stillwater, and Bemis Heights still grow rank over the resting places of the dead who fell at Burgoyne's defeat. The story of the Green Mountain boys was the lesson of his earliest days, and amid patriotic inspirations the foundations of his life work were laid. Along the course of his career, from his early mercantile life to the call of his people to a seat in Congress at the age of 45 and on to the close of his great public career, his was not the dashing, meteoric sweep of a comet, but rather the steady, peaceful, quiet life of the industrious, useful, worthy, and successful legislator.

He was always a safe, reliable, and conscientious adviser. He was considerate of the views and feelings of his associates and of others. He was a man of strong, stalwart utterances and vigorous expressions. He was fortunate in having a constituency who fully appreciated his high worth, and it has been said of them that he would doubtless have held a seat in the Senate at their hands till he was 100 years of age had his life been prolonged to that time.

The history of the proceedings of the Senate of the United States for a generation bears on every page the honored name of JUSTIN S. MORRILL. No business of importance affecting national legislation or the interest of the country which appears upon our statute books for more than forty years past has failed to receive the careful scrutiny of Senator MORRILL. He could say of the work of the American Congress for nearly half a century, "All of which I saw, and most of which I was."

Senator MORRILL, even to his latest years, gave the most careful attention to current public affairs, and he did not fail to express himself in vigorous and unmistakable terms upon every important subject before the people. There was always a freshness and aptness about his expressive utterances which pleased and entertained his listeners.

But, Mr. President, he could not escape the inevitable fate of man. The activities of his public life could not save him from the effects of time. Day by day, year by year, he continued to move among us in this Chamber, but finally his faltering steps began to show that he had become physically one of the subjects of old age. Time, however, laid his hand upon Senator MORRILL's heart gently. He moved among us, a familiar presence, and to him, more appropriately than to any other Senator, could we apply the lines which Tennyson applied to the Duke of Wellington:

O good gray head which all men know,

O iron nerve to true occasion true,
O fall'n at length that tower of strength
Which stood four-square to all the winds that blew!
Such was he whom we deplore.
The long self-sacrifice of life is o'er.

Always kind, always gentle, the deceased through all his long life had an open palm in almsgiving. In the State and community that gave to him the opportunity to occupy a high place in the eye of the world "none knew him but to love him, none named him but to praise." In the family circle he illustrated the lines of Cowper's "task":

The only amaranthine flow'r on earth
Is virtue; th' only lasting treasure, truth.

In the community in which he lived, in the State of his nativity, in the House of Representatives, in this body which he adorned, in every relation of life in which he was called to act a part, everywhere and under all circumstances, he was respected for his abilities and honored for his virtues. He went to his grave lamented by the whole nation as a Christian gentleman and an able statesman.

Mr. President, I can offer no higher honor and cast no brighter laurel upon the tomb of JUSTIN S. MORRILL than to recall the the apostrophe to Addison, by the author of the Universal Prayer:

Statesman, yet friend to truth! of soul sincere,
In action faithful, and in honor clear!
Who broke no promise, served no private end,
Who gain'd no title, and who lost no friend;
Ennobled by himself, by all approved,
Praised, wept, and honor'd by the muse he loved.

Mr. GORMAN. Mr. President, praise of the lamented MORRILL rises easily to the lips of those who knew him. Of dignified presence, with a manner of infinite courtesy that faithfully prefigured the generous and gentle soul within, a stalwart partisan, but always a gentleman, kind, considerate, helpful, and unselfish, JUSTIN S. MORRILL constituted the most attractive personality, the most gracious and refining influence in this Chamber.

The term of his service—beginning March 4, 1867, and ending only yesterday—covers the most momentous period in our political history. The term of his life covers the most momentous period in the history of the world. As a Senator he saw the reconstruction of the shattered Union. He saw the warring sections reconciled, the scars of a gigantic conflict healed. He saw battlefields slowly robe themselves in smiling harvests; he saw the ferment of a new and nobler patriotism complete its holy work. As an individual he saw steam displace the cumbersome methods of the eighteenth century; he saw New York brought within six days of San Francisco and distant States gathered together more closely than neighboring Vermont villages formerly had been. He saw electricity link continents and nature's once mysterious forces harnessed for man's use.

Since his natal day, April 14, 1810, human liberty has been deepened, broadened, and assured; despotism has entered upon a downward path; enlightenment has ousted ignorance and superstition from their strongholds, and human slavery has been branded with a curse throughout the Christian world. Since then the barriers of caste have been broken down in all the more progressive nations, labor has been lifted from its low estate, and opportunity been put within the reach of merit everywhere. Art, science, commerce, industry, benevolence, statesmanship have advanced—the blessed processes of peace, the exaltation of the human race, the security of life, the protection of property, the individual rights of man—all the agencies of a rational and beneficent civilization have been established on a safe and lasting basis. Born before the inauguration of the Victorian period, during which humanity has experienced its most tremendous progress and development, he lived to see the zenith of that period's amazing glory.

It can not be said of Mr. MORRILL that he was a great man in the sense that Webster, Fessenden, and Collamer were great. He had not the strenuous and dominating qualities of Andrew Jackson, nor the imperious force, the almost inspired aptitude, of Abraham Lincoln. But he was a sturdy, honorable, painstaking, vigilant, and loyal public servant. He yielded nothing where principle and conscience were concerned, though his partisanship and his firmness were so clothed in courtesy that he offended none. He won respect and love where others engendered animosity; yet he was, not less than they, a stalwart, faithful, and uncompromising adherent of the Republican organization—an organization of which he had seen the birth, the adolescence, and the perfected maturity and manhood.

His death leaves a more painful and perceptible void than I can well or adequately picture. He had sat here for more than thirty years, always an image of dignity and grace, always an influence for kindness and nobility. Since March 4, 1867, including those who composed the body at that time, 380 different Senators have occupied seats upon this floor. Only one member of this House was a Senator when Mr. MORRILL entered—the Hon. WILLIAM M. STEWART of Nevada—but his service has not been continuous. The career of him whose virtues we celebrate to-day must be regarded as unique, as much so as his personality, his character, and his influence. He was no preacher, but he taught us by his life the usefulness and beauty of a gentle heart. He showed us how easy it was to be a loyal party man and still hold fast the affection and respect of all.

He died, as he had lived, thinking evil of none and by none reviled or held in disesteem. The years that crowned him with their snows brought also the offerings of veneration and the laurels of a pure renown. He sweetened and enriched the atmosphere in which he moved. He exhaled the spirit of charity and toleration. He was the example of the perfect gentleman—a kindly heart, a helping hand, a fount of generous and noble sympathy. The peace he knew in this life was but a foretaste of the higher and diviner peace that waited for him at the grave.

Mr. THURSTON. Mr. President, dying as he lived, in the simplicity of his faith, honored, respected, and beloved by his countrymen, in the fullness of years, ripe with honors, our colleague passed from us to the great beyond.

Death is not always terrible or sad. Sometimes the broken-hearted mother, bending down to catch the last faint breath from baby lips, is glad to know her child is safe from the troubles, the struggles, and the pitfalls of the coming years. Sometimes the husband as he sees the sudden glory of immortality come into the dimming eyes of his beloved is consoled to know that she has gone to those who wait for her upon the other shore. Sometimes when heroes fall beneath the flag, while yet the flush of glorious victory is on their brows the nation sings a requiem and the world applauds. And always death is beautiful and kind to him who has the harness on, who wears the wreath of rounded efforts, and whose honors are complete.

JUSTIN S. MORRILL served his country and his God for almost four score years and ten. Through all his life he bore a spotless shield. As husband, father, citizen, and statesman he was a shining example to his fellow-men.

To have lived long, neutral, purposeless years is nothing. Old age is not always to be desired. The human vegetable withered at the top and dead at the core is but an object of our pity and regret. But he whose memory we keep retained to the end the full vigor of a masterful intellect and all the kindly impulses of a warm and generous heart.

I know of no grander spectacle in the legislative history of the world than that presented by our colleague in his eighty-ninth year rising to his place in the Senate with a voice that failed him not, and with the vigor of a masterful intellect unimpaired, addressing his countrymen upon the momentous issues which have absorbed our attention during the last eventful year. Even those of us who did not agree with him fully as to the nation's policy and the Republic's destiny listened in breathless reverence and awe, for he spoke with the authority of one who ranked us all in legislative experience, who towered above us all in accomplished statesmanship. And we knew that he spoke from the standpoint of one who had measured the whole height of human ambition, who stood at the close of life, whose sole concern was for posterity, whose only hope was for the permanency of our institutions, and whose abiding faith was in God's providence.

No other man in all the history of our country has so indelibly associated his name with so much of its wisest and best legislation. His was the guiding spirit which shaped the tariff legislation of the United States for an entire generation that marked the most wonderful growth, development, prosperity, and progress the world has ever seen. His ripened experience and wise, conservative counsel, more than that of any other man, directed the financial policy of our country which has kept us on the unshaken foundation of national honesty and honor.

He was the friend and counselor of Lincoln; the associate and peer of all the godlike men who stood with Lincoln in the dark hours of the nation's peril. His heroism in time of public danger was as great as that of those who led the armies of the Republic; his services as valuable as those who won its battles; his work as powerful for his country's weal as that of any whose name is written on the scroll of American fame.

He was born on the mountains, he grew up in the presence of the eternal hills. He inherited the abiding faith, the rugged honesty, the fervent patriotism, the sterling manhood of ancestors who conquered the New England wilderness, who toiled by day and prayed by night; who helped to win American independence, and who put their faith in the civilization of the town meeting, the schoolhouse, and the church of God.

He was the son of a State whose chief product is character— and strength of character and purpose was the one great feature of his public career. He did not win his way by any natural gift of what men call eloquence. The attic bee did not hover on his lips. He convinced men out of the sincerity of his own convictions; by the irresistible logic of his sturdy common sense; by the simplicity and cogency of his presentation. His victories were not over men's hearts, but over men's minds and consciences; and because of this his influence over public opinion was lasting and healthy and helpful. His was the broad conservatism of patriotic thought, patient investigation, and intellectual application. All in all, I have no hesitation in placing him among the truly great, among those who have left lasting impressions for the good of mankind.

It was his good fortune to be in the Congress of the United States in the supreme crisis of our national affairs. He saw the stars go out of the flag; he helped to win them back. He was of those who gave freedom to a race, who made the flag of the Union the flag of liberty. He was of those who said with Grant, "Let us have peace." He was of those who extended the hand of friendship and fellowship to the brave men who yielded to the arbitrament of war. And, thank God, it was his happiness to remain in the Congress of the United States to welcome that glorious time of absolute reconciliation and reunion that came in all its fullness when the veterans and the sons of veterans from North and South marched gladly out under the one flag, keeping step to the mingled strains of Dixie and Yankee Doodle, carrying the salvation of a great and powerful people to the downtrodden and oppressed beyond the seas.

Mr. President, in front of the State capitol of Vermont there stands a godlike statue, carved from the imperishable granite of her green-clad hills. The strong right hand grasps a sword that leaped from its scabbard for daring leadership in desperate times. And gazing on the noble face one can almost hear the stern lips demanding the immediate surrender of old Ticonderoga "in the name of the great Jehovah and the Continental Congress." Side by side with that heroic figure I would have the dear old State that gave me birth place another granite form, clad in no martial garb, decked in no warlike trappings, with face uplifted and eyes serene, the outstretched hand upon the Constitution of the United States. There let them stand together, challenging forever the admiration of mankind. Hero and statesman, the best embodiments of liberty's achievements in war and peace—Ethan Allen and JUSTIN S. MORRILL.

Mr. PROCTOR. Mr. President, Senator MORRILL had the unique distinction of a longer continuous service in the Senate of the United States and in Congress than any other man. For thirty-two years, lacking two months and four days, he represented his State in this body, and for nearly forty-four years, or exactly two-fifths of its entire constitutional existence, he was continuously a member of one or the other House of Congress. Born only twenty-one years after the first inauguration of George Washington, when, by analogy, the nation was just completing its minority, the beginning of his life was contemporaneous with that of the mature life of the Republic itself. He was five years older than Bismarck and only three months younger than Gladstone, each the most distinguished veteran of his own country, but he was spared to years of active service after they had retired, and survived them both.

On the 4th of March, 1897, when Senator MORRILL began his sixth full term in this body, he lacked but one month and ten days of being 87 years old. It is permitted to few to live so many years and to few of those to continue in active life. Yet the people of Vermont never considered his retirement. If his noble life had been spared to the end of his term, and he himself had not forbade it, he would have been elected to his seventh term just as heartily. Long ago, by tacit consent, the people of my State resolved to make him a life Senator, and they never wavered in that purpose.

Though we dwell with pardonable pride upon the length of his public service and the fullness of his years, they derive their chief significance from the character of that service rather than the measure of that life. Judged by any standard, he was a remarkable man; calm in judgment, wise in counsel, serene amidst strife. His death, at nearly a score of years beyond the allotted life of man, is an irreparable loss to the country, and especially to the Senate, which he so long adorned.

Though he belonged to the whole nation, Vermont in a peculiar sense claimed him as her own. He not only long and faithfully represented her in the national councils, but he was truly typical of the plain virtues and sturdy sense of her people. His antecedents and his education and opportunities were as good and no better than those of the average Vermonter. He spent his whole life, except about two years, and while absent in the public service, in the small country town in which he was born, in a village which the railway has not yet reached. Schooled politically only in that great political university, the New England town meeting, without ever having held an office higher than justice of the peace, he was at the age of 45 years first chosen by the people of his district as their Representative in Congress. He was chosen because he was so truly representative of the great body of his constituency. Though he grew mightily in wisdom, and his wonderful talents and traits of character were greatly ripened by many years of public service, Vermonters love to think that, however great may have been the measure of his character, in kind at least, even unto the end, he was a typical Vermonter. "His name and virtues," said President Buckham in his funeral sermon at Montpelier, "will be cherished in the affectionate memory of the people of Vermont as long as they continue in the pious belief that God's greatest gift to the people of His care is a wise and good man."

One of the first votes that I ever cast was for Senator MORRILL for Representative in Congress. Once it was my privilege to sign his Senatorial credentials. During the many years that I was one of his constituents, as well as the few years during which I have had the honor to be his colleague, he was to me a true friend. To say that I deeply admired him would be but to say that I am an American; to say that I loved him, that I am a Vermonter.

Of his public service others have spoken more fittingly than I could hope to do. They are a part of the public history of our country for more than forty years. As a member of the Committee on Finance, and long its chairman, he exerted a powerful influence upon all financial legislation. For the maintenance of a sound monetary system he was a tireless champion. For his eminent services in connection with the resumption of specie payment the country owes him a large debt of gratitude. Mr. Knox, then Comptroller of the Currency, once remarked that without his powerful cooperation it could hardly have been accomplished at that time.

Any one of the numerous measures originated and successfully advocated by him would be a sufficient basis for enduring fame. His name is permanently connected with the tariff act of 1860, which has been the model for all subsequent tariff legislation except the Wilson bill of 1894. Whatever may be thought of the wisdom of protection as a continuing system, all must admit that the Morrill act of 1861 was well suited to the exigencies of the occasion then existing, both as a stimulus to home production and for revenue.

In everything that pertained to the city of Washington, and especially to its public buildings, Senator MORRILL took an active interest. He was himself a man of plain and simple tastes, and he would have had the functions of government conducted in a plain and simple manner. It did not lead him, however, into narrowness of view or niggardly economy. He favored public buildings suited to the necessities of their service, and architecturally worthy of our great nation. Though he did not receive a liberal education in his younger days, he was self-educated in the learning of books and a great lover of them. He early saw the necessities of the Congressional Library, and that beautiful structure, so wonderfully adapted to its purpose, and the pride of the whole country, was his conception and owes much to his persistent and intelligent support. It is worthy of notice that his last public utterance in this Chamber was in favor of a suitable building for the Supreme Court.

But the "land-grant act" of 1862, of which Senator MORRILL was the author, is perhaps even more distinctive of the man. The institutions established thereunder have been more commonly known as agricultural colleges, but the purpose of the law and its results are much broader. Its object was declared in the law itself to be "to teach such branches of learning as are related to agriculture and the mechanic arts, in order to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions of life." It was the beginning of the great movement of these later years toward a higher practical education. Such a measure brought forward at such a time is a wonderful example of the breadth and far-seeing statesmanship of its author.

At a time when the nation was engaged in a death struggle which many thought it could not survive, while at the head of the most important committee of the House of Representatives and immediately charged with the complicated problem of raising revenues to carry on that struggle, he calmly and peacefully looked forward and prepared to lay the foundation for the practical betterment of the people in peaceful pursuits—to give to the great industrial classes to which he belonged an opportunity for a higher education, of which he had been deprived. The colleges which were thus instituted and which are still flourishing are to-day powerful factors in the education of the youth of this country. They now have buildings and other property valued at $25,500,775.63, and are educating upward of 14,000 students.

Although he was a constructive legislator, I am not sure but that his greatest public service was the quiet influence which he exerted for good upon all legislation during his long Congressional career. Without him how much the whole course of our legislation during all these years would have lost no man can estimate. The impress of his character has touched it at every point.

His was a life not only successful and beneficent in the largest sense, but it was also beautifully complete in its symmetry. Great as he was intellectually, he was morally greater. He devoted himself to the pursuit of that which is good and pure, and from the good and pure, as God gave him to see them, no man could divert him. His motives were always high, and yet his methods were not theoretical, but practical. During forty-four years of active political life he was never touched by a breath of suspicion. Nor were his virtues of the cold and stern character which has sometimes been thought to be the Puritan type.

One of the most marked attributes of his character was his gracious courtesy on all occasions to all people. The humblest citizen and we, his colleagues, were equally the recipients of his unflinching kindness and courtesy. His face, which was so beautifully expressive of his inner soul, was a perpetual benediction to all. He was a man of positive convictions and tenacious in the advocacy and defense of them, but always with proper respect and consideration for the opinions of others. He participated actively in the House of Representatives in those stirring debates which preceded the civil war, and his name is permanently connected with the protective-tariff system which during the last thirty years has been the chief subject of political contention, and yet he never descended into the arena of angry strife, and I never knew even a political opponent to say an unkind thing of him. He was by nature as gentle as he was great.

He was peculiarly happy and fortunate in his family life, and his homes in Vermont and in this city were always hospitably open to his friends. The annual gathering on the anniversary of his birthday had become a notable feature of Washington life. Not only were there present those distinguished officially, but in every walk of life. On such an occasion, in 1896, R. L. B. Clark, a brother of Grace Greenwood, read a short poem in honor of Mr.

MORRILL's eighty-sixth birthday, which so truly characterizes him that I can not do better than reproduce it at this time:

Calm and serene, yet full of native vim;
Bold in his acts, unknowing how to trim;
Strong in his purpose, but each purpose just;
True to his friends and faithful to each trust;
Broad in his views, and deep as he is broad;
Honest in all things, and detesting fraud;
As Hampden, eloquent in his country's cause;
As Solon, wise in formulating laws;
Loving and loyal, and by all beloved;
By man applauded, and by God approved;
Age addeth wisdom—years new vigor give;
Long may the statesman and the patriot live.
Like a tall pine on some green mountain crest,
Lifting its form in loving verdure dressed,
High in the Senate—at his country's call
He stands, the noblest Roman of them all!

Vermont has lost her greatest citizen and most honored servant and all her people a personal friend. There is sorrow at every hearthstone in the State he loved so well. The country, too, has lost a wise and most useful statesman. His colleagues in this Hall will miss his able counsel and kindly presence. But the memory of his noble life will long be cherished by a grateful people, and will ever exert a restraining and uplifting influence in public life.

It came to my knowledge since these remarks were prepared that the following lines were found after Senator MORRILL's death, written in pencil, in his own hand, on a slip of paper in a memorandum book in his pocket. How true was his life to the injunction of the last sentence:

Thee, on thy mother's knees, a new-born child,
In tears we saw, when all around thee smiled.
So live, that sinking in thy last long sleep
Smiles may be thine, when all around thee weep.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the report made by the Official Reporters of the funeral in the Senate Chamber, Saturday, December 31, 1898, and the report of the funeral service held at Montpelier, Vt., January 2, 1899, be embodied with the report of these addresses.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and it is granted.

Mr. PROCTOR. I ask for the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to; and the Senate (at 3 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 23, 1899, at 12 o'clock m.

APPENDIX.

Saturday, December 31, 1898.

FUNERAL OF SENATOR JUSTIN S. MORRILL.

The funeral arrangements were in charge of the officers of the Senate and a committee on the part of the two Houses, consisting of Senators PROCTOR, HOAR, CULLOM, WOLCOTT, JONES of Arkansas, CHANDLER, GORMAN, TILLMAN, JONES of Nevada, MORGAN, FAIRBANKS, FAULKNER, MITCHELL, and NELSON; and Representatives Dingley, GROUT, POWERS, HITT, FOSS, MCCALL, BANKHEAD, LEWIS, WHEELER, and CATCHINGS.

[Representative Dingley was prevented by illness from attending, and Representative WHEELER was not able to reach the city in time.]

The casket containing the remains of the deceased Senator was brought into the Senate Chamber before the hour appointed for the services.

The Senators assembled in their Chamber at 12 o'clock m., and the members of the House of Representatives were escorted to the seats on the floor provided for them.

They were soon followed by the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the members of the diplomatic corps, and the President and his Cabinet ministers, who were respectively escorted to the seats assigned them on the floor of the Senate Chamber.

The members of the family and friends of the deceased Senator were also provided with seats on the floor.

The hymn "Lead, Kindly Light" was sung by the quartette of All Souls' Church, composed of Mrs. H. Clay Browning, soprano; Mrs. James F. Oyster, contralto; Mr. Frederick Knoop, tenor, and Mr. J. Henry Kaiser, basso.

Appropriate selections from the burial service of the Unitarian Church were read by Rev. E. Bradford Leavitt, pastor of All Souls' Church, Washington.

The hymn "I am a Pilgrim and I am a Stranger" was sung by the quartette.

Rev. E. Bradford Leavitt spoke as follows:

In moments of deepest emotion we are instinctively silent. We stand in hushed admiration before the wonders of a Yosemite, a Milan cathedral, a Madonna of Raphael. We listen to a Beethoven symphony, see a glorious sunset-touch, look through a telescope at Saturn swinging on his distant way, or through a microscope at the wondrous world in a drop of water, and "all the babel of earth's voices dies in hushed stillness" while we pay the tribute of our highest eloquence—the eloquence of silence.

What shall we say, then, when we come as we do here to-day to pay our tribute of love and respect to the memory of a great and good man; when we sit in the presence of this noble life, as it comes up before us, with its long years of glorious achievement; when we realize how much superior is a man to a mountain, to a world—because he thinks the mountain and weighs the stars; when we remember, too, what sort of man this was—how, then, shall our poor words serve us when we would do his memory honor? Better confess it hopeless at the very start. The power, the grandeur, the sublimity, the beauty, the sweetness of a noble human life can not be set down in words—no, not by the very poets and prophets among us. "The unwritten, unspoken, unexpressed part of life is always by far the greater part."

As the disciple says in the very last words of his life of the Master, "There are also many other things which Jesus did," implying by that, of course, that this life of Jesus was far greater than just his description of it—just these few quotations and anecdotes. We all know, you and I, that this is true of every man's life. Having read the biography, having studied the habits of a man's mind and what we could find of his works, even then we know right well that the man was more than all these. "Back and behind all that men see us do or hear us say or hear others say of us are the 'many other things also,' and by these very largely men judge us, and by these God judges us entirely. Reputation is what men see and know of us, and it is passing; character is what God sees and knows of us, and it is eternal."

So—

I will not mock thee with the poor world's common and heartless phrase,
Nor wrong the memory of a sainted brother with idle praise.
With silence only as their benediction, God's angels come,
Where, in the shadow of a great affliction, the soul sits dumb.

But were I to attempt the impossible; were I to try to picture to you who knew him well something of the strength and beauty of this man's life and character, I would speak not of the great public servant, the wise lawgiver, the true politician. I would even pass over (for all men know it well) that splendid half century, almost, of public service here, in which he won the respect and admiration not only of his State, but of the whole nation, and became loved as it is given few men to be loved. I would but refer in passing to the great things he has accomplished in these legislative halls for this city and for this nation—as noble a record as ever man made. And, bewildered by the very superabundance of my material, I would pass over all this, which alone would make any man a great man, just to refer for a moment to the still greater things which made this great man good; for the simplest, yet highest, praise we can give a fellow-being is his—he was a good man.

Many a man can be great at intervals—when he is leading an army, delivering a speech in the forum, when he is up on the mountain and the people are looking up to him as one transfigured—but it is only the very greatest of men who can come down from the mountain into the daily duties and petty worries of the work a day world and be great there. That is the truly sublime test of a man's character. There at the foot of the mountain comes the most terrible temptation, and you find out what he really is. Humanity is never so weak and unnerved as after some tremendous effort of heroism or goodness; the man whose will was iron, whose brain was a map of a battlefield, who rode among shells and bullets as though among the falling fruit of his own orchard—this man, after the battle, succumbs to the pettiest weakness.

Among the greatest orators that these walls have ever heard have been men trivially incompetent to take care of their affairs or to rule their appetites. They have climbed the very highest mountain peak, but they came down tired, fretful, unstrung, and the common task, the ordinary demands of life, were too much for them. Take the soldier from his battlefield, the lawyer from the forum, the orator from the Senate—bring any man down from his mountain, where he has shone as a very god, down where the small duty, the commonplace task, waits to be done, and see what will happen. That is the supreme test. And so we should go into the great man's home—see him at the foot of the mountain as well as upon the top. Is he then the unaffected, unselfish, modest man? That, it seems to me, is the decisive thing in any man's life; that is the terrible trial of great men.

And yet, friends, that was where this man's life was supremely great. He was not only a great Senator; he was a greater man, a man who won men's hearts, and by his childlike, unassuming gentleness and grace charmed even his political opponents into open admiration. I can not say his enemies, for he had no enemies. Did he ever say an unkind word of any man? Has any man ever said an unkind word of him? We have not heard of it. What a beautiful commentary on his life! Proud Vermont! How idle the attempt to eulogize your son. 'Tis simple truth to say here was an ideal American, a grand old man—America's grand old man—example of civic virtue and integrity, pattern for our young men in the office and in the home, a vision of splendid promise of yet grander things to come in the ever upward and onward life of this great Republic!

A poem recited at Mrs. Morrill's funeral:

MY DEAD.

I can not think of them as dead
Who walk with me no more;
Along the path of life I tread
They have but gone before.

The Father's house is mansioned fair
Beyond my vision dim:
All souls are His, and here and there
Are living unto Him.

And still their silent ministry
Within my heart hath place,
As when on earth they walked with me
And met me face to face.

Their lives are made forever mine;
What they to me have been
Hath left henceforth its seal and sign
Engraven deep within.

Mine are they by an ownership
Nor time nor death can free;
For God hath given to love to keep Its own eternally.

—F. L. Hosmer.

Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D., Chaplain to the Senate, offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

O Thou with whom doth rest the souls of all those Thy servants that have departed this life in Thy faith and fear, we come into Thy presence this day and in this place with a song of faith and thanksgiving, not overwhelmed with sorrow, not shut in by the darkness of hopelessness and despair, but with joy in the faith of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ and the knowledge He hath brought us of everlasting life at Thy right hand. So, as we stand in the presence of this coffin, we raise our thanksgiving to Thee. Ashes to ashes, dust to dust; but the spirit has returned unto God, who gave it.

We know the records of a noble life; of a life dedicated to home, to neighbors, to native State, to the nation, to all with whom he came in contact, whether in public places or in private; a sweet, gracious, gentle man; a man who was to all who knew him as a light shining in a dark place, as a staff which men could lean upon with security, as a power that all could trust. We bless Thee for this benignant life; this life of use and service; this life so simple, yet so sublime; the life of work, of speech, of silence; the life that mastered obstacles and that wrought here on the plane of the dust as though it were above the firmament. We bless Thee for this gracious, benignant, useful, and noble life.

And now we recognize that as the machine was well-nigh worn out the spirit longed for other and higher climes, climes in which were gathered the beloved and the blessed of earlier years, with the companion of so much of life gone before a little earlier. So he has gathered up his feet in our sight and given the world the benediction of his influence and example, and we are to lay away the mortal part, and be sure that the immortal is with God, the Father and the blessed of all times. Let the benediction of Thy consolation be upon his son and upon the sister and upon all related to or connected with him, our friend. And let Thy blessing be upon all of us who have walked in the light of his example and influence.

Grant Thy grace unto Thine honored and beloved servants, the President and Vice-President of the United States, the Chief Justice and other justices of the Supreme Court, the members of the Cabinet and the Senate and House of Representatives, and all who are engaged in the public concerns of the nation. And may all the people of the land take knowledge of this illustrious character and of the means by which his illustrious station was gained—simplicity, honesty, honor, devotion to the best interests of the land, walking in the light of the fear and the love of God, in the love of his fellow-men. And so may we walk this path of human life until the everlasting life, through Jesus Christ our Lord and Saviour. Unto Him that is able to do exceeding and abundantly, above all that we ask or seek, according to the power that worketh in us. To Him be glory throughout all ages, world without end. Amen.

The quartette sang the hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee."

MEMORIAL SERVICE AT MONTPELIER, VT., MONDAY, JANUARY 2, 1899.

Vermont honored the memory of her illustrious son in most impressive obsequies at the capital of the Green Mountain State on the second day of the new year. Her tribute of esteem and respect was no lip service, but sincere and heartfelt sorrow over the loss she had suffered in the death of JUSTIN S. MORRILL. Here, among the hills of his native State and under the blue canopy of heaven, his remains and those of his beloved wife were tenderly consigned to rest. It was a memorable day in the history of Vermont, and the presence at the funeral as mourners of men of national distinction and of hundreds of representative Vermonters who had been friends and admirers of Mr. MORRILL was silent but eloquent testimony to the life and character of Mr. MORRILL.

The city of Montpelier, through its mayor, city council, and board of trade, made complete and proper arrangements for the memorial occasion. Committees were appointed as follows:

General committee: Sergeant-at-arms, T. C. Phinney, H. A. Huse, A. J. Sibley, Arthur D. Farwell, C. A. G. Jackson, and H. W. Kemp.

Statehouse committee: A. D. Farwell, A. J. Sibley, George O. Stratton, J. W. Brock, W. C. Berry, L. B. Brooks, L. H. Greene, C. F. Lowe, J. T. Sabin, J. M. Boutwell, George L. Blanchard, F. M. Puffer, C. P. Pitkin, T. Marvin, S. S. Ballard, Samuel Moss, J. W. Peck, C. C. Pierce, W. G. Andrews, W. T. Dewey, M. E. Smilie, Joseph Morse, C. H. Heaton, Levi H. Bixby, George Leslie, George E. White.

Reception committee: Mayor John H. Senter, Fred Blanchard, president of the board of aldermen; W. E. Adams, president of the board of trade; J. W. Brock, B. F. Fifield, L. B. Cross, Fred A. Howland.

Committee on military escort: Col. O. D. Clark, Thomas Marvin, Capt. W. A. Pattee.

Decorations: C. P. Pitkin, A. C. Blanchard, W. S. Hudson, F. H. Puffer, C. B. Roberts.

Music: T. R. Merrill, C. P. Pitkin, J. G. Brown.

The 2d day of January dawned bright and cold. A mantle of snow covered the earth and brought into stronger relief the decorations and emblems of mourning on every hand in honor of the dead.

The early morning train brought the remains from Washington, accompanied by the bereaved family and relatives and the distinguished honorary escort, consisting of Senator REDFIELD PROCTOR, of Vermont; Senator CHARLES J. FAULKNER, of West Virginia; Senator J. L. MITCHELL, of Wisconsin; Senator KNUTE NELSON, of Minnesota; Senator WILLIAM E. CHANDLER, of New Hampshire; Senator BENJAMIN R. TILLMAN, of South Carolina, and Senator CHARLES W. FAIRBANKS, of Indiana. Also, Congressman H. H. POWERS, of Vermont; Congressman GEORGE EDMUND FOSS, of Illinois; Congressman JOHN J. BANKHEAD, of Alabama, and Congressman JAMES H. LEWIS, of Washington. The funeral train was in charge of Col. R. J. Bright, the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate. Accompanying the party were also Mr. Benjamin Durfee, for twenty-three years an attaché of the Finance Committee and the Senator's confidential adviser; Mr. G. M. Taylor, messenger of the Finance Committee, and Rev. E. Bradford Leavitt, Mr. MORRILL's pastor.

The family relatives who accompanied the remains were James S. Morrill, son of the Senator; Miss Louise Swan, sister of Mrs. Morrill; Dr. Swan, and Mrs. J. H. Baxter, a close family friend.

Other relatives present were Senator MORRILL's two brothers, Dr. Wilbur F. Morrill, of New Albany, Ind., 73 years of age, and Sidney Smith Morrill, of Fulton, N. Y., 83 years old, and son Jesse; also Amos Morrill and Henry Morrill, of Strafford; Col. B. B. Smalley, Mrs. Smalley, and Miss Carrie Smalley and Miss Frances Baxter, of Burlington.

From 9.30 until 12.30 the remains of the deceased Senator were allowed to lie in state in the upper lobby. The casket was placed under a canopy of black and white. Several wreaths lay about the edge of the bier and on the coffin. It is estimated 2,000 people viewed the remains. The face of the dead statesman looked very calm and peaceful.

Many private residences displayed emblems of mourning. The National Life and the Vermont Mutual Fire Insurance and the Federal buildings were draped with long black streamers. Over the gate at the entrance of the statehouse grounds was a heavy evergreen arch, surmounted by the State coat of arms draped with crape. The flag on the statehouse was at half mast, and over the main doorway were festooned the State and National flags, caught back by bands of black.

The central portion of representatives' hall, in front of the speaker's desk, was a veritable conservatory of rare exotics and artistic floral emblems. Among them were the State coat of arms surrounded by roses, violets, carnations, Roman hyacinths, lilies of the valley, and asparagus leaves from the city of Montpelier; a wreath of orchids, roses, lilies, ivy, and palms from President and Mrs. McKinley; a large wreath of American Beauty and Golden Gate roses and galax leaves from the United States Senate; a very elaborate piece composed largely of roses and tied with white silk ribbon of American manufacture, embroidered in gold, from the Silk Association of America; a large cluster of white roses from Senator and Mrs. Proctor; a cluster of orchids from the venerable William R. Smith, superintendent of the Botanic Gardens at Washington; a cluster of roses from Senator ALLISON; a holly wreath from Hon. John A. Kasson; a cluster of roses from Senator and Mrs. Hale; a wreath from Mrs. Senator Chandler; orchids from Mrs. Dr. Baxter; orchids and galax leaves from Mrs.

Senator Hearst, and handsome floral pieces from Mrs. Senator Stanford and others.

Representatives' hall was decorated in excellent taste with festoons of black caught up on the front of the gallery and over the windows by rosettes of white.

When the hour for the memorial service arrived, there was assembled in representatives' hall a more distinguished company than had ever before been seen under the dome of the statehouse. The Congressional delegation mentioned previously occupied the chairs at the right of the speaker's desk. Each member wore the regulation mourning, consisting of a long white sash and white gloves. The relatives of the late Senator, elsewhere named, were seated in the body of the hall. They were in charge of Hon. B. F. Fifield. On the left of the speaker's chair were Governor Edward C. Smith, Lieutenant-Governor H. C. Bates, Speaker Kittredge Haskins, Secretary of State F. A. Howland, State Treasurer John L. Bacon, State Auditor O. M. Barber, Hon. W. W. Stickney, Hon. F. S. Stranahan, Hon. N. W. Fisk, Dr. W. Seward Webb, Mr. Percival W. Clement, and ex-Governor William P. Dillingham and Hons. G. G. Benedict, Elias Lyman, Robert Roberts, and Cassius Peck, of the board of trustees of the University of Vermont; Treasurer E. H. Powell and Profs. J. L. Hills and H. A. Storrs.

Other prominent Vermonters present were ex-Governors John W. Stewart, George W. Hendee, Samuel E. Pingree, Carroll S. Page, E. J. Ormsbee; Gen. John G. McCullough, Collector Olin Merrill, Collector Z. M. Mansur, Gen. Julius J. Estey, Hon. Levant M. Read, Hon. Henry C. Ide, Judge J. W. Rowell, Judge J. M. Tyler, C. M. Wilds, esq., Mayor John H. Senter, of Montpelier, and the committee of arrangements.

A double quartette, consisting of A. J. Phillips, Charles F. Lowe, B. M. Shepard, George Knapp, Mrs. Frank H. Puffer, Mrs. F. I. Pitkin, Miss Anna Phinney, and Miss Folsom, sang that old and familiar hymn, "Nearer, my God, to Thee," in an effective manner. President Buckham read appropriate selections from the Scriptures and offered prayer. He then delivered the following able and eloquent sermon:

PRESIDENT BUCKHAM'S SERMON.

This day is for Vermont a day of sadness; it is also a day of pride. In this great nation of ours—theater of great events, of events ever greater and greater—on every day somewhere a great event takes place which draws to it the eyes of all the nation. To-day Vermont, geographically small, in all her history humanly great, bespeaks and receives the respectful and affectionate attention of our whole people. To-day this entire nation is sympathetic with our sorrow—is sympathetic also with our pride. Tell me, you who have come from many and distant States to mingle your memories and tears with ours to-day, you who have seen him sitting among the elders and the wise men of our land, himself the most venerable and peer of the wisest among them; tell me if the State which gave him to you and to the country does not deserve at once the respectful sorrow and the tearful congratulations of our whole nation because of one whom she loses henceforth from among her living sons, but who is still to be a vital part of her dearest and most cherished life forevermore.

It has been often said, and will be said often again, that Mr. MORRILL was a typical Vermonter, and it may be added, I trust without offense, that because he was a typical Vermonter he was the remarkable man he was. To say this is not invidious or disparaging toward remarkable men typical of other States. Our generous and resourceful American blood breeds many types of American manhood all equally American and all claiming and deserving the admiration of all Americans without stint or envy. Neither does this statement mean that our Commonwealth has, by one supreme effort, produced one man in whom all our virtues are gathered and has therein spent her energies and can henceforth produce only men of mediocre quality. Vermont has had in the past, has to-day, and we trust will continue to have, many sons who fairly typify her public and private virtues.

But the Vermont type has been so often misunderstood and misrepresented that it is gratifying to a pardonable State pride to be able to present it to the world in such a man as Mr. MORRILL; to be able to say, one typical Vermonter is a man born of plain parents in a country village; receiving limited educational advantages, but displaying an insatiable thirst for knowledge and indomitable energy in acquiring it; reading widely in the works of the great master statesmen of the formative and critical periods of our history; adding thereto as leisure afforded—leisure stolen from sleep—the best literature in the English language; schooled in political discussion in that primary parliament, progenitor of all Anglo-Saxon legislatures, which debates grave questions of state at the country tavern or store, or in the churchyard of a Sunday afternoon; gaining the respect of his neighbors as having the superior qualities which plain men appreciate and admire and trust, and therefore their man to send to Congress when the time came; as Representative first, then as Senator, industrious, studious of great questions, especially in the domain of finance, wherein he became an acknowledged master; sound in judgment, judicial rather than brilliant; not eloquent in speech and yet conciliatory and persuasive, relieving a dry financial statement or turning the tables on an opponent in debate by a sally of good-humored wit, learned of his shrewd country neighbors; always courteous, a good party man, but respected by his political opponents, between whom and himself there is on record not a single angry word during all his long career; in presence remarkably commanding and attractive; hospitable in his home, genial as a companion, faithful as a friend; blameless and pure and high-minded in all the relations of life. But I stop, lest you should think that I am drawing an ideal picture, instead of giving you the portrait of the man as he was.

And yet every one of you who knew him will corroborate every word of the description, and will upbraid me rather for my omission than for my excess. But what right have I to say along with all this that he was a typical Vermonter? Perhaps, in addition to other reasons, the best is that, although he was a broad-minded American, who claimed every part of the country as his own, and deemed no remotest corner of it alien to him, he loved and cherished in his heart of hearts the green hills and woods and streams of his native State, her homes and schools, her heroes and heroines, and not least the plain men and women, whose admiration and love and trust were, as he well knew, the source whence all his honors came.

If, in this rapid enumeration of admirable and noble qualities, anything were missed for the equipment of an American statesman, it might be that special high breeding of intellect and taste which comes with liberal culture. But in men of native refinement there is often seen this beautiful compensation—that the consciousness of this lack and the modesty and deference and idealism it breeds are almost an equivalent for the omitted culture. The lack of it was not conspicuously felt in Mr. MORRILL. Few men, without the training of the schools, have absorbed so much of the spirit of learning and letters, from books, from the society of cultivated men and women, from the study of great national and cosmopolitan questions.

No man ever knew him to betray a morbid sensitiveness of deficiency by underrating the value of training in others. But a certain sense of lack he certainly had, and the outworking of this feeling and the expression of it to the world is at once a most beautiful manifestation of the fine spirit of the man, and the most characteristic, the most far-reaching, and the most enduring of his public acts. I mean the incorporation and endowment of the land-grant colleges. It seems strange to us now, looking back, that it was not given to some one of the many men of light and leading in Congress or elsewhere, someone who had drunk deeply of the world's lore in the universities of our own and other countries, to conceive of this plan of national provision for the less favored of his countrymen—that this noble project was reserved for one who had wrought it out of his own sense of deprivation and need.

But even so, it is well. It is well that in all our broad land—in Oklahoma and New Mexico as well as in New York and Ohio—every young man who aspires to that higher knowledge whereby his calling is made more fruitful and his life enriched should see the kindly hand of his nation's Government stretched out to aid him, because a Vermonter, remembering how hard it was to struggle alone in the quest of knowledge, had pleaded with that Government to make this quest easier for every young man who should come after him. Mr. MORRILL rendered many services to his country for which his name will long be held in remembrance, but his most lasting fame and the most endearing remembrance of him will connect themselves with those most significant and weighty words in which the act of 1863 makes provision for the "liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the various pursuits and professions in life."

Of Mr. MORRILL as a statesman, and of his services to the nation in the field of politics, this is not the fitting time to speak at large. On other occasions and by more competent speakers ample justice will no doubt be done him in these relations. But I shall fear no contradiction in saying that in all the most significant and most fruitful work of the National Legislature for more than a generation past Mr. MORRILL has had a conspicuous and effective and most honorable share, and that if his contribution to good legislation had not been made, or, let me say, if Vermont had been represented in Congress by a man less wise and less influential, the general course of legislation would have suffered a distinct loss of soundness and wisdom.

The matter is put in this way because, I believe, subject to advisement, that Mr. MORRILL's statesmanship did not assert itself in tours de force, in persistent and aggressive action, but in diffusing all through the legislative atmosphere, so to speak, the mild and calm wisdom of which his face and his whole personality was so beautiful an expression. Not that he lacked the power of initiative or of resistance. His finance measures, his college bill, his projects for the improvement of the Capitol building, showed the one; his attitude on currency questions, on Hawaii, and on the power of the House in treaties showed the other. But speaking generally, and especially of his later years, it may be said that it was Mr. MORRILL's recognized wisdom, the weight of his opinion, respect for his character, which made him the impressive and commanding personality he was in the Senate.

And this brings me to say, what is always the last and best thing to say of any man, when we can say it truthfully, and what all our hearts have been saying all these years in which we have known Mr. MORRILL, that he is greatest and best and dearest to us as a man. This is, I suspect, at the bottom of what we mean when we say of him that he was a genuine Vermonter. We love to think that the virtues we see in him are our own virtues in their finest form, and we admire and love their aggregation and incarnation in him. His simplicity, his gentleness, his fondness for the society of plain people, his love of home and neighbors and friends, his homely speech, his mother wit, the utter absence of affectation or ostentation, his plain living amid the pageantry of the capital, his thorough goodness and kindness of heart, that he was not like many public men, lofty and sour to one and sweet as summer to another—but genial, gracious, natural, frank with all; that with these amiable virtues, he combined a Roman fortitude, a prophet's love of righteousness, a Puritan integrity of conscience, and a Christian's self-sacrifice.

These qualities make up the man who was loved, and is to-day wept for by many who are thought to be incapable of love or tears; this is the man who, perhaps more than any other man of his generation in Vermont, will be missed and mourned in private homes, both high and lowly, all over the State; who will be remembered in family prayers and in the pulpits on Sunday, whose kindly face, perhaps in some poor print, will long be kept on the wall of the living room in humble homes; who will be held up as an example to young men of honorable ambition and of probity in the public service, well rewarded by the people; whose name and virtues will be cherished in the affectionate memory of the people of Vermont as long as they continue in the pious belief that God's greatest gift to the people of His care is a wise and good man.

We bring to-day, also, our respectful tribute to the memory of her whose body lies by the side of the Senator's, in death not long divided from him. Mrs. Morrill's life was not passed much in public view, and therefore does not properly lend itself to public remark. But such a life may have a public value of the highest order by enhancing the effectiveness of the public life to which it ministers. Those who have best known her testify that the companionship of Mrs. Morrill imparted in large to her husband that suavity, serenity, and refinement which added a powerful charm to his virtue and strength. We all owe her more than we can ever know; let us mingle gratitude with our tender farewell.

Voicing, as I have tried to do, the sentiments of the people of Vermont toward our illustrious dead, I may not apologize for what may seem to others a too provincial and domestic view of Mr. MORRILL's person and career. Our people claim for this day at least the luxury of sorrow over a personal bereavement. Mr. MORRILL belongs to the nation, and hereafter in Senatorial and other eulogy he will be claimed by and for the entire nation. But to-day he is brought back to rest with us—to be gathered to his fathers—to sleep by the side of his kindred and of the neighbors he loved. His good deeds are part of the national heritage; his birthplace, his resting place, his honored dust, his personal example, his good name, his memory, are Vermont's own.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 22, 1899.

The House met at 12 o'clock m.

The Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN, offered the following prayer:

O Thou who hast ever been our refuge and our strength, our inspiration and our guide, we lift up our hearts to Thee in gratitude and love for our Republic and all of its sacred institutions, for that host of patriots who, by their sacrifices, their deeds and heroism, made it possible. And our hearts and our love, as true and loyal sons, turn backward to-day in grateful memory to pay a tribute of respect to him whom we delight to call the Father of his Country; whose deeds will be always a true light to all lovers of liberty; whose life will be an inspiration to high and noble citizenship. And thus may our country live and grow in all that makes a nation great. And to Thee, O Lord, who maketh the nations and guideth their destiny, we will give praise for evermore. In Christ's name. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

WASHINGTON'S FAREWELL ADDRESS.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, before the House proceeds with its regular business, I ask unanimous consent that there be read at the Clerk's desk the Farewell Address of President Washington. There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. Before the Clerk proceeds with the reading, members will take their seats and the House will come to order, so that the address may be properly heard. The Chair will try (and he hopes the House will sustain him in the effort) to maintain order during the whole time of the reading.

The Address (which will be found in the Senate proceedings of to-day) was read. At the conclusion of the reading there was loud applause.

LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I desire to submit a privileged report. I send to the desk the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill (H. R. 11414) making appropriations for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900. I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the report be dispensed with and that in lieu thereof the statement of the House conferees be read.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the statement, as follows:

The managers on the part of the House of the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11414) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1900 submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon and recommended in the accompanying conference report, namely:

On Nos. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, and 8, relating to the Senate: Appropriates $1,000 instead of $1,440 for 1 messenger as assistant librarian, for 1 laborer at $1,000 in the document room, for 2 additional conductors of elevators at $1,300 each, and for 40 instead of 35 annual clerks to Senators at $1,500 each.

On Nos. 9 and 10: Appropriates for 25 instead of 7 Capitol policemen at $900 each.

On Nos. 11, 12, and 13: Appropriates $1,000 to continue the employment of a special messenger of the House under resolution of December 16, 1897, and appropriates $5,000 instead of $1,000 each for the 2 stenographers to committees, House of Representatives.

On Nos. 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22, relating to the Library of Congress: Appropriates $1,500 for an assistant in charge of the Smithsonian deposit instead of 1 assistant at $1,500; increases the salary of the chief clerk from $2,250 to $2,500, the salary of the superintendent of the periodical department from $1,500 to $2,000, and 1 assistant in the music department from $900 to $1,000; strikes out the provision proposed by the House regulating the quality and character of copies deposited in the Library under the copyright law; appropriates $2,000 for binding and replacing law books damaged in the Law Library, and $1,500, as proposed by the House, instead of $2,000, as proposed by the Senate, for contingent expenses.

On Nos. 23, 24, 25, 26, and 27, relating to the Executive Office: Appropriates, as proposed by the Senate, for three clerks of class 4 instead of three clerks of class 3, and strikes out the provision proposed by the Senate increasing the salary of one doorman from $1,200 to $1,400.

On Nos. 28, 29, and 30, relating to the Department of State: Appropriates for twenty clerks of class 1, instead of sixteen as proposed by the House and twenty-one as proposed by the Senate, and appropriates $2,000 for books and maps, instead of $1,500 as proposed by the House and $3,000 as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 31, 32, 33, 34, 35, 36, 37, and 38, relating to the divisions of the office of the Secretary of the Treasury: Appropriates for one additional assistant messenger, one additional laborer, and one additional clerk at $900 in the division of loans and currency and the miscellaneous division, and for one clerk of class 3, as proposed by the House, instead of an additional clerk of class 4, as proposed by the Senate, in the office of the disbursing clerks.

On Nos. 39, 40, 41, and 42, relating to the Office of the Comptroller of the Treasury: Appropriates for two additional expert accountants at $2,000 each from March 1 until the close of the fiscal year 1900, for one additional clerk of class 4 and one typewriter and copyist at $1,000 in place of a clerk of class 3 and a clerk at $1,000 transferred from the Office of the Auditor for the War Department.

On Nos. 43, 44, and 45: Makes verbal corrections in the text of the provision proposed by the House prohibiting the detail of clerks from the offices of the Comptroller and six Auditors.

On Nos. 46 and 47: Appropriates for two additional clerks at $900 each in the Office of the Auditor for the Treasury.

On Nos. 48 and 49: Appropriates for three additional clerks at $900 each in the Office of the Auditor for the War Department.

On No. 50: Appropriates $25,000, as proposed by the Senate, for temporary employees in the Office of the Auditor for the War Department to audit the accounts of revenue collected and disbursed by military authorities in the West India Islands.

On Nos. 51 and 52: Appropriates for three additional clerks at $900 each in the Office of the Auditor for the Navy Department.

On Nos. 53 and 54: Appropriates for four additional clerks at $900 each in the office of the Auditor for the Interior Department.

On Nos. 55, 56, 57, 58, and 59, relating to the Office of the Auditor for the Post-Office Department: Strikes out the proposed increase of two additional clerks of class 1 and appropriates for two additional clerks at $1,000 each, five additional clerks at $900 each, and one additional money-order assenter at $720.

On Nos. 60 and 61: Strikes out proposed increase of two additional clerks of class 2 in the office of the Treasurer.

On Nos. 62 and 63: Appropriates for three additional clerks at $900 each in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

On Nos. 64 and 65: Strikes out proposed increase of one additional clerk of class 1 in the Bureau of Immigration.

On Nos. 66 and 67: Appropriates for an additional clerk and stenographer at $720 in the office of the assistant treasurer at Cincinnati.

On Nos. 68, 69, and 70: Appropriates for one additional clerk at $900 and one additional watchman at $720 in the office of the assistant treasurer at New York.

On No. 71: Strikes out the provision proposed by the House authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to supply the mint at Carson, Nev., with silver bullion for conversion into standard silver dollars and smaller denominations of silver, and restores to the bill the alternative provision proposed by the House authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to operate the mint at Carson on the basis of an assay office.

On Nos. 72, 73, 74, 75, and 76, relating to the mint at Denver: Increases the salary of the assayer in charge from $2,500 to $3,000; provides for an additional clerk at $1,200; increases the appropriations for wages of workmen from $20,000 to $22,000, and for incidental and contingent expenses from $5,000 to $6,000.

On Nos. 77 and 78: Appropriates $15,000, instead of $8,000 as proposed by the House and $20,000 as proposed by the Senate, for incidental and contingent expenses of the mint at New Orleans, La., and makes the same available for machinery and repairs.

On Nos. 79 and 80: Appropriates $1,400, instead of $1,200 as proposed by the House and $1,600 as proposed by the Senate, for a clerk in the assay office at Boise, Idaho.

On Nos. 81, 82, and 83, relating to the assay office at Seattle, Wash.: Appropriates for an additional clerk at $1,200, and increases the amount for wages of workmen from $16,000 to $18,000.

On Nos. 84, 85, and 86: Provides for an additional commissioner at $1,000, to reside in Forty-Mile mining district, Alaska.

On No. 87: Appropriates $500, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,000, as proposed by the Senate, for contingent expenses of the Territory of Oklahoma.

On Nos. 88 and 89: Appropriates for an additional clerk of class 4 in the office of the Secretary of War.

On No. 90: Extends until July 1, 1899, the period within which appointments or employments made from the classified service under appropriations for temporary employees shall be vacated.

On Nos. 91 and 92: Appropriates for a clerk to the Adjutant-General, at $1,800.

On No. 93: Appropriates $500, as proposed by the House, instead of $1,000, as proposed by the Senate, for postage stamps for the War Department.

On Nos. 94 and 95: Authorizes the use of not exceeding $1,000 of the contingent fund of the War Department for temporary labor, and authorizes the purchase of law books of reference and periodicals from the appropriation for contingent expenses of the War Department for the fiscal year 1899.

On Nos. 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, and 105, relating to the Navy Department: Appropriates for an additional clerk of class 2 in the library, and strikes out all other increases of force in the bureaus of the Navy Department proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 106 and 107: Appropriates for three additional members of the board of pension appeals in the office of the Secretary of the Interior.

On No. 108: Appropriates $23,940 for the necessary force of watchmen, laborers, and others to care for the General Post-Office building after its occupancy by the Department of the Interior.

On Nos. 109, 110, 111, 112, and 113, relating to the General Land Office: Strikes out the proposed increase of five clerks of class 1, appropriates for four additional clerks at $1,000 each, and three additional copyists at $900 each, and appropriates for twenty-one laborers, instead of eighteen, as proposed by the House, and twenty-four, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 114: Authorizes the delivery of surplus United States maps to the Secretary of the Interior, instead of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, for distribution.

On Nos. 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, and 120, relating to the Indian Office: Appropriates for fourteen instead of fifteen clerks of class 3, strikes out proposed increase of two clerks of class 2, appropriates for two additional clerks of class 1, and one additional clerk at $1,000 instead of two, and for a stenographer to the Superintendent of Indian Schools, at $1,000.

On No. 121: Authorizes the allowance of necessary sleeping-car fare to special examiners of the Pension Bureau.

On Nos. 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, and 127: Authorizes expenditures for messenger service out of the respective appropriations for contingent expenses in the offices of the surveyors-general of Florida, Minnesota, New Mexico, North Dakota, and Wyoming.

On Nos. 128, 129, 130, 131, and 132: Makes verbal corrections in the text of the bill, and strikes out the provisions proposed by the Senate for chief of contract division and chief of mail equipment division, at $2,000 each, instead of two clerks at $1,800 each, in the office of the Second Assistant Postmaster-General.

On Nos. 133, 134, 135, 136, 137, and 138: Appropriates for one additional clerk of class 3, three additional clerks of class 1, and two additional clerks at $1,000 each; strikes out the proposed additional clerk of class 2, and appropriates for five clerks at $900 each instead of four in the office of the Fourth Assistant Postmaster-General.

On Nos. 139 and 140: Strikes out the proposed additional clerk at $1,000 in the office of the topographer of the Post-Office Department.

On Nos. 141, 142, 143, 144, 145, 146, 147, and 148, relating to the Department of Justice: Appropriates $4,500 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $4,000 as proposed by the House, for the Solicitor of the Department of State; provides for an additional assistant messenger: appropriates $1,750, instead of $1,500 as proposed by the House and $2,000 as proposed by the Senate, for books for the law library; $500 as proposed by the Senate, instead of $750 as proposed by the House, for purchase of session laws and statutes, and $1,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $2,500 as proposed by the Senate, for official transportation.

On Nos. 149 and 150: Appropriates $1,000 as proposed by the House, instead of $1,500 as proposed by the Senate, for the reporter of the court of appeals.

On No. 151: Appropriates $10,000 as proposed by the Senate, for employment of auditors in the Court of Claims.

On Nos. 152, 153, and 154: Makes verbal corrections in the text of section 4 of the bill, and adds thereto the provision proposed by the Senate providing that the thirty days' annual leave of absence with pay in any one year to clerks and employees in the several Executive Departments, authorized by existing law, shall be exclusive of Sundays and legal holidays.

The committee of conference recommend to their respective Houses in the conference report that there be added to the bill, in connection with the appropriation for the additional clerks and deputy collectors incident to the work connected with the act providing for war expenditures, a provision to include the salaries and expenses of 10 additional agents provided for in section 3 and the 20 additional clerks and agents provided for in section 47 of said act. By an error in the submission of the estimates to Congress provision for the employment of these employees was omitted.

The bill as finally agreed upon appropriates in the aggregate $23,405,740.79, being $40,696.67 less than as it passed the Senate, $175,808.33 more than as it passed the House, $72,727.04 more than the appropriations for the current fiscal year, and $959,265.07 less than the estimates submitted for 1900.

J. A. HEMENWAY,
A. M. DOCKERY,

Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. HEMENWAY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the report.

Mr. McEWAN. Mr. Speaker, I have objection to some of those items, and I desire to debate them.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I move the previous question. I am requested to do so by gentlemen all around me. I had desired to do so at first.

Mr. McEWAN. I gave notice that I desired to debate this report before the previous question was moved, and the Chair heard me and recognized me for the purpose.

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not recognize the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. McEWAN]. He recognized the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HEMENWAY].

Mr. McEWAN. The Chair recognized me to the extent of listening to what I said.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana is in charge of the bill.

Mr. HEMENWAY. I have been on the floor all the time.

Mr. HANDY. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If the previous question should be ordered on motion of the gentleman from Indiana, will that leave twenty minutes on a side for debate?

The SPEAKER. It will not. The question has been debated already.

Mr. HANDY. The conference report on the Senate amendments has not been debated.

The SPEAKER. But the object of the rule giving twenty minutes' debate on each side after the ordering of the previous question was that no subject which was entirely new should be presented to the House without an opportunity for some discussion upon it. Where a bill has been debated in Committee of the Whole, no debate is allowed in the House after the previous question is ordered; and where a bill has reached the stage of a conference report, no debate is allowed under the rules if the previous question is ordered. The gentleman from Indiana moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HEMENWAY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine and Mr. DOCKERY addressed the Chair.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move that the House—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine is recognized. For what purpose does the gentleman from Missouri rise?

Mr. DOCKERY. To make a request for unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine has the floor.

Mr. DOCKERY. I desired to submit some observations, but I did not want to take the time of the House. I therefore ask permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks the privilege of extending his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. HANDY. What remarks?

Mr. McEWAN. When?

The SPEAKER. The Chair did not understand. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. McEWAN. I object until I know what the remarks are about.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SHERMAN in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. There was a point of order pending at the adjournment last night.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] is correct. Does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] wish to discuss the point of order?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No, sir; I wish to offer an amendment when the proper time comes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois if he desires to discuss the point of order.

Mr. HOPKINS. I presented to the Chair last evening all that I desired to say. I have examined the previous bills, and I find that the suggestion made by the gentleman from Iowa is correct—that this bill covers 1896, 1897, and 1898, in which the amount to be charged per ton for armor plate is limited to $400. So that the pending proposition is a change of existing law.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Before the Chair rules, I desire to modify the amendment which was sent up to the desk last evening.

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman can not do that under the rules of the House.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Well, Mr. Chairman, I want to say a word on this point of order before you rule upon it. I want the House to understand the exact aspect of this question; and I should like to have the gentleman from Illinois take his seat and give me his attention, observing that decorum which he has so constantly and vociferously insisted other members of the House should manifest when he was in the chair, by some strange dispensation of Providence which causes our universal and constant wonder. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. I yield with pleasure to the gentleman who never speaks. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. We are authorizing in this bill the construction of some ships for the United States Navy.

The committee have endeavored to provide that these ships shall be good and serviceable when constructed. Of course Congress can send these ships out without any armor at all if it sees fit to do so; or it may decree that the armor provided for them shall be inferior to any other armor on any other ship anywhere in the world. And the efforts of the gentleman from Illinois, from the time he injected himself into the consideration of this bill down to the present moment, have been directed to the accomplishment of one design and no other, and that is to compel the Secretary of the Navy to put on these ships armor which is absolutely inferior, and so recognized, to any other armor in the world.

Now, I do not know whether he understands enough about the question to realize that that is the effect of the exercise of the legislative tactics he has been pursuing. But I do know enough to believe that that is the result of it. It can mean nothing else.

Here is a bill to provide armor for ships already under contract by the Government. It is provided that the armor shall not cost more than $400 a ton. We have contracts to-day existing for all of the armor for all of the ships authorized in the past not to exceed this sum of $400 a ton, excepting the three battle ships which were authorized last year and the three new battle ships and the three cruisers that are authorized by the pending bill.

Now, if the gentleman from Illinois insists on the point of order that it is a change of existing law in providing this armor, and that the provision must be ruled out, we must, of course, put on the battle ships authorized in the last appropriation bill armor costing $400 a ton, which is recognized and which we know to be inferior to that purchased and used by any other civilized nation on the earth. The gentleman from Illinois may want us to build Chinese junks. No; that is a reflection upon the Chinese Government. [Laughter.] The Government of China would scorn and repudiate a suggestion that in finishing one of its great iron-clad ships building in England or in Germany or elsewhere it would allow the contractors to put upon it armor that is inferior to that used by any other civilized nation on the face of the earth.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the Naval Committee are not running this bill as a private enterprise. It is not in any sense of the word a private institution. We have no special pride of opinion about it. We have studied the matter, however, and know what is required. We are trying to accomplish a public purpose. If these ships are to be built at all—and I challenge contradiction of the assertion—there will not be a member on the floor of the House, except, perhaps, the gentleman from Illinois, who would suggest for a moment that there should be anything put on them in the shape of armor but the most formidable and serviceable armor that we may be able to procure.

The Maine, the Missouri, and the Ohio, authorized last year, are as yet unarmored. The armor has not been contracted for for these vessels. There is armor plate in process of manufacture that American shipbuilders are now putting on the Russian men-of-war which are being built in this country. This is acknowledged by all, excepting the Illinois Steel Company, and the gentleman from Illinois, to be at least 25 per cent more powerful in its resisting properties than the harveyized armor which we have been using heretofore, and which has been regarded, until this improvement was made, as about the best in the world. The Cramps, shipbuilders, to-day are putting on the Russian battle ships this improved armor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman state, if he will permit an interruption, what is the cost of this armor plate to which the gentleman refers?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I can not state exactly the cost.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (continuing). Because I do not think—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Well, now, just allow me to finish—

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I was simply going to say that I do not think that the price—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I do not care what the gentleman thinks. I do not want to know. The gentleman can state what he thinks when he gets the floor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. He can state what he thinks when he gets the floor, and it won't take long. [Laughter.]

That suggestion of the gentleman embodies the whole subject-matter of the controversy. It is not a question of what people "think." It is a fact we must face. The committee is not trying to "bunco" the House. We are not steering a job through the House. We are not trying to deceive anybody. We are presenting a plain, simple, common-sense, matter-of-fact business proposition. The gentleman from Illinois is simply invoking the technical rules of the House to prevent the committee from exercising its judgment based upon investigation, experience, and observation. We are not declaring that the House shall exercise its judgment in a peculiar way or in a certain way. We do not demand anything of the kind. But we have placed the proposition before the House, and we ask an opportunity, as a legislative body, to exercise its judgment upon those propositions; and that is all we have suggested in connection with the matter.

And when the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] arises here and interposes technical objections under the rule that may be invoked in such a way as to prevent this House from considering it; and then when I arise here in the interest of the public business, in the interest of the Navy of the United States, in the interest of getting forward with a great money bill of this country, which has passed through the stages of legislation in this House up to the very last paragraph, and which might be passed in five minutes and sent to the Senate; when in the interest of every possible consideration of public policy and legislative procedure I get up here and propose to make a modification of my amendment to enable the House—and for no other purpose than to enable the House—to facilitate the enactment of this bill, and he proposes to invoke the rule again, I say that he is acting as an obstructionist. [Laughter.]

I say that he is acting against the public policy and the public interest of the United States, and for some reason—Heaven only knows what, I do not, unless he has got a little lonesome because he has been out of the chair for a half an hour or so [laughter] and feels that the public is getting lonesome without him—undertakes to prevent this House from acting upon this matter.

Now, here we are with this appropriation. Unless this House can act upon it in some way we are going to have battle ships without armor, or battle ships with inferior armor.

Now, if this House wants battle ships with inferior armor, it has a right to say so. If it wants to clothe the Secretary of the Navy, as we always have hitherto, with power to procure the best defensive armor to protect our men that can be obtained, it can vote upon that and declare it and put in amendments or modifications that the wisdom of this House may suggest. I insist that for any gentleman to get up here and say that he will introduce technical objection after objection to prevent the possibility of my getting this question before this body in such a way that it can consider it is neither statesmanship nor wisdom nor common sense. In my country it is called demagogism, and it is recognized at sight.

Mr. HOPKINS and Mr. UNDERWOOD addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois, who raises the point of order, desires to be heard upon it.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, my usually placid friend from the State of Maine is evidently in an irritable state of mind this morning. When I raise a parliamentary question here, he undertakes to make it a personal matter between himself and me.

Mr. HENDERSON. Well, settle it on the outside. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. If I were in the same frame of mind as my friend from Maine, I presume we would, but I do not propose, in the discussion of a great parliamentary question of this kind, or the consideration of one of these great appropriation bills, to be driven from my duty as I see it, by the sarcasm, the invective, or the abuse of the gentleman who happens to be chairman of the Naval Committee. He says he can appreciate what demagogism is in the State of Maine. I have no doubt of that, Mr. Chairman. I think he is an expert on that subject.

He says, Mr. Chairman, that I am raising technical objections here. I desire to call the attention of the members of this House to the fact that no point has been raised by me on this bill that has not been promptly sustained by the Chair, and the Chair has been sustained by a line of decisions that are unbroken since the time that the appropriations for naval affairs were committed to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Now, the trouble with the gentleman is that he thinks that nobody outside of the chairman of the Naval Committee should have anything to say on the question of the vast amount of money appropriated for the construction and equipment of these great naval vessels. While we acknowledge his ability and his patriotism, we are not yet prepared to acknowledge that he is the whole House, painful as it may be to make that suggestion to him. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, had the gentleman known anything about the rules that govern the House and anything about the preparation of these great appropriation bills, he would have known better than to bring into this House a bill of the character that he has brought. He has violated this rule again and again in the preparation of this bill, and now grows angry because a member of the House points out that fact. The rule provides that these committees shall not violate existing law in their recommendations in these appropriation bills, and the point that I have made here is simply to make this gentleman and his committee conform to the law—nothing else. If that offends him, I prefer to stand to the orderly procedure of this House and maintain the existing law rather than to follow the caprice and the whim of this eccentric gentleman from the State of Maine. [Laughter.]

Now, another consideration, Mr. Chairman. This gentleman assumes in his remarks that I have some personal reason for making these objections. Nothing is farther from my mind. I am interested in the construction of these great naval vessels equally with the gentleman himself, and I think that my record in this House, not only upon this bill but upon others, will show that I have never been actuated by personal or selfish motives, either by voice or vote, in expediting the legislation of the House. But when I see gentlemen come in here and persistently violate the rules of this House, then I say it is my duty to call the attention of the Chair to this violation, and if the gentleman desires to appeal to the members of the House, I am willing that they should consider it, too. Now, this question of armor plate is not new—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; you have made a record of it. Mr. HOPKINS. Well, I have, and I have made a record in strict opposition to the record made by the gentleman from Maine. [Laughter and applause.] The House sustained my position (and the Senate as well); and it has never followed him when the House has had its attention challenged to the preparation of the bill.

What is the situation, Mr. Chairman? We find that the Naval Committee of the Senate, some four or five years ago, commenced an investigation upon the question as to whether in the furnishing of armor plates for the construction of these vessels the Government was paying more than it ought to pay.

The investigation thoroughly satisfied the Naval Committee of the Senate that too much was being paid. That investigation was printed and placed in the hands of the members of this House in the Fifty-fourth Congress, and a study of that satisfied the majority of the House that the gentleman from Maine was authorizing a larger amount per ton in the payment for armor plate than it is necessary that the Government should pay; and, after deliberate judgment and full discussion upon the part of my distinguished and eloquent friend from Maine, they restricted the amount to $400 per ton. [Applause.]

In the bill, in the paragraph that I have made the point of order against, is the gentleman's proposition, in violation of the instructions of the House, in violation of the written law of the land, proposing to increase the amount per ton $145, making the average price for a ton of armor plate $545. When we look to the record and the reports of the committee, we find nothing that can authorize this. But the gentleman says it is in the interest of the public. Why has he not had those reports printed?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What reports?

Mr. HOPKINS. Why did he not have the reports and letters printed that satisfy him that he should in this bill authorize the payment of $545 a ton for armor plate as against $400 authorized by Congress? What we want to know, if he proposes to change existing law, is upon what basis his action is taken.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I want to say to my friend, when he has made this point of order, which prevents us considering this proposition, and he asks us why we do not present the reasons, I simply desire to say that we are willing to present all the information we have and all the evidence which I have here before me on my desk; and all we are asking is to have an opportunity for this House to consider this matter and work its will; and he is getting up and making technical points of order for the purpose of saying: "You shall not have an opportunity to consider it." Nobody is deceived by this thing. We are not children.

Mr. HOPKINS. Has it come in the speech of the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have the evidence from official authorities.

Mr. HOPKINS. We want that.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Withdraw your point of order, and we will submit that evidence.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I rise to a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GROSVENOR. The gentleman does not wish to answer that question.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. He never will.

Mr. HOPKINS. I think, Mr. Chairman, that on this question the gentleman from Maine is able to take care of himself. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not desire to occupy the attention of the committee any longer upon this point.

Mr. HENDERSON. That is a good idea. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. I simply rose to repudiate the suggestion made by the gentleman from Maine that there is anything factional in the opposition that I have made to the paragraph in the bill. If the evidence is sufficient to satisfy the members of this House that the existing law should be changed, I shall respond to that as quickly as any member of the House; but when a member of the Naval Committee of the Senate tells me, as he has, that the Senate will never allow this bill to become law authorizing the payment of $545 a ton for armor plate, I think I am not going beyond my duty to my constituents and the public in calling attention to this subject and in insisting upon full information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I submit this question— [To Mr. HOPKINS:] Have you got through?

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, I will allow the gentleman from Maine to go on.

The CHAIRMAN. Undoubtedly, if the provision in the first portion of this section were applied to continuation of the work, the point of the gentleman from Illinois would be well taken. It would then be a statute, and the provision of this bill would "change existing law." The Chair finds that in the consideration of the naval bill last year the point of order was raised against the amendment which the gentleman from Illinois contended to be a fixed statute, and the Chair then overruled the point of order (the present incumbent of the chair), basing his ruling upon the fact that that provision was a limitation which applied to the appropriation contained in that bill only. That being so, the Chair must rule that this amendment is a limitation applying to the appropriation provided in this bill only; and therefore must overrule the point of order. The Chair does so rule, and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I desire to amend the amendment. I desire to strike out the word "five" and insert the word "four."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine has the floor. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois at the proper time to offer an amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, the object of this amendment is very simple. I am not going over the history of the armor question. The discussion of this subject in this House for the last two or three years ought to be instructive to members, and I believe it is to most of us. I have in my mind only one or two who do not seem to have been educated by it, but out of the usual kindness of my disposition I am not going to give their names. [Laughter.]

A few years ago the question whether the armor plate manufacturing companies were defrauding the Government by exacting exorbitant prices was raised in both branches of Congress. It was elaborately discussed, and resulted, in the first instance, in the Secretary of the Navy ordering an investigation as to the fair price of armor plate. The result was a delay in furnishing armor plate for a whole session of Congress. At the first session the Secretary made his report and concluded that $400 a ton would be about right. Congress, after debating it, voted down that proposition. The Committee on Naval Affairs adopted the recommendation of the Secretary as the best information that could be obtained, but the House in Committee of the Whole voted that they would not give $400 a ton, but would give $300 a ton and no more. I want to give my colleagues in the House who were then members the full benefit of the justification for their votes at that time, which grieved me exceedingly and which I thought were unwise. I want to give them the benefit of the justification afforded by the fact that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] who has recently addressed the House stood on the floor and insisted in making a statement that a wealthy and powerful corporation in his own State was not only ready but anxious to furnish all the armor plate the Government desired in that bill at three hundred and some odd dollars a ton. I did not believe that the company was ready to do that thing. I did not believe that the company intended to do that thing. I came mighty near knowing that they did not intend to do that thing. The RECORD will show the debate. It is safe. The gentleman thanks God for the discussion.

The debate is safe; it is buried where it can be resurrected at any time, in that graveyard of eloquence, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I asked him the specific question if any company in any part of this country had ever made the specific proposition, in good faith, to furnish this plate to the Government at three hundred and some odd dollars a ton, and he stated specifically that the Illinois Steel Company was prepared to do it. I pinioned him to the explicit fact, and I said I believed that this great corporation of the West, angry and smarting under its passion, in controversy with some other great companies over the steel trust that had been suddenly broken up, was coming here and putting in bogus propositions to distract the attention of the House and get a revenge on some former associates in that great trust.

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman yield to me right there?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; I can not yield now.

Mr. HENDERSON. It is not safe and I would not do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. What is the matter with the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. HENDERSON. I am for peace. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maine be allowed to proceed five minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I want to proceed as long as this body wants to hear me and not a minute longer. I have some interesting facts to bring out about now, and I do not think it will be, perhaps, by unanimous consent; but the most of the members will want to hear it.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MEYER of Louisiana. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the chairman of the committee be allowed to proceed without limit.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I would be glad to have the gentleman proceed without limit, but I think we ought to have some understanding as to the time on the other side.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman from Maine be allowed to proceed for fifteen minutes.

Mr. HOPKINS. I ask unanimous consent that the same length of time be accorded to the opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks that fifteen minutes be accorded to the gentleman from Maine and fifteen minutes to those opposed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is it the understanding that debate will then close?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I understood that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] wanted fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that fifteen minutes is requested for the gentleman from Maine and fifteen minutes for the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. PAYNE. That was not my request, Mr. Chairman. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maine be allowed to proceed for fifteen minutes and after that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] be allowed to proceed fifteen minutes, and that there be no further limit on debate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. We should feel forced to object to that, as there are gentlemen on this side who want to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from New York asks that the gentleman from Maine be permitted to proceed fifteen minutes and that the gentleman from Illinois then have fifteen minutes, but that there shall be no other limitation on the debate. Is there objection to that request?

Mr. HANDY. I ask for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. A demand for the regular order is an objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has not yet expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I trust, Mr. Chairman, that this little discussion will not come out of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. It will not be deducted from the gentleman's time.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, the result of that statement made in this House, unquestionably, in my judgment, from statements made to me by a great many gentlemen here, controlled the vote—

Mr. LEWIS of Washington rose.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Now I see something ominous on the horizon.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. What did the gentleman say?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have some time accorded to me—

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I had not addressed the gentleman. I rose to ask my friend from Delaware to withdraw his objection, so that the gentleman from Maine could proceed.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. But I would like to know the observation which the gentleman gratuitously made with regard to me.

A MEMBER. It was highly complimentary.

A MEMBER. It was nothing.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. That is what the gentleman has been saying all the morning. [Laughter.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Now, Mr. Chairman, if any other gentleman has a desire to say something witty, I wish he would put it in right here while the House is quiet, so that we can hear it and that I may enjoy it. Then I will go on.

Mr. Chairman, the House voted to limit the price to be paid for armor to $300. The Secretary of the Navy issued proposals for armor at that price, and when the time came around to open those proposals he sent a report to Congress that he had had no proposals from anybody in the country to make armor at that price. The letter of the Secretary of the Navy to Congress I have here.

I have already cited it in debate. It stated that he had three communications. One was from the Carnegie Company; another from the Bethlehem Company, which had established great plants and had been furnishing armor, stating that they did not desire to furnish armor at $300 per ton. Then there was the communication of the Illinois Steel Company, which, as the Secretary said, "contained a bid in the form of two general propositions, neither of which the Department feels that it has any authority to consider with a view to acceptance or rejection; while the other two communications received are not bids, but are statements of reasons why bids are not submitted."

Mr. HOPKINS. Does the Secretary state in his letter the amount for which the Illinois Steel Company were willing to make this armor plate?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The Illinois Steel Company wrote a letter to the Secretary—

Mr. HOPKINS. Is it published?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly. It is here, but I am not going to waste time in undertaking to read it and then be called down before I have concluded.

The Illinois Steel Company knows how to make bids. It knew how then. It could have bid if it had wanted to do so. But instead of bidding it wrote a letter to the Secretary proposing that "if," and "if," and "if," and "if," it would do something. If it could have the manufacture of all the armor that the Government would require for twenty years to come, and if the Government would guarantee to purchase of it 6,000 tons a year for twenty years (which was double the amount that we have been purchasing at all), and if certain other things were done, then it would do—what? It would then begin to construct a plant to make this plate, the very construction of the plant requiring from one to two years. Every member of the committee who was here at that time or during the succeeding session knows the facts of that matter.

The result was that we went along without any armor; and finally we brought in the proposition again as the only thing that came to the committee promising to give us armor for our ships. We recommended the granting of $400 a ton as a limit; and it was granted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Have I talked fifteen minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman was not given fifteen minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I could not have asked for only five minutes, because I was entitled to that much.

Mr. PAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended ten minutes.

Mr. HANDY. I demand the regular order.

Mr. DALZELL. Let me make a suggestion to the gentleman from Delaware. I think we are all interested—I know I am, personally—in hearing the facts that the chairman of the committee was going on to submit with respect to the change of price. And certainly it is not intended that this debate shall be restricted to the chairman of the committee and the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maine be allowed fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman from Delaware withdraws his demand for the regular order, the Chair will submit the request.

Mr. HANDY. "The gentleman from Delaware" demands the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is demanded. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD].

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have a substitute I wish to offer for the whole section, and which I now send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out lines 3 to 17, inclusive, on page 61, and insert:
"That the sum of $4,000,000 be, and the same is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the erection of suitable buildings and the purchase of suitable machinery and other material necessary for the establishment and maintenance of a plant for furnishing armor plate for the use of the Navy."

"SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized to appoint a board, to consist of three officers of the Navy, who shall examine and report what, in their opinion, is the most suitable site for the erection of the plant provided for in the foregoing section of this act, and no money shall be expended until the point so selected shall have been approved by the Secretary of the Navy."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask to be heard on the point of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I also wish to be heard upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is recognized. The point of order is made on the amendment, and the gentleman from Alabama desires to discuss the point of order, as the Chair understands.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, the proposition made to the House by the amendment I have suggested on this part of the naval appropriation bill is by no means a new one. It may seem on its face that it is in contravention of Rule XXI. But there is no doubt whatever that the House of Representatives, nearly fourteen years ago, decided that a similar proposition was in order under the same rule.

In the second session of the Forty-ninth Congress the Hon. Joseph Sayers, of Texas, reported a bill for the construction of a battle ship. It was brought into the House and offered as an amendment to the then pending naval appropriation bill. Governor McCreary, of Kentucky, was then in the Chair, and, when the point of order was made, held that as the proposition was in continuation of a public improvement (and the ruling of the Chair is one which has been uniformly adhered to from that day to this, for nearly fourteen years)—that as it was in continuation of a public work already in progress, it was in order under the rules of the House.

Further than that, Mr. Chairman, it has been held all along, in the same line of ruling with that to which I have referred, that an amendment to regulate the hire and employment of sailors on these war ships was in order under Rule XXI for the same reasons given by Governor McCreary.

Now, what is the difference, I ask, in principle between the propositions? If the building of a battle ship is in continuation of a public work already in progress—and the only public work in that direction in progress is the extension of the naval force of the United States—if the building of a battle ship, I repeat, is in continuation of a public work, I would like to ask why an armor-plate factory or a gun factory, to supply armor and guns for the battle ships when constructed, is not entirely in the same line, and absolutely a continuation of the same public work? One is as essential as the other.

What public work does the construction of a battle ship continue? Why, to build a navy. We have already entered upon that work. It is a public work now in progress. The building of a battle ship is the continuation of that work. The preparation of the armor plate for the battle ship is just as necessary as the building of a battle ship itself. We increase our Navy by building more ships. Then, I say, when you come to building any part of a battle ship it is carrying on a public work which is "already in progress."

Why, this construction of armor plate comes nearer to the necessary work of building a battle ship than any other provision that you could apply to the bill. We have to-day six or seven battle ships already in various stages of completion, and it is necessary to provide armor for them. The public work is in progress, the building of the ships has been begun, and this amendment carries on the work which is absolutely essential to their completion.

Now, why should this be necessary? Why is it necessary for us to adopt the amendment that I have suggested? I wish to call the attention of the committee briefly to the circumstances and the reasons which induced the offering of the amendment. The very same reason which is given in favor of the construction of the battle ship and why it should be attached to a general appropriation bill applies with equal force here.

As the gentleman from Maine says, this is no new question in the House of Representatives. For years we have battled over the question. We have attempted to obtain armor for the Navy at a reasonable rate, and we have been met continually by the appropriation bills from the Committee on Naval Affairs advocating an increase in the price to be paid for the armor; and this, too, without giving any reasons for the increase. When the gentleman from Maine so kindly interrupted, or rather refused to hear my question a few moments ago, it was my desire to call his attention to the fact that they come to-day asking $145 a ton more for the armor plate than we paid last year, and yet they make that recommendation without a line in the report in advocacy of it or as indicating to the House why it should be done!

They come here without a printed hearing, giving no information to this House. They say in a nebulous sort of a way that they want to obtain some new kind of a patent, but where is the gentleman who can give us any information with reference to that patent? I asked the gentleman from Maine on the floor but a few minutes ago what it was going to cost us to obtain these patent rights, and he said he did not know.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I never have made a statement of the kind to the gentleman at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. When I asked you, what did you say?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have not any idea what you asked me. I did not hear it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, then, if the gentleman did not understand, I ask him now, how much is the Government of the United States expected to pay for this Krupp patent right per ton? Answer the question now, if you know.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Not one cent; and I told you that yesterday.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Very well; I did not hear the gentleman yesterday.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I am reported wrong in the RECORD this morning. When you correct my matter, do not make me say the opposite of what I mean.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not correct your matter, and I was not talking to you.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I appear in the RECORD this morning to state exactly the opposite of what I said.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not hear what the gentleman from New York said. I am sure that what he said will be read by the country at large. Anything that the distinguished gentleman from New York ever says is of interest to the country, and I beg his pardon. It is through inadvertence that I did not see it in the RECORD this morning.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, I ask the gentleman to please inform the House.

Mr. CUMMINGS. It does not cost a cent, as I told you.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman knows very well that I have been struggling here since I first got the floor for no other purpose than for an opportunity to state just the facts that he is asking about. I have the facts all here.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I tried to get the gentleman an opportunity.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman will allow me, I will give him the best information I have.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is one question I ask the gentleman to inform me. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] says that this Krupp patent is not going to cost us a cent. Now, is that correct?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Because you can not get it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is all I want to know.

Mr. CUMMINGS. The royalty under the $545 per ton is paid by the party who contracts to make the armor, whereas the royalty to-day under the $400 clause is paid by the Government. That is the difference.

Mr. HOPKINS. Now, one moment. I disagree entirely with the gentleman from New York. Under the $400 arrangement, as I understand it—

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Will the gentleman please tell us in his own time?

Mr. HOPKINS. I want to say to the gentleman from Alabama that if the gentleman from Maine in charge of this bill is unable to give the gentleman from Alabama an answer to his question, I can state—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have not yet expressed my inability to state it. I do not want the gentleman from Illinois to occupy the floor to tell what he does not know about me. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman from Maine now says he can answer the question, and I will allow him to answer the question propounded to him by the gentleman from Alabama, instead of answering it myself.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am very glad to have the chance, and I will say—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama has the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I thought you wanted me to do something.

Mr. HOPKINS. No, no.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. If the gentleman from Alabama, who has a right to the floor, wants me to make a statement—

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do want information, and I will ask the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs for information now. Let me see if I understand this proposition. The gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] says we can not buy the patent, that we are not to get the patent, but that the royalty is to be paid by the companies who make the bid for this armor. Now, I want to know if any contract has been made with any of these companies who bid for this armor; and if so, what do these companies propose to pay for this royalty? Does the gentleman know?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Why, we are trying to get into Congress far enough to ask Congress to authorize somebody to make a contract.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You do not know, then, what they are going to pay the Krupps for the armor?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. We do know what we are informed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Tell the House. We have been trying to find out that.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. We are informed by two reputable parties that we can have this Krupp armor for $545 a ton.

Mr. TODD. How much of that is royalty?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. How much of that $545 a ton is royalty?

Mr. HOPKINS. The gentleman has asked a question and I will answer it now.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The question is what are these companies to pay the Krupps for the royalty?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. My information is about $45 or $50.

Mr. HOPKINS. That answers it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is the first information this House has been able to obtain.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Now I will give you the information, if you will relinquish the floor and permit me to give you the facts as furnished by the highest authorities we have. That would be much better than to have the gentleman from Illinois get up and try to tell us what he thinks we ought to know.

Mr. HOPKINS. Then I would have to occupy the floor all the time.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, if I can continue my remarks—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Let me make a proposition to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes, I will.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am going to make a proposition in good faith. We have had lots of fun, some stupidity, and some other things, of which I shall cherish a remembrance long after the gentleman who has exercised his proud privilege has ceased to be remembered in the House. I suggest to the gentleman, in fairness to the House, and the country, and the Department, and to everybody—I have nothing that I want to say to this House if they do not want to hear me—but we have here the facts; the House wants some facts, and the gentleman from Alabama is clamoring for them. I have here a comprehensive statement covering every point the gentleman may have in his mind from the highest authority we have in the Government on this subject. I have the letter of the Secretary of the Navy; I have the letters of the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, who has charge of this work, and I have letters from the manufacturers themselves.

Now, I ask the gentleman if he does not really think that he and I would be doing infinitely greater service to the Government by permitting these documents to be read rather than to occupy the time any more?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. In the interest of eliciting the very facts to which the gentleman has referred, and in the interest of eliciting the facts upon the other side, I ask unanimous consent that there may be half an hour's debate on each side of this amendment, thirty minutes to be controlled by the gentleman from Maine, fifteen minutes by the gentleman from Alabama, and fifteen minutes by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph be limited to thirty minutes on each side—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Now you will get the information.

Mr. DOCKERY. All that relates to this amendment.

Mr. DALZELL. I suggest to the gentleman that there is a special order for half past 2 o'clock.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand there is a special order; and I ask the gentleman to allow me to conclude my remarks. We can not finish it to-day.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has already yielded to his colleague to make a request, and, unless some gentleman withdraws it, the Chair will have to submit it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I withdraw the request.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to call the attention of this House not only to the increase that has already been given in this matter; that has been given by this committee, but I want to call the attention of the House to the fact as to the amount that we have provided of this armor in the past. The gentleman from Maine has seen fit to say that he thinks it would be good for the country and for the Government if all this testimony were given to this House. I do not know what that information is, yet probably it would have been and will be; but I will say to the gentleman that it would have been wiser to give that information to the House when he reported this bill to Congress, so that we might have had an opportunity to understand it, and not bring it in here at the eleventh hour. I have tried for two days to ascertain how much these armor-plate manufacturers proposed to pay for this Krupp patent that they claim, and this is the first time we have heard that it was to be $45 or $50, and even that the gentleman did not seem to know—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I stated that distinctly when I first opened my mouth.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. When you say $45 or $50 that evidently shows there is an uncertainty about it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman is troubled about the question between forty-five and fifty. Well, $50.

Mr. TODD. Will the gentleman allow me one word?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. TODD. There is nothing in this bill to show that the Secretary of the Navy must buy the Krupp armor. They can simply get the old armor that we have been getting and give $145 more for it than we did under the last bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say this, before proceeding further about this royalty: Gentlemen contend, and come here with a great show and great argument, that we are going to save money by paying $545 a ton for this armor and get the right to buy armor plate without paying a royalty. Now, the members of the Naval Committee, who make this proposition and ask this, must know—necessarily, it is their business to know—they know what we are paying for the royalty on the harveyized armor. Now, they must know it. And we find in the reports that I hold in my hand—made by Secretary Herbert, Secretary of the Navy, in 1893—on the 12th day of March he made a contract with the Harvey Company to furnish this Government the right to use their process for harveyized armor at one-fifth of 1 per cent a pound, which means that the Government, if that contract is carried out, should pay the great sum of $11.20 a ton in addition to $400, but—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Will the gentleman permit me to call his attention to an error?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Permit me to finish my sentence. And they come here now and say because we will not have to pay the $11.50 a ton in addition to the $400 it is a great argument why we should increase the price to the manufacturers $145 a ton.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Will the gentleman permit me to enable him to make a correct statement?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman can do so.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am going to help you to make a correct statement, for the incorrectness of which no one is responsible but the gentleman himself.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think I am about as correct in my figures as the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman has stated that the Government does not pay the royalty on the harveyized iron.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I did not state that. I said that here is a contract by which they agreed to pay $11.50 a ton. I said they paid $11.50 a ton. The gentleman will see that I am correct in my statement. The difference between the royalty which we are expected to pay for the armor plate we are using now, the harveyized armor, which amounts to $55,000 on a battle ship, and paying $50 a ton for the other armor, which is $200,000 for a battle ship, would be the difference—

Mr. HILBORN. Will the gentleman permit me to correct a mistake he has fallen into?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. HILBORN. When we were using the harveyized plates the Government owned the patent, but here the two great armor-plate manufacturing companies have bought it themselves. They alone have the right to use the Krupp process in the United States. We understand that they paid a very large sum of money to be permitted to use that process in the United States. They pay $50 a ton for every ton of armor plate they make; but the United States has never attempted to buy that process, and could not buy it. Another correction I want to make is that the Krupp process has never been patented; it is a secret process.

Mr. TODD. I think the gentleman from California is mistaken as to its not having been patented. I have a copy of the patent of the Krupp process on my desk.

Mr. HILBORN. That is what we are informed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I would like to proceed, if the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TODD] will allow me. It does not make any difference to this House whether the Krupp process has been patented or not.

Mr. HILBORN. Not at all.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It is a question of what we are going to pay and whether we are going to get full value for what we pay. Now, I notice in the history of this armor-plate business that every time Congress has investigated the matter, every time we have gone to the bottom of the matter and found out what this armor plate really costs, what was a fair compensation to these companies, that they have either come in with a new nickel process, or a harveyized process, or a Krupp process, and clouded it in mystery and insisted that we could not know anything about it for that reason.

They said here was a great secret that was going to control the navies of the world, and if we wanted to keep in touch and in the front lines with our battle ships we would have to come up and pay this great sum of money for compensation in making armor. This committee has kept in line with the committees in the past. They want to cloak the matter in mystery. They come in here without a report telling us anything about it. They come here without a printed hearing. I asked this morning if there was any examination made as to the witnesses on this question, and I understood that Captain O'Neill was called before the committee and made some statement, but his statements were not of sufficient importance, evidently, or were not considered by the committee of sufficient value to even put them in their printed statement of the hearing. That is all we have got on this question that is going to cost the country thousands and thousands of dollars.

Why, Mr. Chairman, I find that this bill carries 3 battle ships of 13,500 tons and 6 armored cruisers of 12,000 tons. That is 9 battle ships. It was stated in the examination and report that it will require about 3,000 tons of armor to armor a battle ship of the Wisconsin type, but it will take nearly 4,000 tons for this type. Now, there are 6 armored cruisers at 4,000 tons for each type, which will make in the neighborhood of 24,000 tons.

Mr. HILBORN. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. HILBORN. Is the gentleman aware that the armor treated by the Krupp process gives us the same ballistic resistance with 25 per cent less weight?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know whether you are going to make it less weight or not. There is nothing brought in by the committee to show that. On the other hand, I will say to the gentleman that I heard a man who understands the manufacture of iron and steel and armor plate claim that this Krupp process was nothing more than a slight improvement on the old harveyized iron.

Mr. HILBORN. Allow me to say this, that the British Government is now building four first-class battle ships and also four first-class armored cruisers, and they are using this plate, and they are paying more than the American armor-plate manufacturers propose to charge us.

The Japanese Government is having four first-class battle ships built in England and three first-class armored cruisers, and they are to be sheathed with this improved armor. The British Admiralty have asked tenders for four more battle ships and two armored cruisers, and they are to be sheathed, under the contract, with this kind of armor plate. The Russian Government is having built in this country at Cramp's shipyard a battle ship of 12,500 tons, and the two great American armor-plate makers of this country are making armor plate of this kind for that battle ship. And while the armor-plate makers do not disclose the price they are charging the Russian Government, they assure us that we shall have the armor plate for less than that Government is paying.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes; I know it is customary for these gentlemen to charge the Government of the United States less than they charge anybody else. They have been doing that consistently in the past, especially when they sold armor to the Russian Government for $249 a ton, while they were selling the same kind of plate to us for over $500 a ton. So that I have no doubt we can rely on the statements made to the gentleman in that regard, and can rest confidently in the belief that they will be carried out. But I am glad to receive the information that the gentleman has given; I am glad he has made this statement as to what these other Governments are getting. I say again, however, that this is information which should have been furnished to us when the committee reported this bill, instead of bringing this proposition before the Committee of the Whole without a particle of information as to why and when this change was adopted.

But, sir, the fact that the British Government is adopting this kind of armor does not prove that it is to be a success.

Mr. HILBORN. The gentleman will allow me to say that our armor-plate makers have made specimen plates which have been turned over to experts of our Government, who have tested them with our own guns at our own proving station at Indian Head, and these experts announce that this plate is 25 per cent better than the harveyized plate.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, this is another new statement, which now comes before the Committee of the Whole for the first time. If all this information could stand the test of investigation, why was it not brought before the House in the proper way, so that we might have an opportunity to look into it and find out whether it would stand the test of investigation?

Yesterday, toward the close of our proceedings, I asked the gentleman from Maine to point out to me where such information could be obtained, whether the Naval Committee had ever caused it to be printed, and I was told that I could not get it, that it was not in print. And now at the eleventh hour these gentlemen come in here with fulsome statements in reference to this matter. But I ask the House to remember that we have had experience in the past in reference to the increased cost of battle ships; and I say that whether this particular kind of armor is an improvement or not, it is wrong to the constituencies that we represent to take any chances in this matter. Before we agree to make a contract of this kind for armor plate to the amount of more than 24,000 tons at an additional cost of $145 per ton, amounting to between three and four million dollars, for the battle ships we are actually ordering in this bill—before such action as that is taken by this House we should investigate the matter, as it seems the Naval Committee has not investigated it.

Mr. HILBORN. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes, sir.

Mr. HILBORN. If a new discovery has been made and the armor-plate makers of the world are turning out plate that is 25 per cent better than that which we are now using, and if other nations of the world have adopted it, does not the gentleman think that we should do the same? Does he not think that the best is poor enough for this Government?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The gentleman supposes a case—

Mr. HILBORN. I am stating facts.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the statements made in regard to the superior quality of this armor plate should on investigation prove to be true—if the facts should be laid before this House in a proper and orderly way so that members may examine them and come to a just conclusion in reference to the matter—then I would say if this armor plate is better, of course we ought to buy it, and buy it at a reasonable figure. But, according to the admission that has been dragged from the Committee on Naval Affairs before the House this morning, these companies are now paying only $50 a ton additional for the use of this process for improved armor plate; and if we are to be called on to pay $145 a ton additional, in other words, to pay these armor-plate makers $95 a ton additional for the mere fact that they have made a negotiation with Krupp for the use of this process, I say it is going a little too far.

Mr. HILBORN. Will the gentleman allow me just a moment?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. HILBORN. The committee will understand, of course, that this being a secret process, we can not manufacture the plates ourselves; nor can we mathematically fix the actual cost of making a ton of armor plate under this process.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But I understood the gentleman from Maine to say, when he was on the floor, that the difference of $50 a ton would cover the difference in cost, or would pay the royalty.

Mr. TODD. Here are the facts, if I may be permitted to interrupt the gentleman. It is not, in any sense of the word, a secret process. The whole matter is laid bare in these patents now on my desk.

Mr. HILBORN. The armor-plate makers take this position: If $400 per ton is a fair price for the armor now being used, an armor with 25 per cent more resistance—ballistic resistance—25 per cent better, is worth 25 per cent more. This would bring the price up to the amount fixed in the bill—that is, $500 a ton for the plate itself.

Now, we have always paid a royalty for the use of the Harvey process, and they therefore expect us to pay a royalty of $50 a ton upon this improved armor plate. This brings the price of the armor up to $550 per ton.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In other words, we are to-day paying a large royalty for the use of armor plate under the Harvey process, and we are expected to pay a still higher royalty on account of the patents to which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. TODD] has just referred.

Mr. HILBORN. I know, as a matter of fact, that the American companies, when they purchased the right to manufacture this armor plate, sent competent and experienced men across the ocean for the purpose of being instructed in the manufacture, and the secret of the process was only communicated to them—to a very few persons who alone understand how it is conducted. This carbonizing process, by which the carbon is injected into the metal, is an unknown process excepting to those who have been initiated in the manner I have suggested.

Mr. TODD. It is not a secret process. Here are the patents fully explaining it.

Mr. HILBORN. Under the old process the carburization penetrated the plate from one-half an inch to one inch and a half. By this new process carbon is injected at least 4 inches into the plate and we get 4 inches of hard metal on the face of the armor plate, and perhaps more.

Mr. TODD. In response to the gentleman from California, if the gentleman from Alabama will allow me a further interruption, I have before me the patents which cover precisely the entire process. They show the method by which the hardening process is accomplished, and the gentleman from California is entirely mistaken in his conclusion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It seems that there is no very great secret about the whole matter. It is simply a process which is apparently well known to the manufacturers of armor plate. It is a process of applying heat, according to a well-known plan, by pulverized charcoal, bringing the metal to a high temperature, when, under certain conditions, it is cooled rapidly, leaving a hardened surface which may extend several inches below the face of the plate.

Mr. HILBORN (interrupting). The gentleman from Alabama is describing what is known as the Harvey process. That is not the plan adopted at all by the new process.

Mr. TODD. It is not exactly the same process, but the result is the same—only the new process is cheaper, as they use cheap petroleum for heating, which is less expensive than gas or charcoal.

A MEMBER. The gentleman is entirely mistaken.

Mr. TODD. It is hardened, I expect, by the petroleum method—a method of heating the plates—which is cheaper than either by the use of gas or coal.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is no reason to believe that it will cost a dollar more than the old process, and there is no reason why the Government should pay a single dollar more than for the old harveyized plates.

Mr. TODD. The patent of Mr. Krupp specifies that his armor may be made by the Harvey process. If it is found desirable and is profitable to do so, it will be done in that way. It is a simple process of carbonizing the metal by using gas or crude petroleum to effect the heating.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I must ask, Mr. Chairman, that this debate be limited. We have had a long time upon this proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama is still entitled to the floor.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, it is said that the discussion of the harveyized process has no place in the consideration of this bill. I wish to call the attention of the committee, however, to a few facts to show what has been done in that connection in the past.

The great cost that these gentlemen claim is involved in the making of armor plate is in the interest charges. I can read to the committee in a very few moments the various charges that are involved for materials and other expenses involved in this manufacture. I want to call your attention to the fact that in the manufacture of the armor plate the materials cost only $30.13 a ton. I find in the Government report I hold in my hand a statement that the materials consumed in the manufacture are claimed to amount to $56.75 a ton. The coal and other fuel used are stated at $81.30 a ton; the labor cost is $43.65 a ton, and other expenses, including contingent expenses, shop expenses, and experimental work, make the total cost from $196 to $200 a ton. This is a report by a board of Government engineers—competent men—in the employ of the Navy, who were sent to examine and report upon the question presented, and they submit their report showing the total cost to be between $196 and $200 a ton.

And everything above that, every single charge that they put in above that, is for taxes, interest, insurance, and profits. Well, now, at $400 a ton, with the labor and the materials consumed costing only about $200 a ton, is it not sufficient for them to get their interest, their taxes, their insurance, and their profit out of the other $200 a ton? Is there any other manufacturing establishment in this country that would want more or expect as much?

But let me call your attention to the reason why they want this amendment. I find that the Bethlehem works claim that they have a working capital of $519,000 and a capital stock of $4,087,521, making a total of $4,606,521; that the Carnegie Company have a capital of $3,000,000. The total capital of the two plants is $7,606,521. The capacity of those two plants put together is only 6,000 tons.

Now, the Government of the United States some years ago appointed a board of naval officers to investigate the question as to how much an armor-plate factory could be built for. They investigated the question, went into the minutest details, and reported fully to Congress, with all the plans and specifications. They say that to make a complete Government plant will only cost $3,447,912, a plant that will turn out 6,000 tons of armor-plate for the Government. These two companies that to-day have a monopoly of this business are claiming that they should be paid interest on a capital stock of $7,600,000, whereas the Government engineers say that you can build a plant of equal capacity and latest improvements for $3,800,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Having a capacity equal to both of them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Having a capacity equal to both the other plants.

Mr. OGDEN. May I ask the gentleman from Alabama a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. OGDEN. Assuming that the Government should build an armor plant, can they buy the right to use this Krupp process, or have these two companies the exclusive right to use it in the United States?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not know anything about that now.

Mr. OGDEN. I am asking in good faith, because I favor the gentleman's substitute, but I want to know what I am doing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. When the Government refuses to contract with the two companies and builds its own plant, those who own the process will be glad to sell it, because they will have nobody else to use it.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Or to sell the royalty.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. They are bound to sell the royalty if it exists. We have a contract now for harveyized armor at $11.20 a ton, which the Government can use to-day, and that armor made a splendid test on our battle ships in the war with Spain. This Krupp armor has never been tested in battle, but the harveyized armor that we use to-day has been tested, and not a single American ship has gone down under the test.

Mr. OGDEN. I do not want the gentleman to misunderstand me. I am in favor of the Government building its own plant. I favored that project two years ago, and I favor the substitute.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The battle ships used by Spain were supposed to be as good cruisers as any made. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to say this in conclusion: We can build an armor-plate factory for $3,600,000. We can thereby save an immense cost. We can save the profits that are now being dragged out of us by these companies. There is no man on the floor of this House who does not remember that when we passed the last appropriation bill, carrying $400,000, that it was in the midst of war and we had to surrender to the armor-plate factories. We could do nothing else.

Mr. HILBORN. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. HILBORN. I did not hear your answer to the question that was propounded by the gentleman a moment ago. Supposing that the two great armor-plate manufacturers of the country have purchased of the Krupps the exclusive right to make this plate, what would the United States do if we put up a plant of our own?

Mr. TODD. Blow those factories to pieces with our cannon.

Mr. OGDEN. Do these two companies own the exclusive right to use this process in this country?

Mr. HILBORN. That is what we understand.

Mr. HOPKINS. Give the source of your information.

Mr. OGDEN. We should like to know what information you have on that subject and where you get it.

Mr. HILBORN. We get it from the companies themselves. That is the only way we get it. They say they have that right.

Mr. OGDEN. They are all honorable men and all honorable companies, and that information is undoubtedly correct.

Mr. HENRY of Mississippi. And they are looking out for their own plants.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is no doubt in the world that if the two companies could buy the right from Krupp, and that if we go to manufacturing armor, they will have no more use for the process, and there is no doubt that they would sell it.

Mr. HILBORN. Why would they have no more use for the process? They are furnishing armor to other countries.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, if they are furnishing armor to other countries—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What about their own country?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Their own country?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The Krupps. They make armor for their own country.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I say that with that armor-plate factory these Carnegie and Bethlehem companies will no longer have any armor to make for our country, and we will make it ourselves.

Mr. HILBORN. But they are making it now for Russia.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am not denying that they are making it for Russia; but the thing I contend for is, that we should make our own armor plate. We have a right to use the harveyized process now, and if we can not negotiate with the Krupps in getting the use of this process, if it is better, why not go on using the harveyized process, which has proven a success? But I doubt not, if it was necessary and the time came, we would get the use of the Krupp process.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Will the gentleman pardon me for interrupting him?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. If the owners of the Krupp process are willing to make a contract with these two companies, whereby in consideration of the payment of a certain royalty they shall have the right to use the Krupp process, what reason is there in common sense that they would not make the same contract with the United States Government?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. None whatever. I am thoroughly satisfied on that point.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I only wish to say this to the committee: I say that these armor-plate factories have had this Government by the throat before. They have repeatedly held us up here and refused to furnish us with armor plate at the amount which the committees of Congress and the Government officials, after careful investigation, have reported as a fair and just amount to pay them. When the war with Spain came on, we had the case presented a year ago when there was nothing that we could do but surrender to the trust. We do not have to surrender to the trust to-day. These battle ships do not need their armor plate to-day, and will not need their armor plate for two years to come; and if they did need it, they could lie on the dock for a few years without any great depreciation.

The time is opportune for the people of this country to take control of this matter themselves, and not wait until another great war comes on, and then to force the prices that these trusts demand from them. We can build an armor-plate factory for a little over $3,000,000 and control the process ourselves; and we have found in the past that every time the Government has taken hold the manufacture of its own implements of war that it has reduced the cost and made better guns and better manufactured articles. The same argument in reference to the building of a plate factory that is made here was made when we built this gun factory down here in the navy-yard. It was contended on the floor of this House that we could not build the great guns for the Government—could not do it; that we would never have a gun fit for service; and yet to-day, within site of this Capitol, we are turning out the best guns that are made in the world, and at the cheapest price.

Everything points to the fact that the time is opportune for the Government to take hold of this matter and build its own armor-plate factory and tear the hands of this trust away from the throat of our Government. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I contend, and I shall ask the Chairman to consider in that light that this amendment is in line with the amendment that was offered to the general naval appropriation bill that provided for the building of the gun shop, that if the putting of a provision on one of these bills to build a battle ship is not in contravention of Rule XXI, then I say that a provision in here to build a factory for the manufacture of any of the articles needed in the construction of the battle ship is not in contravention of Rule XXI; and therefore, under the rules, we have got the right to offer this amendment, and the time has come when we should adopt it.

Mr. GROUT. I call the attention of the gentleman from Maine in charge of this bill to the special order for this hour.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. In view of the fact that a special order has been assigned for this time, I will defer my statement on the point of order. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12122, the naval appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 3425. An act for the relief of George A. Dickel & Co., at Nashville, Tenn.;

H. R. 11785. An act for relief of certain tobacconists of Lynchburg, Va.;

H. R. 8997. An act granting an increase of pension to John W. Brisbois;

H. R. 6551. An act withdrawing from entry and sale and granting unto the State of Wisconsin certain lands therein described; and

H. R. 11414. An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes.

NAVAL PERSONNEL BILL.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I am directed by the Committee on Naval Affairs to report back what is known as the naval personnel bill, with amendments of the Senate, and recommend that the amendments be nonconcurrent in, and that the conference asked by the Senate be agreed to.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I call attention to the special order for this hour, being the resolutions relating to the death of Senator MORRILL. If this is not going to take any time, I will yield; but it is already very late.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It will not take long.

The SPEAKER. It will require unanimous consent.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate may be nonconcurrent in formally, and that the conference asked for by the Senate be agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine reports back the bill (H. R. 10403) to reorganize and increase the efficiency of the personnel of the Navy and Marine Corps of the United States with Senate amendments thereto. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the amendments of the Senate shall be nonconcurrent in and that the House consent to the conference asked for by the Senate. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Mr. FOSS, Mr. DAYTON, and Mr. MEYER of Louisiana.

GENERAL RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH INDIAN RESERVATIONS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments to the bill H. R. 11868, which is on the Speaker's table, the bill granting a general right of way through Indian reservations, be nonconcurrent in and that a conference be asked with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the Senate amendments to the following bill be nonconcurrent in and that the committee of conference asked for be granted.

The title of the bill was read, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11868) to provide for the acquiring of rights of way by railroad companies through Indian reservations, Indian lands, and Indian allotments, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair appoints the following conferees: Mr. CURTIS of Kansas, Mr. LACEY, and Mr. LITTLE.

EULOGIES ON THE LIFE AND CHARACTER OF THE LATE SENATOR MORRILL.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

Whereas the House of Representatives has heard with profound sorrow that the Hon. JUSTIN SMITH MORRILL, a Senator from the State of Vermont and formerly a member of this body, died at his home in this city on December 27, 1898; Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the business of the House be now suspended that opportunity may be given for tributes to the memory of Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL, late a member of the Senate of the United States.

Resolved, That, as a particular mark of respect to the memory of the deceased and in recognition of his eminent abilities as a distinguished public servant in both Houses of Congress, the House at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be transmitted to the family of the deceased.

Ordered, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

The resolutions were unanimously agreed to.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, JUSTIN SMITH MORRILL, long a distinguished figure at both ends of this Capitol, was the legitimate and natural product of the State from which he came.

Near the close of the last century there went into the northeastern portion of Vermont from the other New England States a set of hardy pioneers who were every way the equals of those remarkable men who founded the State and who had already made her name famous in the annals of that time. Their descendants are still found on the farms and in the villages and are proud to trace their lineage to the first settlers who felled the forests and brought the rugged hillsides under cultivation. This movement of population into northeastern Vermont set in soon after the close of the Revolutionary war, but was given fresh impulse in 1791 by the admission of the State into the Union.

In 1795, among the sturdy, stalwart men who pushed back into the wilderness and into the very heart of what is now Orange County was Smith Morrill with a wife and seven children—five sons and two daughters—and he there set up his household gods. All five of the sons settled in Strafford, and there the Morrills are still to be found. They came from Chichester, N. H., but the family traces to Salisbury, Mass., and is undoubtedly of Puritan stock—Anglo-Saxon stock—which is fast encircling the earth with its victories and its civilization. In 1812, with true Anglo-Saxon spirit, this hardy frontiersman started with four of his sons, including Nathaniel, the father of JUSTIN, who was then and for a long time afterwards colonel of militia, to meet the British at Plattsburg, but was too late for the battle, though in season to join in pursuit of the fleeing British squadrons.

JUSTIN SMITH MORRILL was born in Strafford, Vt., April 14, 1810. He entered Congressional life March 4, 1855, as a member of this body, and died a Senator December 27, 1898, having been continuously in public service forty-three years and nine months, only a little less than one-half of his entire lifetime, and for the longest consecutive period of any man in the history of the country.

Here is a remarkable career as to length of service. It is no less remarkable for its rich legislative products and its beneficent influence on the industrial and economic conditions of the American people.

But before speaking of him as a public man and statesman let us for a moment look at him as a boy and the prosperous young man of business. He was the eldest of a family of ten children, which his father, the village blacksmith, clothed, fed, and educated by his daily toil at the forge and anvil.

Indeed, blacksmithing seems to have been a favorite trade in the family. That was the occupation of Smith Morrill, who, with his son Nathaniel, the father of JUSTIN, lived together and had a shop at Strafford Upper Village; and of Joseph, another son of Smith, who established a shop at the Lower Village. And later still it was the trade of Amos, the brother of JUSTIN S.

But these men were more than the ordinary blacksmith whose well-developed arm—

With steady sledge
Smites the shrill anvil all day long.

They did this, but they wanted a heavier blow with a larger hammer. They saw the waters of the riotous Ompomposuc flowing past and harnessed them in each village to a trip-hammer and supplied the farmers with axes, hoes, and scythes, rude of construction, of course, but up with the times. And such was the enterprising industry of these men that to this day among the traditions of the town one will learn how, with no eight-hour law in the way, the early morning slumbers of the villagers were broken by the well-accentuated music of these trip-hammers.

From this glimpse of his ancestry it will be seen that Senator MORRILL came of working stock; and how well he kept the family record let the industry and diligence of his whole life make answer. He was emphatically a self-made man. His education was quite limited. It was, in fact, ended and he was out of school at 14. It was acquired at the district school, with two terms at the academy. Rather scant scholarship, the boys of to-day would think, on which to start in business or statesmanship; and yet Senator MORRILL made a great success of both, not through accident or luck, but by faithfully and ably performing the things that befell him to do, and by all the time being a learner. He had not only the spirit of inquiry, but no trace of dogmatism, which always bars the way to both knowledge and wisdom.

But Nathaniel Morrill's family was increasing in numbers, and JUSTIN was old enough to help in its support, or at least to support himself, and he was hired out to Judge Harris to work in his store for two years on a salary of $30 for the first year and $40 for the second. He had enough to do, had plain food, and was really well used, and yet he frequently importuned his father to relieve him of the monotonous rigor of the contract. But his father knew that the discipline was making a man of the boy, and it undoubtedly did much toward laying the foundation for his success in after life.

He faithfully completed the contract, and his service was so intelligent and reliable that four years afterwards, he having been meantime in Portland, Me., as a clerk, Judge Harris took him in as partner, and together they conducted a large and successful business for about fifteen years, when both retired with large profits. Judge Harris at the time of forming the partnership was already a rich man for those days, and he furnished the money and young MORRILL took charge of the business. It is the testimony of a cotemporary that by his courteous treatment of customers and his absolutely truthful representations to them he rapidly became the most popular merchant in town and did double the business of any other.

On his retirement from business he purchased and improved as a farm a tract of land abutting on the village street, on which he erected a modest but elegant home, and in 1851 married Miss Ruth Swan, a Massachusetts lady of cultivation and refinement, who gracefully dispensed a homelike hospitality that well supplemented the unostentatious life of her husband. She passed away only a few months in advance of him, beloved and mourned by all who knew her.

In 1834 Andrew Tracy, of Woodstock, who had served a single term in this body, declined a renomination, and JUSTIN S. MORRILL, the retired merchant and quiet but studious cultivator of the soil, was presented by his friends for the nomination and received it. He was but little known outside of Orange County, and even there had taken no part in public matters, though he had been mentioned in connection with several offices, including the lieutenant-governorship. During the fifteen years he was in trade he devoted himself unremittingly to his business, his only diversion being found in his constantly increasing library of standard English authors. He never read works of fiction. He frequently said, "Life is too short to waste upon them;" but was a constant reader of substantial works. During all this time, including the six or seven years he was establishing a home and setting his little farm in order, if he felt any of the stirrings of ambition there was no betrayal of them to the public. He still held aloof from politics, the only public office he ever held before his nomination to Congress being that of justice of the peace.

Andrew Tracy, the outgoing member, was one of the ablest lawyers in the State, and his immediate predecessors were William Hebard, also a prominent lawyer, and Jacob Collamer, eminent as lawyer and jurist and afterwards as Senator, whose statue now stands in Statuary Hall. As might naturally be expected, with this array of talent preceding him the nomination of this unknown Orange County farmer was not entirely acceptable to the district, and resulted in a bolting candidate, who drew off some 2,000 votes. Mr. MORRILL, however, was elected by a small majority—100—and took his seat December 4, 1835, and never thereafter was he troubled with bolting candidates. He was six times elected to the House, and once after squarely declining, and six times to the Senate, and every time with the united support of his party. When the people of Vermont found him out they were as zealous in his support as were his Orange County friends when they first presented him to the district and their heart was in their vote every time.

Representative MORRILL came into public life at the very opening of an important epoch of American history. The "irrepressible conflict" between freedom and slavery was asserting itself as never before. The Missouri compromise had been repealed and Kansas and Nebraska thrown open to slavery. Kansas already had quite a population, and the question whether it should come into the Union as a free or slave State was the absorbing one North and South. The settlers were already arrayed on either side and collisions were frequent, and more than once Sharp's rifle in the hands of free-State men spoke in defense of their cabins and in behalf of liberty. In the very first session of Mr. MORRILL's service the question of the admission of Kansas was up, and it was upon this subject, June 28, 1836, that he made his maiden speech in the House. Among his opening words are the following:

The South has its sins quite the color of scarlet, but ought not to be made to bear these and the sins of the North also, which are not altogether white as wool. The South say—and I believe truly—that if they have slaves Northern traders greatly aided in their introduction. The race of Northern traders is not yet extinct. If the slave power has increased, it is because Northern traders have largely contributed to that result. Northern doo-faces—the Buck-anans—for the purposes of thrift and political ambition, have sneaked into the camp of the South and tendered from time to time various outposts of liberty, and yet we heap the chief obloquy upon those who were merely the recipients of such disgraceful generosity. As well might we find fault with the British for not kicking Arnold out of their presence when he offered to surrender West Point. As well taunt the receiver of stolen goods and let the thief go unrebuked!

I propose to discuss the propriety of the immediate admission of Kansas as a State of this Union, and, to some extent, the hindrances thrown in the way by the vexed question of slavery—not all of which are Southern men alone responsible for.

This well-timed conciliatory exordium was followed by convincing reasons for the prompt admission of Kansas under the free-State constitution presented by the Topeka legislature; and at the same time he paid his compliments to the code of slave laws enacted by the rival Le Compton legislature. This speech presented in a clear and attractive manner the great issue which then overshadowed all others, and must have produced a favorable impression alike upon the House and the country. Among his closing words were the following, which show better than any statement of mine the broad, charitable, statesmanlike temper of the man:

Why postpone action upon this subject? Are there any gentlemen hoping something better will turn up? I appeal to the sound sense of the House, whether the present angry agitation of the subject of slavery will pay? Gentlemen have eyes, and each must see and judge for himself whether slavery is likely to win any strength not already lodged in the Constitution in a policy of persistent aggression or not; and, if to win even temporarily, at what future cost. If slavery has nothing to win, can there be any mode of more gracefully closing the contest than by a speedy admission of Kansas as a free State? Will not sectional pride suffer less humiliation by such an adjustment than by any decision to be obtained by civil war, executive power, or by a legislative restoration of the Missouri compromise?

But the contest was not to be thus "gracefully" closed, and no thought seemed to have been taken whether greater or "less humiliation" was to follow. The free-State constitution was rejected by Congress and the slave constitution submitted by Congress to Kansas was rejected by the people of that State by more than 10,000 majority. Here at the capital, the storm center of public opinion, the free-State men were jubilant and those from the slave States were defiant. The debates in the two Houses grew more acrimonious and the relations between the social sets of the two sections every day became more strained and embarrassing. The great issue was rapidly approaching a crisis. Abraham Lincoln was elected President, and the Southern States, throwing aside all restraint, one after another passed their ordinances of secession and commenced organizing a military force, and at last it became plain to all that we were swiftly drifting into the maelstrom of civil war. Some replied harshly to the withdrawing Senators and Members; but on the report of the committee of thirty-three, one from each State, to consider the situation, among other things, Mr. MORRILL said:

Let me appeal to all parties to try and live under that Union a little longer. * * * Give us another span of seventy years and prolong the hopes of mankind in the possibility of man's power of self-government. Do not let us break up the model which patriots, though with unequal steps, in contiguous as well as far-distant countries, have struggled and are struggling to mold institutions like those among which our own still live the leading example. But if our attempts to put off the evil day shall fail, and this matchless form of free government is to be put to the extremest peril, it will rally all the vigor remaining in its Constitution in behalf of self-preservation. It can not abnegate its power, and it will not die willingly. The great heart of the nation will confront all dangers and survive, I trust, to cover friends and foes with countless blessings.

How completely is the prophecy of these closing words being fulfilled. Verily the nation has survived, "to cover friends and foes with countless blessings." But the noticeable thing, and that which is characteristic of the man, is that there is no trace of the bitterness and venom of that spiteful time in it. It is, in every word and line, an appeal with no semblance of a threat. The majority of the committee of thirty-three were for compromise and concession—anything to avert war. The minority were for war, without parley or delay.

Representative MORRILL, foreseeing that war was inevitable, and believing in the self-preservation power of the national sovereignty over all the States, spoke forth in sorrow and not in anger the "words of truth and soberness;" and through it all, like a thread of gold, ran the message, "Peace on earth, good will toward men." The speech of Mr. MORRILL and of a few others on that occasion stand out as a green spot in the tempestuous waste covered by the angry proceedings of that day.

But as wise and statesmanlike as was the course of Representative MORRILL in the dark, uncertain days of 1861, and as able as he proved himself to be after the war as a member of the Joint Reconstruction Committee, history has already placed far above this service, and rightfully, too, his contributions to the educational, financial, and tariff legislation of the country.

Mr. MORRILL's fiscal and tariff record is truly wonderful. It began in his very first term of service in his opposition to the tariff of 1837, which still further reduced the low duties of the Walker tariff of 1846. He made an able speech against the bill, and was almost the only New England member who voted against it, so feeble at that time was the protection sentiment, which, under his leadership, soon became the settled policy of the new Republican party, just then springing into being and into control of affairs.

This new tariff became a law March 3, 1857, and in the fall of that year came what is known in history as the financial and industrial crash of 1857, the effects of which hung like a pall over Buchanan's entire Administration. Trade and industry were paralyzed. The Treasury was empty. The revenues of the Government fell far short of its current expenditures, and national bankruptcy stared the American people in the face. And to intensify this dismal condition of affairs already could be heard the portentous mutterings of the fratricidal war that soon followed.

In the midst of these financial difficulties the deliverer came. JUSTIN S. MORRILL, the plain merchant-farmer from the little State of Vermont, prepared and reported from the Committee on Ways and Means, though he was not then chairman, a bill entitled "An act to provide for the payment of outstanding Treasury notes, to authorize a loan, to regulate and fix the duties on imports, and for other purposes."

He carried it through the House. It finally passed the Senate, the free trade strength of that body having become weakened by the withdrawal of the Senators from the cotton States, and it was signed by James Buchanan only forty-eight hours before his term expired. This act has since become known in history as the Morrill tariff of 1861; and it was this tariff, supplemented by certain additional acts and by a system of internal taxation and by loans, all of which came from Mr. MORRILL's committee and most of which were reported by him, that kept the Treasury in funds during the war and at its close enabled the Government to commence at once the payment of the vast debt it had incurred, and enabled it also in the twenty years that followed the war to pay on that debt in principal and interest over $3,500,000,000.

To the casual reader of history it will seem a little strange that Mr. MORRILL could have secured the passage of this high protective tariff within four years from the passage of the tariff of 1857, the lowest since 1812 and with which the majority of all parties were at the time satisfied; and especially is it strange that it should have commanded the approval of a Democratic President. Mr. Blaine, in his Twenty Years of Congress, in speaking of this, says:

It was a singular combination of circumstances, which on the eve of the Southern revolt led to the inauguration of a policy that gave such industrial and financial strength to the Union in its hour of dire necessity, in the very crisis of its fate.

It was truly "a singular combination," not the least feature of which, as I believe, was the man who piloted this measure along the shoals, between the rocks, and through the breakers of legislation to a place on the statute book. Verily, here was a time when the occasion and the man met.

Mr. MORRILL was then in the prime of life—tall and erect, of fine presence and winning manners; with a face that beamed in every line with kindness and without a single trace of acerbity in it; of a quiet, mild temperament, but industrious and alert; never self-assertive or aggressive, but at the same time self-reliant and firm as the everlasting hills of his native State; modest, but never shirking responsibility; not an orator,

He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Nor Jove for his power to thunder, but he always spoke wisely and well. No questions could be asked about the schedules of his bill or of the thousands of items they contained that he did not promptly and pleasantly answer. Indeed, he knew as completely about these thousands of items as he did about the thousands of articles in the Strafford store, from which it would seem he graduated for this very work. Others, of course, assisted, but not only was he the father of the bill, he was also its sponsor at every point; and while his associates were wrangling over sectional questions he was constant in his devotion to this protective measure; and when most in earnest was still suave and persuasive; and the House stood by him, not alone because he aroused no antagonisms, but because they had confidence in the man, in his wisdom, and in his transparent honesty.

Whoever will examine the proceedings of Congress covering that time will be constrained to admit that had there been no JUSTIN S. MORRILL in the House, no protective tariff measure would have been enacted until after the inauguration of the Republican Administration. But as it would almost seem Providence had ordered, one was already on the statute book furnishing the sinews for the terrible war that soon followed. Mr. Blaine, in his book, says:

The passage of the Morrill tariff was an event which would almost have marked an era in the history of the Government if public attention had not been at once absorbed in the struggles which were far more engrossing than those of legislative halls. It was, however, the beginning of a series of enactments which deeply affected the interests of the country, and which exerted no small influence upon the financial ability of the Government to endure the heavy expenditure entailed by the war which immediately followed.

For the first time in tariff legislation, this bill contained provisions imposing specific and ad valorem duties on the same article, thus taking a middle course between the contending factions for these two methods of levying duties. This middle or compound system recognized all there was to the ad valorem argument, and by means of the specific provision guarded against undervaluation, if not wholly, to such an extent as was satisfactory to the advocates of specific duties; and without doubt it facilitated the passage of the bill. This new and important feature of that bill bears loud testimony to the wisdom and constructive genius of Mr. MORRILL, and the testimony is continued to the present day, for it is now a well-recognized feature of every protective-tariff bill.

There are other features of this bill I would like to speak about, but will not delay the House.

Of his tariff work it must suffice to say that the Morrill tariff and the name of its author are together embalmed in history, and will there remain as long as governments exist among men.

Mr. MORRILL was placed on the Committee on Ways and Means by Speaker Orr in the Thirty-fifth Congress, where he remained until he went to the Senate, though he did not become chairman until the Thirty-ninth Congress, when a new committee, viz, on Appropriations was formed, and Thaddeus Stevens, another distinguished Vermonter, but representing a Pennsylvania district, was made chairman of the new committee and Mr. MORRILL chairman of Ways and Means. During the war Mr. Stevens had been chairman of this committee, but the two worked together like brothers. Mr. Stevens always recognized Mr. MORRILL as an authority on tariff and finance; he was also conscious of his matchless influence in committee and on the floor, and when anything difficult was to be accomplished this great debater and skillful parliamentary leader deferred to Mr. MORRILL, whose word he knew to be law and gospel with his fellows. A third of a century ago the name of the great commoner, Thaddeus Stevens, was upon all lips, and traditions of his eloquent harangues, filled with brilliant sallies and biting witticisms, still linger in this Hall, and what place he may take in history I will not undertake to say; but sure it is that his quiet, unpretending, industrious compeer already has assigned to him a niche in the temple of fame.

The idea of permanently endowing out of the public lands an institution of learning in each State for instruction in agriculture and science is believed to have been original with JUSTIN S. MORRILL. But whether or not the conception was his, certain it is that he is the man who put the land-grant-college act upon the statute book. It seems to have been an early and favorite project with him. It is not generally known how long and patiently and against what reverses he struggled with this pet measure. It passed both Houses in the Thirty-sixth Congress, but was vetoed by Buchanan on the ground that it was unconstitutional and that the Treasury was already empty.

It was reintroduced in 1862, and through his skillful management became a law, and to-day 64 land-grant colleges in all the States and Territories, representing an aggregate capital invested of $25,500,775.63, with 1,522 teachers and 25,069 students, constitute the fruit of this legislation. The first fruit—but who will measure the far-reaching influence of this galaxy of industrial colleges upon the future of the American people? Who will compute the results?

The central purpose in founding them was to furnish the tiller of the soil such information and aid as would just a little lighten his burdens and if possible increase his profits, the former of which Mr. MORRILL knew to be heavy and the latter small.

His experience with his little farm in Strafford had revealed to him how little is known of the science of agriculture, really the chemistry of nature; how little is known of those hidden processes by which the harvest is made ready, but not always worthy of the sickle.

He saw also how scientific research alone could throw any light upon these problems, and how, too, not the farmer alone but all mankind were interested in their solution.

And then, too, born and reared among a working people and himself a worker, his sympathies naturally went out toward those who win their way by honest toil, and he said to himself: "Let us establish institutions of learning to fit this class the better to act their part in the battle of life; not by giving them instruction in the ancient classics nor in belles-lettres, but, in the language of the act itself, 'in agriculture and the mechanic arts, and to promote the liberal and practical education of the industrial classes in the several pursuits and professions in life.'"

Ordinarily he who founds an institution of learning is entitled to large credit. What shall be the measure of honor for the man who founded these thirty-eight colleges, from which goes out an army of educated men every year to mingle in the walks of life? What a legacy not alone to the present but the generations that shall go marching down the stretch of time! What a monument, too, to the wisdom and large-hearted statesmanship of the man who so amply provided for the "liberal and practical education of the industrial classes!" And what wonder that when he came to die, these institutions, their officers, professors, and students, all felt that they had indeed lost a friend, as did also the agriculturist and his coworkers throughout the length and breadth of the land, from the dairymen of California to the horticulturists of Illinois, who sent to the family resolutions laudatory of the dead statesman and expressive of their sense of personal bereavement?

The death of but few public men has so touched the hearts of the American people as the death of the man to whom we to-day pay tribute; and this was in large part because he had succeeded in accomplishing something in a public way for his fellow-men.

These two great public measures, of which Mr. MORRILL was the author and finisher, and of which I have spoken somewhat at length, because I think all will concede that they give him a place in his country's annals clearly above the average legislator, were both completed while he was still a member of this body, where he served for twelve years, ending March 4, 1867, at which time he took his seat in the Senate, and by reason of his long and distinguished record in the House he at once took higher position and rank in that body than is usual for the new Senator. His committee assignments were soon the very best, Finance, Public Buildings and Grounds, and Education and Labor being among the number.

When John Sherman left the Senate for the Treasury portfolio under President Hayes in 1877, Mr. MORRILL became chairman of the great Committee on Finance, which he retained until his death, except for the short time when the opposition was in control. And as the head of this great committee the Senate and the country had the benefit of his large experience and ripe judgment on all the financial questions of the day. He was indeed a recognized authority on finance, and his opinions had great weight alike with the Senate, at the Treasury Department, and with bankers and capitalists and solid men of business throughout the country.

He was strongly urged by President Hayes to take a seat in his Cabinet, but preferred to remain in the Senate as the servant of the little State he loved so well.

But time forbids that I follow in detail, as I would like, Mr. MORRILL's long Senatorial career, which is everywhere luminous with wisdom of both speech and action, and nowhere clouded with distrust or the faintest breath of suspicion. The people of his State were not only proud of him but they believed in him, and with one voice called him again and again to the high trust he so ably and honorably kept. But meanwhile—

The muffled tramp of years
Come stealing up the slope of time, and the erect figure of 44, when he entered public life, would hardly be recognized in the venerable form of 88, with its slight literary stoop, but the face always fine, a model for the artist, was the same, only grown finer still from the moldings of the gentle, just spirit within. Mr. MORRILL was always a student, was never idle, and when not absorbed in public duties, or with his farm in Strafford, for mental recreation he turned to standard literature, and as the result was the possessor not only of much literary information, but of excellent literary taste. The little book he prepared for his friends a few years ago, entitled "The Self-Consciousness of Noted Persons," shows a wide range of careful reading, which he kept up until the day of his death. And as an illustration of his industry and literary taste he left in manuscript, not quite complete, in his chaste handwriting almost as plain as print, a new and enlarged edition of this book, in which he gives such additional instances which he had found in his later readings as would illustrate its title.

It is only natural that a man in whom there was not the slightest trace of conceit, and in whom modesty itself seemed personified, should have noticed in his reading those passages where distinguished persons betrayed consciousness of their importance; and it is fit that such a man should make a collection of them for amusement and instruction. In fact this little book is only a literary embodiment of the well-known pleasant and humor of its author, which continued unabated to the last. Surely his was a beautiful, triumphant old age. His temperate, well ordered life had brought to his closing years more than usual vigor of mind and body; and on the anniversary of his birth thousands of friends were wont to assemble with cordial greetings and congratulations, so that this annual gathering in honor of the aged Senator came to be a settled social function of the capital.

These occasions called out the very elite of official and social life, Members, Senators, cabinet ministers, Justices of the Supreme Court, foreign legations, and Presidents also paid their respects, and the grace and dignity with which the venerable Senator and Mrs. Morrill received their guests would have done honor to a prince and princess of the blood. The distinguished character of this annual gathering illustrates better than any words of mine the high place held by this grand old man in the confidence and esteem of all classes, high and low, for to them were also bidden the plain, common people, who were made equally at home with those high in rank.

Notwithstanding his advancing years, Mr. MORRILL's mental vigor was as great as ever.

The older he grew in body the younger he seemed to grow in spirit, his bright sunny nature shining out as though no shadow was near. He was, in very truth, a young old man, retaining all of the purity and much of the imagery and harmony of youth. But the—

Inaudible and noiseless foot of time—

was steadily carrying him toward the dark valley, and in his serene and peaceful old age, with one foot already in the border land, he could well have said, in the words of Longfellow, to whom, by the way, he was related in blood:

Age is opportunity no less
Than youth itself, though in another dress,
And as the evening twilight fades away
The sky is filled with stars, invisible by day.

But at last in the merry Christmas time, full of years and full of honors, as a child falls asleep he passed away. And on this anniversary of the birth of the Father of His Country, a fit day for these memorial exercises, the two Houses of Congress have suspended business for the purpose of reviewing his work, recounting his virtues, and paying tribute to his memory. Meanwhile he sleeps with his kindred in the narrow valley where he first saw the light and with the people he loved and served, and who in turn loved and honored him. And now we bid our kind, benevolent, lovable friend a tender good-bye until we meet again, as was his belief, in that celestial country where at last shall be found—

The day that hath no evening,
The health that hath no sore,
The light that hath no ending
But lasteth evermore.

Mr. POWERS. Mr. Speaker, the status which the small States should occupy in the proposed new government was one of the troublesome questions that vexed the deliberations of the Constitutional Convention of 1787. The debate upon this question was long drawn out, exciting intense interest, and at times seemed to place in peril the objects for which the convention assembled. It was solved at last by incorporating into the Constitution a provision, irrevocable by amendment, that in the Senate all the States, large and small, should have an equal voting strength.

Vermont was admitted into the Union in 1791, when the history of this contention in the constitutional convention was fresh in the minds of her people. Some of her people were anxious over this question and hesitated about linking her fortunes with those of the other States. Vermont was an inland State, had but little promising commercial growth, and having a population of only 30,000 people, was clearly exposed to the danger apprehended by the smaller States of the original thirteen. But having determined to join the new Union, she resolved to make her equality in the Senate something more than mere voting strength. She resolved to make an equal impress on legislation, and selected as her first Senators Moses Robinson, a graduate of Princeton, who had been chief justice of her highest court for ten years, and Stephen R. Bradley, a graduate of Yale, who had been a judge of the same court, and one of the foremost lawyers of his day. The standard of Senatorial equipment thus set up has been followed to this day.

Vermont was admitted into the Union one hundred and eight years ago. During this time 24 different persons only have been sent by her to the Senate. Of this number, 10 have been chief justices of her supreme court. Five others have been distinguished members of the same court, and 3 of the 15 have been district judges of the United States court. Of the remaining 9 in the list, the names of 2 familiar to the present generation, George F. Edmunds and JUSTIN S. MORRILL, need only to be mentioned to show that the first conception of a Senatorial ideal has continued to guide the choice of Vermont throughout the century's length. There is not an inferior man, there is not an average man, in the entire list. On the contrary, every one in his day and generation has been preeminently better equipped than any other of her citizens for this high office.

According to the Vermont standard, Senators, like poets, are born, not made. No scandal has ever in her history attached to the choice of a Senator. No one in the list ever sounded his own praises nor employed others to do it for him nor ever paid one farthing to promote his candidacy. Each has attracted the public eye and won public confidence by his intrinsic merit and his lofty character, unaided by the arts of the petty politician. When, therefore, on the 4th of March, 1867, Vermont commissioned Mr. MORRILL to represent her in the Senate of the United States she certified to that ample equipment in character and attainments which entitled him to a place on her most illustrious roll of honor. That her confidence was not misplaced is known of all men. Nearly all those who preceded and have followed him were college-bred men and members of the legal profession.

Mr. MORRILL lacked the advantages of both qualifications so essential in the peculiar work of the Senate, but he overcame this disadvantage by a course of study which he adopted in his early manhood. He was a man of the widest range of reading, and thus became, according to the standard of Bacon, "a full man."

His natural tastes led him into the field of constitutional study. Long before he entered political life he procured and carefully studied Blackstone's Commentaries upon English Law. He discovered the basic principles of the common law of England, the great unwritten code that limits and defines all the rights and measures, all the duties, of freemen in their relations to the government under which they live and in their relations with each other—that great compendium of personal liberty upon which, as a foundation stone, has been erected the superstructure of English and American statutory and constitutional law. He gave much study to what might properly be called the philosophy of taxation—that most subtle of sciences that has vexed the statesmanship of all civilized nations for centuries.

The wisdom of man has not yet devised a scheme of taxation that will rest with equal pressure and exact justice upon all the proper objects of contribution to the public revenue. Mr. MORRILL's studies of legal and economic questions were stimulated by his natural fondness for such learning. It was not a means to an end, for he never contemplated a life of public service. He had at this time no ambition for political office. He never even had a seat in either house of the State legislature. But in 1854 an unexpected vacancy occurred in the representation of his Congressional district in this House, and by common consent Mr. MORRILL was selected for the vacancy.

He was 44 years old when he entered the House. He brought to the discharge of his new and unaccustomed duties a vast treasure house of learning upon the special subjects involved in general legislation, and he soon took high rank among his associates as a member admirably equipped for public service. He came to Congress at a critical epoch in our history. The country was in the throes of bitter strife over the question of American slavery. Mr. MORRILL, while in full sympathy with the moral aspects of the question which underlay public sentiment at the North, stood where Lincoln stood, ready to leave slavery where the Constitution had placed it, with no disposition to interfere with it as a domestic institution.

Mr. MORRILL was the author of two public measures while serving in the House which demonstrated his claim to rank among the foremost statesmen of his generation—one, the act establishing land-grant colleges; the other, the tariff act which bears his name. The land-grant college act will perpetuate his name and fame among the plain people of the country for centuries to come. Born and bred among this class of people, identified with them and one of them, conscious of his own lack of educational advantages in the formative period of life, he conceived the plan of appropriating a part of the proceeds of the sales of public lands to the educational uses of that large portion of American citizenship that belongs to the industrial classes.

The act contemplated the establishment of colleges in every State, with a curriculum of study primarily designed to meet the wants of every industrial class, but involving, as well, the arts and sciences and military tactics. He himself was a living example of what culture will do for the industrial class. The farmer, the artisan, the wage-earner of whatsoever name, is entitled to the same opportunities in the race of life as their more fortunate fellow-citizens. Under our system of government, where every citizen is a sovereign and where the industrial classes are the majority dictators of public sentiment, it is of the highest importance—nay, it is vital—that this majority should be guided by that conservatism that follows in the wake of education. The plan, therefore, accomplished a high patriotic purpose. It promoted the good of the whole body of citizenship by the elevation of a part to a higher level and a wider plane in the conduct of public affairs. Sixty-four of these colleges are now in successful operation, thus attesting the wise foresight and beneficent purpose of the author of their creation.

The Morrill tariff act became a law in the closing days of Mr. Buchanan's Administration. When passed, American industries were paralyzed, American labor was a wandering tramp in the land, American credit was so low that Government paper was sold at a discount of 12 per cent. This is not the time nor here the place to attempt any analysis of the causes operating to produce the results that the history of the times records. Whatever may be said of the theories of financial legislation that guided Mr. MORRILL in framing the tariff act referred to, it will be conceded that its simple enactment changed the entire face of the industrial situation. It marked a radical change in fiscal policy. In the short time that followed its enactment before the outbreak of the civil war it had put new life into American industry and restored the credit of the Government. As Webster said of Hamilton, Mr. MORRILL by this act "smote the rock of the national resources, and abundant streams of revenue gushed forth. He touched the dead corpse of public credit, and it sprang to its feet."

Mr. MORRILL's early studies, already alluded to, especially fitted him for a work of this kind. To discriminate between the various classes of imports, to determine the pressure that each should bear, to adjust such pressure in a way to encourage importations, and thus make revenue certain, and at the same time to preserve and encourage home industries, to generalize the system so that it may adjust itself to the innumerable interests of the whole people, thus keeping it within the bounds of constitutional limitation, called for statesmanship of the highest order. No higher tribute can be paid to Mr. MORRILL's financial genius than to say that at the outbreak of the civil war, which suddenly called for enormous revenues, the Morrill bill, so far as such revenues were to be raised by the taxation of imports, was made the model of the new legislation. So comprehensive, so scientific, and so equitable had been its construction that no change in the framework of his plan was even suggested. By it war revenues were as easily raised and their burdens distributed as peace revenues. The same general plan has been followed in subsequent legislation, and the Dingley Act now in force is grounded upon it. For the first time in our history Mr. MORRILL blended specific and ad valorem duties into one symmetrical whole, coordinating the best features of both and eliminating the faults of each.

The fame of Senator MORRILL in the homes, in the shops, and on the farms of our people will doubtless rest primarily upon his authorship of the land-grant college act, while in the halls of legislation and in the closets of doctrinaires it will rest primarily upon his authorship of financial legislation.

Mr. MORRILL was a lover of art. He was even a connoisseur. To him more than any other are the American people indebted for the conception and erection of that magnificent home of the Congressional Library, which foreigners concede to be the finest building of its kind on earth and which will be to our people "a thing of beauty and a joy forever."

Senator MORRILL's position on the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds gave him the opportunity to carry out his plans for beautifying the national capital. He was ambitious to see erected on the square opposite the Congressional Library a building for the accommodation of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Department of Justice, and other Federal offices. Such a building was demanded by the needs of this great court and, if constructed, would make the curtilage of the Capitol building itself more symmetrical.

His last speech in the Senate, which was made a few days before his death, was in favor of his bill to construct this building. It was my pleasure to listen to this speech. Surrounded by Senators, many of whom were in their boyhood when he first entered the Senate, and each of whom was greatly his junior in years and in service, Mr. MORRILL rose to urge his bill. His very presence inspired respectful attention. His sincerity of purpose excited a kindly sympathy. His earnest words compelled conviction. He was looked upon, thought of, and revered by his colleagues as a venerable man who had come down to them from a former generation. It required but a few earnest words—a plain recital of facts—and the bill received a unanimous vote. This was his last work. He had finished his course, and a few days later his long service in the councils of the nation, unparalleled in the history of the Government, was at an end.

As the brilliancy of the diamond is best reflected in the beauty of its setting, so a notable public career is best exalted and longest revered when it reflects the colorings of a pure and virtuous life.

Little need be said of Senator MORRILL as a man. His private life illumined his public career. His private character was absolutely free from stain. He was generous in disposition, affable in manner, dignified and courteous in all the relations of life. His home was the abode of hospitality and the temple of domestic joy. Of him, as of few men, it can be said that envy never distorted his views of the merits of others, nor led him to magnify his own. He won the love and confidence of his political opponents by his judicial fairness in the investigation and decision of controverted questions. In all the years of his long public life, amid scenes of stormy turmoil and crises of anxious foreboding, in all the care and vexations of private life, true as the needle to the pole, he went forward with even pace, with malice toward none, and with charity for all.

Mr. MORRILL was a worker. Until recently he was in his seat doubtless more hours than any other Senator. His analytical mind easily detected the weak points of a pending proposition. He was never swept off his feet by specious theory nor by ad captandam appeals. He was conservative by nature, and his study and experience made him more so.

"His genius," as Lamartine said of Mirabeau, "was the infallibility of good sense." As a speaker Mr. MORRILL had neither the polish nor the ornate diction of Sumner, nor the withering sarcasm and fiery invective that have made others of his colleagues in the Senate famous in history. But he had a clear conception in his own mind of the merits of a proposition and the happy faculty of stating his conclusions in clear and terse language. His power of illustration was remarkable, and he enlivened his discourse by frequent sallies of keen wit. If by eloquence you mean the power of moving men to action, Mr. MORRILL was eloquent. He won the sympathy of his hearers by his attractive personality and convinced their understanding by his candid and logical line of reasoning.

Such was the manner of man, public and private, that Vermont points to as her ideal for Senatorial honor.

On the last day of the last year, in the Senate Chamber of the nation, the President of the United States with his Cabinet, the Chief Justice and associate justices of the Supreme Court, the General of the Army with his staff, the ambassadors and ministers resident of foreign nations, Senators and Representatives in Congress, the élite of Washington society in official and civil life, were met to do honor to the work of the dead Senator in the very place of its consecration. Few men in our history have won such a tribute of official respect.

But there was another mourning circle bound to the dead Senator by closer ties and feeling a more personal sorrow—his loving constituency at home. Upon their demand, his remains were taken to the capitol of the State he had so long served, and on the first Monday of the new year, in the beautiful hall of our house of representatives, that hall where for six consecutive times he had been proclaimed as the first and only choice of our people for his high office, were met the officials of state and the nobility of our citizenship from every corner of our Commonwealth to look upon that face that had always in life been to them a benediction, and to pay the last grand honors to the servant who had so long held their confidence. No demonstration like this had occurred in our history as a State. It was an outpouring of universal love. It was a coronation. And now his body shall sleep in the sacred soil of the State he loved so well and whose honor he has so long upheld, in the shadows of her grand old mountains, whose everlasting foundations typify the solidity of his personal character and whose towering heights symbolize the lofty ideals which guided his public career.

His private life will be to our children a precept. His public life will be to his successors a model. The little State of Vermont, small in area, small in commerce, small in population, small in many things that excite the pride of men, has been made both great and grateful by the luster shed upon her annals by the eminent men she has sent to the Senate. To-day the whole country mourns the loss of him who was longest in her service.

The name of the grand old man of Europe will not longer linger in the lap of memory than that of the grand old man of America.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I can only emphasize in a few words what has been said by the sons of Vermont. JUSTIN S. MORRILL went to his reward full of honors and bearing the love not only of his relatives and neighbors, but of all in the wide circle in which he was known.

He was unique in his endowment and acquirements. Not because he was an eminent specialist in religion, law, business, or even in statesmanship, but unique in that just balance of qualities that constitute great wisdom.

In all things he proved himself a good and great man. He was preeminently a safe man. His highest art was simple truth. Witnessing the great qualities exhibited by great men in executive places in great exigencies, proving them to have phenomenal endowments, those who have known Mr. MORRILL best are justified in believing that few men of the past generation would have acquitted themselves any more to the satisfaction of their countrymen, had he been called to such a place, than JUSTIN S. MORRILL, of Vermont.

No man in public life excelled him in the power to so blend true wit, humor, fact, and argument in dignity and power as to make each the complement of the other and all one symmetrical whole.

The crystal purity of his life and the high plane of his public service give to his great qualities a power possessed by few men of most brilliant but less symmetrical parts. It is said the world is really moved by cranks and specialists, who, forgetting the one great whole, strive to secure exceptional progress in a part.

Many such men are noble and self-sacrificing to an eminent degree, and fill great and honorable places.

Having the qualities of such men in equipoise, Mr. MORRILL did not belong to their class.

He was of the men who conserve and make practical everything already attained, with a mind and heart ever open to accept and adopt the new. He could not be cajoled, persuaded, or forced to let go the slightest good approved of by experience for the most alluring promise of a better.

If there ever was a man who perfectly obeyed the injunction to "judge not according to appearances, but judge righteous judgment," and to "prove all things and hold fast that which is good," it was JUSTIN S. MORRILL, of Vermont.

All the noblest qualities vouchsafed to man were in him so equally developed that his greatness failed to fully impress itself on the casual observer. By those closest to him was he most admired.

Finally, he was all that is conveyed to the mind by the fullest and most noble conception of the meaning of the words, a good son and brother, a good husband and father, a good citizen, a great statesman, and a pure patriot.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, thoughtlessly we often use the expression "the good die young." Now and then "a good old man" is summoned, and we are reminded that death is no respecter of persons. Within a week the coordinate branch of Congress paid a fitting tribute to one of the youngest, ablest, and best members of the House—Mr. Simpkins, of Massachusetts.

To-day we pay tribute to one of the oldest, ablest, and best of the people's representatives in either branch of Congress. There was little in JUSTIN S. MORRILL's early life that gave promise of his remarkable career. As a clerk and partner in a country store, afterwards a Vermont farmer, he passed nearly one-half of his long life. Graduated from the common schools of Vermont, he was after that entirely self-educated.

There is no better place for self-education than on a New England farm. If the newspapers are few and far between, they are the more highly prized. If the books are rare, they are read more closely and pondered more carefully. The mind has time to digest; each book stimulates thought and arouses a keener thirst for knowledge. The farmer's boy naturally becomes a politician, who afterwards takes the post-graduate course in the village store. Here the neighboring embryo statesmen, seated on the barrels and boxes which adorn a country store, hold nightly sessions for the settlement of all questions, State and national. And in such rude parliament as this, out of the heated discussion and keenest debate, is often born the thought that guides the destinies of the nation.

Mr. MORRILL in the forty-fourth year of his age was called to represent a district in this House. He had never held office other than that of justice of the peace; and yet he had impressed himself upon the people of his district as an earnest and thoughtful student, a man of keen intellect, ripe judgment, and strong common sense, honest, capable, and able. He was elected as a Whig, but before he had taken his seat had taken part in the formation of the Republican party of Vermont, of which he was ever after a staunch supporter.

In his letter accepting the Whig nomination he did not hesitate to declare that he was "opposed to the admission of any more slave States into the Union" and was "in favor of prohibiting slavery in all the Territories belonging to the United States." He took his seat in December, 1855, in the Thirty-ninth Congress, and was serving his sixth term when elected to the Senate in 1866. He took the oath as Senator in March, 1867, and was, therefore, a member of that body for nearly thirty-two years. He had the longest continued service of any United States Senator.

His first speech in the House attracted wide attention, and was made in opposition to the tariff act of 1857. He never lost his interest in that great economic and revenue question. He afterwards served on and became chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means in the House, and from 1877, whenever his party was in power in the Senate, he was chairman of the Committee on Finance of that body.

He was largely instrumental in framing the tariff act of 1861, which bore his name, and all the war-revenue legislation while he was a member of the House; while every measure of revenue and finance that has been enacted into law since he became a member of the Senate has received the impress of his labor and thought.

Doubtless suggested by his own inability to avail himself of a collegiate education, he early became interested in the encouragement of higher education in the various States of the Union. He conceived the idea of great land grants in aid of colleges, and to him is largely due the credit of creating the legislation which has resulted in the building of 47 land-grant universities and colleges in the different States, both great and small, with each now turning out an army of young men with thorough intellectual equipment for the duties of life.

He served many years as chairman of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in the Senate, and was largely instrumental in the erection of many of the great and beautiful buildings which adorn the national capital. His crowning effort in this respect was in the creation of the grandest work of art in Washington, the Congressional Library building. The last speech he made in the Senate, on the 18th day of December, was in advocacy of a new Supreme Court building, to be erected on the square opposite the Congressional Library.

His period of service covered all the years of the war of the rebellion and the reconstruction period. During those trying years in the country's history his wisdom and business sagacity were always potent in the counsels of his party. He not only passed through all the exciting days and scenes of that wonderful period in our history, but he was spared to see the crowning days of reconciliation and peace in all sections of his country.

Such is a brief résumé of the life of a man who, after he had passed his meridian, gave almost half a century to the public service. He was a part of the most exciting and interesting events of our history. He confronted the gravest questions with which the country has had to deal. He contributed to the solution of these questions the most untiring research, an exhaustive array of facts, sound logic, wisdom, and unselfish patriotism.

It is said that he has made more than a hundred speeches in Congress, each one of which was instructive and useful. His speeches were noted for brevity and force. He never wasted the time of the public in unlimited deliberation and debate. His was the sincere work of an everyday American statesman, leaving a record of usefulness and honor which the greatest might emulate.

His was the best type of American manhood. His career was remarkable and unique. To his own State and to his country he lived the "grand old man" among American statesmen.

[Mr. BANKHEAD addressed the House. See Appendix.]

Mr. GROW. Mr. Speaker, in December, 1855, JUSTIN S. MORRILL took his seat in the old Hall, a Representative in Congress from the State of Vermont. The two great political party divisions of the American people were then Whig and Democratic. Mr. MORRILL took his seat on the Whig side of the House. For four years preceding I had occupied a seat on the Democratic side. But during the eight weeks' contest for the election of Speaker, we both voted for Nathaniel P. Banks. From that time to his death we were coworkers in the Republican party, with a personal friendship devoted and sincere and never in the least degree impaired.

I come now to lay an offering of affectionate sorrow upon his new-made grave, with a sadness such as falls upon the heart when a lifelong friend whispers that last earthly farewell as the spirit's frail bark puts off into the unknown dark, but with an abiding consciousness and unwavering faith that we shall meet again. For the world's Redeemer, in His teachings on the seashore and along the hillsides of Judea, bade the desponding of earth's pilgrims take courage, for the grave is not the end of man.

Mr. MORRILL's life was contemporaneous with that of all the Presidents except Washington. The death of both Jefferson and John Adams, the first after that of the "Father of his Country," was on the 4th day of July, 1826. At that time Mr. MORRILL was 16 years old, just entering upon the threshold of young manhood.

Our history since the adoption of the Constitution in 1789 can be divided into three important epochs or periods of about one-third of a century each, marking the formation and distinctive action of political parties, into which the American people have been divided during this hundred years. Each of these periods or epochs had its distinctive political agitation on grave questions of national welfare. The first of these periods ended in 1824 with four Presidential candidates and with the disintegration of the old political parties, known as Federal and Republican, and the formation of new ones, which finally took shape under the party name of Whig and Democratic, continuing thus until the repeal of the Missouri compromise in 1854. Since that time the two controlling political party divisions have been known as Republican and Democratic.

In each of these epochs or periods the country was engaged in war. In the first, from 1812 to 1816, was the second war of American independence with the "proud mistress of the seas," resulting in the establishment forever of the inviolability of American citizenship by any foreign power. In the second period was the war with Mexico, resulting in a vast expansion of our territorial area, reaching from ocean to ocean. In the last of these three periods is the war with Spain, which marks a new era in the history of the nations.

In each of these periods or epochs, in addition to its war, great political questions have agitated the public mind on the hustings and in the forum, all of which have been comparatively settled except those in this last epoch, now just ended.

In the first was the question of the fundamental principles of the more perfect Union formed by our fathers, represented on one side by Thomas Jefferson and James Madison, on the other by John Adams, Alexander Hamilton, and John Marshall. In the second was the financial policy to be finally established in the Government and the constitutional limits of legislation between the government of the Union and that of the States. In the third, more intense and excitable than all others, was the question of the constitutional limits and restrictions on the expansion of slave-labor institutions, which finally culminated in the mightiest conflict of arms in the history of the race, ending with an indivisible Union and a country without a slave.

Mr. MORRILL's life began in the first of these three epochs or periods of national existence and ended with the third. His service in both the House and the Senate was a little over forty-three years, exceeding by six years that of any other person in continuous service. In the last two it can be said of him what Æneas said of himself in describing to Queen Dido the trials and the great deeds at the siege and fall of Troy, "quorum pars magna fui"— of which I was no insignificant part. In the legislation and the events of our country's history in these last two epochs of over fifty years Mr. MORRILL has been a conspicuous figure. By his untiring industry and unselfish devotion to the best interests of his country he impressed himself upon this great historic period and has linked his name inseparably to most of its useful and enduring legislation.

His private worth, his amiable traits of character, and his public services have been specifically so faithfully portrayed that no additional words of mine are needed. Whoever by heroic or great beneficent acts stamps his character upon the pillars of the age in which he lives can never die. Though wrapped in the shroud, he will live in the affections of the present and the gratitude of coming time.

It can be truly said of Mr. MORRILL, what is the highest possible praise that can be bestowed on individual statesmanship, "He never gave to party what belonged to his country."

The battle of our life is brief—
The alarm, the struggle, the relief—
Then sleep we side by side.

But in that brief battle man is permitted by a kind Providence to perform deeds of greatness—deeds that live long after the marble crumbles and the brass fades.

The State of Vermont, with fitting and well-becoming pride, can engrave the name of JUSTIN S. MORRILL on the mountain sides of its polished marble and enduring granite, in her long list of distinguished citizens who, by their eminent services to their country, have made their names immortal.

The SPEAKER. In accordance with the resolutions already agreed to, the House, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the late Senator MORRILL, stands adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, the following executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Supervising Architect submitting an estimate of appropriation for a tower clock in the public building at Memphis, Tenn.—to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EXPORT BOUNTY.

Mr. ALLEN. I present a very carefully prepared document by David Lubin on the subject of export bounty. It is very interesting and also very small, and I move that it be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATOR FROM WEST VIRGINIA.

Mr. FAULKNER. I present the memorial of John T. McGraw, of Grafton, W. Va., remonstrating against the seating of Hon.

Nathan B. Scott as a Senator of the United States from the State of West Virginia for the term beginning March 4, 1899. I move that the memorial be printed as a document.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ELKINS, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. ROACH, February 3, 1899, proposing to give two years' pay to the widow and children of Joseph W. Etheridge, late superintendent of the Sixth life-saving district, who died from pneumonia contracted in the line of duty, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, submitted a favorable report thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. PRITCHARD, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 448) to provide for the formation of cooperative business corporations in the District of Columbia, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5351) to amend the act of Congress approved July 8, 1893, entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and University Railroad Company of the District of Columbia," reported it without amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4833) relating to electric lighting in the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4784) to extend Sixteenth street in the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2484) for the relief of Old Dominion Granite Company, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1749) for the prevention of bastardy in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1084) to further regulate the sale of milk in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1085) for the prevention of smoke in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1657) to authorize and require the extension of the lines of the Metropolitan Railroad Company of the District of Columbia, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2713) to authorize the extension of the Metropolitan Railroad, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 930) for the relief of Esther A. Keyser, reported adversely thereon, and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1841) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the settlement of all outstanding claims against the District of Columbia, and conferring jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear the same, and for other purposes," approved June 16, 1890, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. McMILLAN. The above bills were reported adversely because corresponding House bills have been acted upon.

I am directed by the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment proposing an appropriation of $45,000 for grading, regulating, and curbing the street on the west border of the Zoological Park from Woodley road to Cathedral avenue, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, to report it with an amendment. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and be printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. FAULKNER January 31, 1899, proposing an appropriation of $3,000 for arrearages of rent in connection with the municipal building, No. 464 Louisiana avenue, for use of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. McLAURIN, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. HANSBROUGH on February 21, 1899, proposing to appropriate $10,000 for the relief of the Devils Lake Sioux Indians, of North Dakota, upon the Devils Lake Indian Reservation, in that State, and also $15,000 for the relief of the Turtle Mountain band of Chippewa Indians, in North Dakota, for subsistence and other necessities, and for expenses incurred by them in their delegation to Washington, D. C., regarding their claim for unceded lands, etc., intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. ROACH, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3370) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Trapp, of South Omaha, in the State of Nebraska, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. MONEY. I am directed by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5560) providing for an annex to the Federal building at Jackson, Miss., to report it favorably without amendment, and I ask for its present consideration. It will take but a moment.

Mr. ALLEN. Let it be read for information.

Mr. LODGE. There are many public-building bills on the Calendar, and various Senators have an interest in them. I think if we are to pass any of the public-building bills, proper time should be given to all of us who have bills on the Calendar and not run the chance of picking one out here and there. It seems to me that course would be a great deal fairer.

Mr. MONEY. Of course if the Senator objects, that will be the end of it. This is not a bill for the erection of a public building; it is simply for necessary improvements in a building already constructed.

Mr. LODGE. I have a bill of exactly the same character for an addition. It seems to me that we ought to take all of them together. That is the fair way.

Mr. HAWLEY. The regular order.

Mr. MONEY. I submit from the committee a report adopting the House report.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2258) granting a pension to Mary E. Taylor, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10605) to increase the pension of Annie Cusack, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also (for Mr. CANNON), from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4006) for the relief of Joseph B. Presdee, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. THURSTON, from the Select Committee on International Expositions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5500) to encourage the holding of a pan-American exposition on the Niagara frontier, within the county of Erie or Niagara, in the State of New York, in the year 1901, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WARREN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. HARRIS February 16, 1899, proposing to appropriate $50,000 for the erection of barracks, quarters, gun sheds, and stables for one battery of light artillery at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. STEWART February 8, 1899, proposing to aid the public-land States in the reclamation of desert lands therein, and more especially to enable them to secure a revenue wherewith the lands granted to them by section 4 of the act of Congress approved August 18, 1894, may be fully and effectively reclaimed, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

He also, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to whom was referred the bill (S. 752) to provide for the construction of a public building at Salem, Oreg., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (S. 5554) for the purchase of a site and the erection of a public building thereon in the city of New Brunswick, N. J.;

A bill (S. 5559) for the erection of a public building at Norwich, Conn.;

A bill (S. 5556) authorizing and directing the construction of an addition to the United States post-office in the city of Minneapolis, Minn.;

A bill (S. 5457) for the erection of a public building in the city of Elgin, Ill.; and

A bill (S. 5527) to provide for a public building at Winston, N. C.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 253) to authorize the appointment of Charles S. Hatch a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. LINDSAY, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5474) granting a pension to Ellen Hardin Walworth, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 10667) to change name of Capital Railway Company, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. STEWART, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the amendment relative to the claims of the William Cramp & Sons Ship and Engine Building Company for damages and losses sustained by it, etc., submitted by Mr. PENROSE on the 4th instant, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, reported it without amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Printing, reported an amendment to provide that hereafter all printers and bookbinders employed in the Government Printing Office shall be paid at the rate of 50 cents per hour for time actually employed, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

REPORT ON "THE COLONIAL SYSTEMS OF THE WORLD."

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the concurrent resolution submitted by Mr. FAIRBANKS on the 18th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,500 copies of the report entitled "The Colonial Systems of the World," prepared by the Bureau of Statistics, Treasury Department, 5,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, 3,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate, and 2,500 copies for the use of the Bureau of Statistics, Treasury Department.

BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING INVESTIGATION.

Mr. LODGE, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. MASON on the 21st instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That 2,000 copies of the testimony of the following witnesses, taken before the Lyman investigating committee that investigated the Bureau of Engraving and Printing in 1897, be printed for the use of the Senate: Claude M. Johnson, Director of the Bureau; Thomas J. Sullivan, Assistant Director of the Bureau; Alexander G. Morgan, paymaster of the Bureau; Ernest Gibbons, paymaster clerk of the Bureau; J. McGill, chief of the bindery of the Bureau; Emile Huck, William McKinney, and Isaac Gerrodette, foremen in the plate-printing division of the Bureau; also Peter Bain, Peter McGirr, William Peck, Chris Bollinger, Nathan King, George P. Jackson, T. C. Ray, James Turner, James Erwin, William Hay, and Mr. — Childs.

RETENTION OF REGIMENTAL COLORS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5533) to permit volunteer regiments to retain their colors, to report it favorably without amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of that bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill just reported from the Committee on Military Affairs?

Mr. ALLEN. What is the bill?

Mr. SPOONER. It is a bill authorizing volunteer regiments to retain their flags, to be deposited in the statehouses of the various States. It is recommended by the War Department and by the Adjutant-General.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NORTHERN CHEYENNE INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. MANTLE. I am directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report back favorably, without amendment, the bill

(S. 5561) establishing the boundaries of the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation, Mont., and making appropriations for purchasing improvements thereon and certain land situated therein, for purchasing cattle, fencing the reservation, and for other purposes; and I am also instructed by the committee to ask for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to pay $1,000 out of the appropriation for "Enforcement of the Chinese-exclusion act" to the collector of customs at Portland, Oreg., as additional compensation for duties in connection with the enforcement of said Chinese-exclusion act, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate

$300,000 for continuing the improvement of Yaquina Bay, Oregon, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $2,500 for the purchase or construction of a launch for the customs service for use at and in the vicinity of Astoria, Oreg., and also $100,000 for the construction of a revenue cutter for service at or near the mouth of the Columbia River and on Puget Sound, and limiting the cost of said revenue cutter to $225,000, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. WARREN submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $25,000 for additional expenses of public building at Cheyenne, Wyo., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 for the construction of a military post at or near Sheridan, Wyo., and limiting the cost of said post to $360,000, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GRAY (by request) submitted an amendment providing for the payment of additional rent, at the rate of $200 per month, for the building occupied by the Bureau of Chemistry, Department of Agriculture, and also for additional rent, at the rate of $50 per month, for the building occupied by the Bureau of Animal Industry, Department of Agriculture, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. TURLEY submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of War to expend part of the amount appropriated for "Shiloh National Military Park" to construct a gravel road from Selmer, on the Mobile and Ohio Railroad, to Pittsburg Landing, on the Tennessee River, in Tennessee, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BAKER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $35,000 for one new brick building and furniture at the Western Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, at Leavenworth, Kans., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SIMON submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $650,000 for the completion of the custom-house at Portland, Oreg., and increasing the limit of cost for said building to $1,200,000, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NELSON submitted an amendment, to strike out the name "Santos" and insert in place thereof the name "Sao Paulo," in the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. FORAKER submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to place the name of "American Boy" upon any one of the vessels authorized to be constructed in the naval appropriation bill, and also authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to receive any contributions that may be made for the construction of said vessel, intended to be proposed by him to the naval appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $16,000 to enable the Commissioner of Patents to have printed and bound by contract an alphabetical list or index of patentees from 1790 to 1873, inclusive, and also authorizing him to dispose of any publications in the Scientific Library not required for the use of the Patent Office, and such models of expired patents as are not required for the further use of the office, the proceeds to be used in procuring publications essential for the proper conduct of the work of the Patent Office, intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the physiological action and nutritive value of alcohol and alcoholic beverages, intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed.

referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

PROCEDURE IN CERTAIN PENSION CASES.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 86) entitled "An act providing procedure in certain pension cases."

ELIZABETH V. LITZENBERG.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following concurrent resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill of the House of Representatives No. 4508, granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth V. Litzenberg.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 21st instant approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 821) to increase the pension of Thomas J. Hangle; An act (S. 1373) for a public building at the city of Altoona, Pa.;

An act (S. 1357) for the relief of the legal representatives of Edwin De Leon, deceased, late consul-general of the United States in Egypt;

An act (S. 1827) granting an increase of pension to Stephen M. Davis;

An act (S. 1964) for the erection of a public building for the use of the custom-house and post-office at Newport News, in the district of Newport News, Va.;

An act (S. 2616) granting a pension to Harriette F. Hovey;

An act (S. 2673) for the relief of William A. Cowles;

An act (S. 4231) granting an increase of pension to Millie A. Berry;

An act (S. 5186) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend the statutes in relation to immediate transportation of dutiable goods, and for other purposes," approved June 10, A. D. 1880, by extending the privileges of the first section thereof to the subport of Miami, Fla.; and

An act (S. 5355) to amend an act entitled "An act authorizing the Aransas Harbor Terminal Railway Company to construct a bridge across the Corpus Christi Channel, known as the Morris and Cummings Ship Channel, in Aransas County, Tex."

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 11771) to amend section 1 of an act to provide for the entry of lands in Greer County, Okla., to give preference right to settlers, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The bill (H. R. 12042) granting right of way to the Gulf and Northern Railroad Company through the Indian Territory and through certain Indian reservations in Oklahoma Territory was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BACON. I ask the consent of the Senate to call up House bill 11867, which is simply to build a bridge for a railroad which is now in process of construction. It has been favorably reported by the Committee on Commerce, and will not cause any debate whatever.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill referred to by the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. FRYE. I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to object to any request for unanimous consent this morning.

Mr. BACON. Then I withdraw it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. FRYE. I am very sorry, but I am obliged to do so.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The morning business appears to be closed.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill known as the river and harbor bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. What becomes of the military bill?

Mr. FRYE. That does not come up until 2 o'clock.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator proposes to consume the morning hour, to the exclusion of other bills, in considering the river and harbor bill. I should like to make a request to have an early day set when the Calendar can be taken up and unobjected cases considered. I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next the morning hour be devoted to the consideration of unobjected cases on the Calendar after the conclusion of the morning business.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that on next Monday, immediately after the routine business, the Calendar of unobjected cases may be taken up in the morning hour.

Mr. ALLISON. Not to interfere with any appropriation bills that may be ready.

Mr. ALLEN. There ought to be a day when these matters may be considered. There are some very important bills pending.

Mr. McMILLAN. I suggest to the Senator from Nebraska that we take up House bills when we take up the Calendar.

Mr. ALLEN. No; I do not see why we should take up House bills to the exclusion of others.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator will allow me a moment, I will state that at this late day in the session, unless appropriation bills shall have practically the right of way, it will be impossible to complete them before the hour of final adjournment. Therefore, unless appropriation bills are excepted, I must, for the present at least, object.

Mr. FRYE (to Mr. ALLEN). Except them.

Mr. ALLISON. Otherwise I must object to any assignment by unanimous consent.

Mr. ALLEN. I will except the appropriation bills, although I do not want to do so.

Mr. CARTER. Exception should also be made of the pending Army legislation. I do not think we can at this time consent to any order of business which would displace that legislation, which all hands concede is imperatively necessary in some form or other, and unless exception is made as to the Army legislation I shall feel constrained to object.

Mr. ALLEN. There will be no exception made as to the Army reorganization bill, I will say to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. CARTER. I did not put the exception in that way, although my exception would include the pending bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Then there will be no exception so far as the request is concerned.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not quite understand the request.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent—

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to cover the period between the close of the routine morning business and the close of the morning hour on Monday with the consideration of unobjectionable bills on the Calendar.

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not believe that ought to be done for several days at this stage of the session.

Mr. ALLEN. I withdraw the request.

Mr. HAWLEY. In any event I shall be careful—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]?

Mr. CARTER. What is the request of the Senator from Maine?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The request is that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill known as the river and harbor bill.

Mr. CARTER. I understand the regular order comes up at 2 o'clock.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to say something about that.

Mr. MILLS. The Senator from Maine has moved to proceed to the consideration of the bill. That takes a majority vote.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish to say that the course proposed by the Senator from Maine is entirely to my satisfaction. I contemplated stating at 2 o'clock that I would ask that the Army bill might go over for a day, retaining its place as the unfinished business.

Mr. CARTER. I understand that the request of the Senator from Maine does not preclude the regular order from remaining as the unfinished business before the Senate at 2 o'clock.

Mr. FRYE. It does not.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair will put the motion of the Senator from Maine. The question is on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments.

Mr. FRYE. I ask unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that it be read for amendment, the amendments of the committee to be first acted on.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Maine? The Chair hears none. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 2, line 2, to increase the appropriation for continuing the improvement for construction of breakwater from Mount Desert to Porcupine Island, Maine, from $10,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 8, after the word "report," to strike out "of Maj. S. W. Roessler, of January 19, 1899," and insert "printed in House Document No. 160, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session;" so as to read:

Improving harbor at Cape Porpoise, Me., in accordance with the report printed in House Document No. 160, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 2, after the word "of," to insert "Great Head and other;" in line 4, after the word "sea," to insert "and including the project to provide for a channel 1,200 feet wide and 30 feet deep from the main ship channel in President Roads through Broad Sound;" in line 10, after the word "may," to insert "use $5,000 thereof and;" in line 12, after the word "improvement," to strike out "recommended by Lieut. Col. S. M. Mansfield, November 19, 1897, and," and insert "in accordance with the project recommended;" in line 15, after the word "on," to strike out "page" and insert "pages;" in line 16, after the word "eighty-seven," to insert "et sequentes;" and in line 22, after the word "and," to strike out "$81,941.57," and insert "$50,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Boston, Mass.: Continuing improvement, $75,000: Provided, That this sum may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be used in the preservation and improvement of said harbor, including the protection of Great Head and other headlands and islands in and about said harbor, to prevent further washing away by the sea, and including the project to provide for a channel 1,200 feet wide and 30 feet deep from the main ship channel in President Roads through Broad Sound: Provided further, That $5,000 of this sum may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be used in improving Chelsea Creek: Provided further, That the Secretary of War may use $5,000 thereof and enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary for the completion of the improvement in accordance with the project recommended printed on pages 887 et seq. of the Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1898; such improvement to provide for a channel 1,200 feet wide and 30 feet deep from the main ship channel in President Roads through Broad Sound Channel, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $450,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

Mr. FRYE. In line 15, after the word "recommended," I move to insert the words "in the report."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 10, after the word "dollars," to insert:

For repairs made necessary by the great storm of November, 1898, according to plans and estimate submitted by Col. Charles R. Suter January 30, 1899, $75,000.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Plymouth, Mass.: For maintenance, $10,000; for repairs made necessary by the great storm of November, 1898, according to plans and estimate submitted by Col. Charles R. Suter January 30, 1899, $75,000.

Mr. FRYE. In lines 12 and 13 I move to strike out the words "by Col. Charles R. Suter," and also to strike out the word "thirtieth" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "twentieth."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, line 18, after the word "maintenance," to insert "and repairs," and in the same line, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "fifteen;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Scituate, Mass.: For maintenance and repairs, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 4, after line 21, to insert:

Improving harbor at Manchester, Mass., in accordance with the project submitted by Col. S. M. Mansfield July 30, 1897, $5,000.

Mr. FRYE. I move to strike out the words "by Col. S. M. Mansfield," in lines 23 and 24.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations for continuing improvement of harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay, Cape Ann, Massachusetts, on page 5, line 5, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and labor as may be required for prosecuting such improvement, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,000,000, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, after line 11, to insert:

Improving harbor at Duxbury, Mass., and for repairs made necessary by storm, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 18, after the word "report," to strike out "of Maj. D. W. Lockwood, December 23, 1896," and insert "printed on page 930 of the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1897;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at New Bedford, Mass.: Continuing improvement under the approved project of 1895, $10,000, and to complete the channel east of Fish Island in accordance with the report printed on page 930 of the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1897, $34,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 4, after the word "plan," to strike out "proposed by Maj. D. W. Lockwood, and submitted by Gen. John M. Wilson, Chief of Engineers, May 25, 1897, and by him designated as plan;" and in line 7, after the word "two," to insert "in report printed on pages 931 et seq. of the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1897;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving the harbor of Fall River, Mass., in accordance with the plan No. 2 in report printed on pages 931 et seq. of the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1897, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. I observe that there is no appropriation made in the bill for the improvement at Lynn, Mass., a continuing improvement which has been going on for some years. I should like very much if the chairman would state to me why that is omitted in this bill.

Mr. FRYE. There was no estimate made for that improvement by the Engineer Department, and under the rules of the committee an appropriation could not properly be made.

Mr. LODGE. The engineers did not ask for any further provision?

Mr. FRYE. They did not.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 11, after the words "Rhode Island," to strike out "For maintenance of breakwater, $2,500," and insert "Continuing improvement and maintenance, $10,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Block Island, R. I.: Continuing improvement and maintenance, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 18, after the words "Rhode Island," to strike out "Continuing improvement, $25,000," and insert "Completing improvement, $50,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Great Salt Pond, Block Island, R. I.: Completing improvement, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 6, line 20, after the words "Improving harbor at Sakonnet Point, R. I.," to strike out "For maintenance and repair of breakwater, $10,000," and insert:

Completing improvement according to the plan submitted June 24, 1897, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 9, to reduce the total appropriation for continuing the improvement of the harbor at Bridgeport, Conn., from "$288,327" to "$250,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 7, line 13, after the word "project," to strike out "submitted by Maj. Smith S. Leach, dated June 23, 1897, and;" and on page 8, line 1, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ninety-five" and insert "fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving New Haven Harbor, Connecticut, in accordance with the project printed as House Document No. 52, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, $50,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for materials and work necessary to complete so much of said project as includes a channel 20 feet deep through Long Island Sound from Tomlinson's Bridge, including three interior basins affording separate anchorages with depths of 20, 16, and 12 feet, respectively, and connected by adequate channels, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $250,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 8, line 19, after the words "one hundred and," to strike out "ninety-eight thousand one hundred and thirteen dollars and eighty cents" and insert "seventy-five thousand dollars;" so as to make the clause read:

For improvement of the Buffalo entrance to Erie Basin and Black Rock Harbor, New York, $50,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary for the completion of said project, in accordance with the recommendation of the Secretary of War, House Document No. 72, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $175,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, line 6, before the word "thousand," to strike out "sixty" and insert "thirty-five;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out "of which amount $10,000 may be used for repair of the breakwater;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Oswego, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 9, after line 8, to strike out:

Improving New York Harbor, New York: For maintenance, $100,000. For improving said harbor by a deep channel, 2,000 feet wide and 35 feet deep from the Narrows, by the so-called East Channel across Sandy Hook Bar to the open sea, in accordance with the recommendations contained in House Document No. 159, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, $1,000,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary for the completion of said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,510,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

And to insert:

Improving New York Harbor, New York: For maintenance, $100,000. For improving said harbor by a deep channel, 2,000 feet wide and 40 feet deep from the Narrows, by the so-called East Channel across Sandy Hook Bar to the open sea, in accordance with the recommendations contained in House Document No. 159, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, $1,000,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may forthwith enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary for the completion of said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $3,000,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

If, however, the Secretary of War shall be unable to make contract or contracts for the completion of said work for a sum within the limitations above specified, then the said $1,000,000 herein appropriated, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be applied by him to the construction or purchase of such dredges, steamboats, and other plant, machinery, and appliances as may be necessary to complete the project, and shall cause the work to be done by hired labor, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, and $250,000 additional are hereby appropriated to prosecute the work under this last provision.

Improving Bay Ridge Channel and Red Hook Channel, in the harbor of New York: Continuing improvement, $100,000: Provided, That the work shall be begun at the 40-foot curve at the southerly end of Bay Ridge Channel and be continued through it along the Brooklyn shore to Twenty-eighth street until the said Bay Ridge Channel shall have a uniform depth of 40 feet at low tide and a width of 1,300 feet; and the improvement of the Red Hook Channel shall be begun on its southerly end and at its junction with the Bay Ridge Channel, and be continued through it to its junction on its northerly end with the Buttermilk Channel until said Red Hook Channel shall have been made to a depth of 40 feet at low tide and a width of 1,300 feet: And provided further, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for the completion of said Bay Ridge Channel and Red Hook Channel, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $2,400,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 11, line 20, before the word "Niagara," to strike out "at" and insert "and;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Tonawanda Harbor and Niagara River to the north line of the village of North Tonawanda, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 3, after the words "Improving Port Chester Harbor, New York," to strike out "$25,000, to be expended in enlarging the channel below and up to Town Dock to a depth of 12 feet and a width of 70 feet, and from Town Dock to the steamboat dock to a depth of 9 feet and a width of 60 feet" and insert:

Completing improvement, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 12, line 11, to reduce the appropriation for completing the improvement of the channel between the Staten Island and the New Jersey shore, New York and New Jersey, from "$32,000" to "$15,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. On page 12, line 10, before the word "improvement," I move to strike out "Completing" and insert "Continuing."

The SECRETARY. On page 12, line 10, before the word "improvement," it is proposed to strike out "Completing" and insert "Continuing;" so as to read:

Improving channel between Staten Island and the New Jersey shore, New York and New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 7, after the word "New York," to insert "to be expended;" and in line 8, after the word "approved," to strike out "and modified project for the improvement thereof, fifty" and insert "project, or such modification thereof as the Secretary of War may approve, twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Cape Vincent, N. Y., to be expended according to the approved project, or such modification thereof as the Secretary of War may approve, $25,000, in addition to any balance on hand.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 11, to strike out:

Improving harbor at Larchmont, N. Y.: For continuing improvement, $50,000: Provided, That said sum, or such part thereof as may be necessary, may be used by the Secretary of War on such project under any modified plan that may hereafter be adopted by him.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, line 18, after the words "Improving harbor at Raritan Bay, New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $65,000," to insert "of which $40,000 may be used in dredging the channel from South Amboy to Great Beds Light."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 13, after line 22, to insert:

Improving Absecon Inlet, New Jersey, according to the plan submitted by the Chief of Engineers January 21, 1898, $10,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such material and work as may be necessary for the completion of the improvement according to said plan, to be paid as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $450,000, including the amount hereby appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 9, after the word "dollars," to insert "to be expended;" in line 10, after the word "the," to strike out "modified and approved;" and in line 11, after the word "project," to insert:

Printed in House Document No. 70, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, or such modification thereof as the Secretary of War may approve.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Erie, Pa.: Continuing improvement, $125,000, to be expended in accordance with the project printed in House Document No. 70, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, or such modification thereof as the Secretary of War may approve.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 13, to strike out:

Improving harbor at Pittsburg, Pa.: Completing improvement in accordance with the report of the Chief of Engineers, dated December 6, 1897, $110,662.90.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, line 25, after the word "the," to strike out "approved project of;" in the same line, after the word "improvement," to insert:

In accordance with the project submitted by the Board of Engineers in its report of October 3, 1896, and including the removal of rock from the channel, as recommended in the annual report of the Chief of Engineers for 1897.

On page 15, line 7, before the word "hundred," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" and in line 8, before the word "thousand," to strike out "seventy" and insert "five;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Wilmington and Christina River, Delaware: Continuing improvement, $45,000, of which amount $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used for maintenance, and the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the improvement, in accordance with the project submitted by the Board of Engineers, in its report of October 3, 1896, and including the removal of rock from the channel as recommended in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1897, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $25,750, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated, that being the amount reported by the Chief of Engineers as necessary to complete said project.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 13, to reduce the appropriation for continuing the improvement of the harbor at Cape Charles City, Virginia, from $20,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 15, line 15, after the word "the," to strike out "approved project of February 4, 1895," and insert "project printed in House Document No. 299, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Milford Haven, Virginia: Completing improvement in accordance with the project printed in House Document No. 299, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, $12,500.

Mr. FRYE. I move to amend the amendment, in line 18, on page 15, before the word "Congress," by striking out "Fifty-fifth" and inserting "Fifty-third."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 15, after line 19, to insert:

Harbor of refuge, Cape Lookout, North Carolina: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to appoint a board of three Army engineers to make examination, survey, plan, and estimate for a harbor of refuge at or near Cape Lookout, North Carolina; and $5,000 is hereby appropriated to pay the cost of the same.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 16, line 2, after the word "project," to strike out "submitted by Maj. E. H. Ruffner" and insert "of November 18, 1898;" so as to read:

Improving Charleston Harbor, South Carolina, in accordance with the project of November 18, 1898, as modified and approved by the division engineer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 17, line 23, after the word "plan," to strike out "of Capt. O. M. Carter, February 21, 1897, House Executive" and insert "presented in House;" on page 18, line 1, after the word "session," to strike out "Appendix N, Engineer's Report, 1897;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Doboy Bar, Georgia, in accordance with plan presented in House Document No. 13, Fifty-fifth Congress, first session, $70,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 5, after the word "project," to strike out "submitted December 17, 1896, by William P. Craighill, Chief of Engineers," and insert "printed in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1897, pages 1655 and those that follow;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Apalachicola Bay, Florida, in accordance with the project printed in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1897, pages 1655 and those that follow, and for maintenance, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, line 15, after the word "Pensacola," to strike out "in accordance with the existing project," so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Pensacola, Fla.: Continuing improvement and for maintenance, $70,000; the same to be used toward securing a channel depth of 30 feet at mean low water, from the Gulf of Mexico to the dock line at the east end of the city of Pensacola.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 18, after line 16, to insert:

For improving the harbor of Miami, on Biscayne Bay, Florida, with a view to obtaining 18 feet of water, in pursuance of a project submitted by Lieutenant-Colonel Benyard, dated January 31, 1897, and contained in House Executive Document No. 295, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, and denoting a route through Norris Cut into said harbor, $100,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the said project recommended in said report, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $900,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated.

Mr. FRYE. I move to amend the amendment of the committee, in line 19, on page 18, by striking out the words "by Lieutenant-Colonel Benyard."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. PASCO. In connection with the amendment just adopted I ask that the statement which I send to the desk may be printed in the RECORD without being read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. That order will be made, in the absence of objection.

The statement referred to is as follows:

The principal arguments in favor of improving Miami Harbor in the interests of commerce are:

1. The city of Miami has in two years grown from a single residence and the ruins of Fort Dallas to a town of 3,000 inhabitants, with three regular steamship lines carrying passengers, freight, and mail to Havana, Nassau, and Key West, respectively, and a commerce of a general character, constantly increasing as the deepening of the harbor by private capital has afforded it facilities for entrance.

2. It is the southern terminus of the Florida East Coast Railroad system, 125 miles farther south than any other railroad point in the United States. It is twelve hours nearer Havana than any other point of departure by established routes in the country. For all other Cuban and Porto Rican ports the location of Miami on the east coast gives it still greater advantages over all lines, which, by reason of their situation on the Gulf, must round Cape Sable and the southern keys. To Matanzas this advantage is fifteen hours; to Santiago de Cuba, twenty-four hours; to San Juan, Porto Rico, twenty-six hours. The port on the Atlantic coast next nearest to these points is Jacksonville, 367 miles north. This reduction of distances offers important advantages favorable to a regular and speedy mail service to the islands that are under our control as a result of the recent war with Spain.

3. From Jacksonville to Key West it is 530 miles by the shore line. There is not a harbor of refuge between these two points. Miami divides this distance 170 miles north of Key West. It is manifest that a good harbor at Miami would have saved to the merchant marine many millions in ships and cargoes which, for want of such a haven, have been wrecked in these waters by tropical storms, and that in view of the probable vast increase in West Indian and South American traffic such a distance of coast ought not to be neglected. The location of Key West is such that any ship navigating between American and West Indian or South American ports must go 100 miles out of her course to put in there for repairs or safety, while Miami is within sight of the Gulf Stream and all this traffic passes within 10 miles of the proposed harbor while north bound and within 2 miles when south bound.

4. A channel from Miami around Cape Florida has been dredged to a depth of 12 feet by private capital, at an expense of $200,000. The engineer reported that this would cost $845,000. The error arises very largely from classifying the substance underlying these waters as rock. It is a formation not met with elsewhere on our coasts. The surface is hardened by contact with water or exposure to sun, but the crust being broken, the exposed portion to any depth can be removed like any other sand.

The project to produce a depth of 18 feet in a harbor inside Norris Cut with a basin, as denoted by the engineer, estimated to cost $3,000,000, can be accomplished with one-third of that sum, and responsible parties familiar with the location and the underlying substance are ready to enter into a bond to undertake the work at that price. Some have erroneously construed the estimates in the engineer's report of $1,600,000 and $1,000,000, respectively, to be for 15 and 18 feet around Cape Florida, over 10 miles of dredging, but a careful examination of the report makes it clear that this route is rejected, and the estimates are based on a channel by the shorter route through Norris Cut and up to the mouth of Miami River.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 20, line 4, after the word "project," to strike out "submitted July 23, 1898," and insert "printed in House Document No. 545, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Hillsboro Bay, Florida, in accordance with project printed in House Document No. 545, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, $125,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, line 20, after the word "estimate," to strike out "of Maj. William T. Rossell" and insert "printed in House Document No. 120, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session," so as to make the clause read:

Ship Island Pass, Mississippi: To complete dredging a channel through Ship Island Pass, with a depth of 26 feet, in accordance with the report and estimate printed in House Document No. 120, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 20, after line 23, to strike out:

Gulfport, Miss., to Ship Island Harbor: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts with the Bradford Construction Company, or any persons or corporations which will undertake to do the work, to dredge a channel 19 feet deep from the anchorage at Ship Island Harbor, on the Gulf of Mexico, to Gulfport, in Harrison County, in the State of Mississippi, and to construct at the end of said channel next the shore an anchorage basin of similar depth not less than 2,640 feet by 1,320 feet in area, at a cost not to exceed $150,000, which shall be paid whenever an engineer to be designated for that purpose shall report that said channel and anchorage have been made as contracted for; and if said contractor shall maintain the same thereafter for five years he shall be paid the sum of $10,000 for each of said five years, payable annually, during which the same shall be so maintained.

And insert:

Gulfport, Miss., to Ship Island Harbor: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts to dredge a channel 300 feet wide and 19 feet deep at mean low water from the anchorage at Ship Island Harbor, on the Gulf of Mexico, to Gulfport, in Harrison County, in the State of Mississippi, and to construct at the end of said channel next the shore an anchorage basin of similar depth not less than 2,640 feet by 1,320 feet in area, at a cost not to exceed $150,000; and the Secretary of War is further authorized to contract for the maintenance of said channel for the term of five years after its completion, for the sum of $10,000 annually.

Mr. FRYE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to be inserted after the word "channel," in line 3, on page 22 of the committee amendment.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee, on page 23, in line 3, after the word "channel," by inserting the words "and anchorage basin."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I also move to insert, after the word "annually," at the end of the committee amendment, in line 5, on page 22, what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the amendment of the committee, after the word "annually," in line 5, on page 22, the following proviso:

Provided, That the necessary expenses for such examinations, surveys, and inspections of the work as may be required from time to time to determine whether the channel and anchorage basin are dredged and maintained as required by this act shall be paid from the permanent indefinite appropriation made by section 4 of the river and harbor act approved July 5, 1864: And provided further, That the depth provided for shall be at mean low water, as determined by the engineer officer in local charge of the work.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 23, line 7, to increase the appropriation for continuing the improvement of the mouth and passes of Calcasieu River, Louisiana, from $35,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 22, after line 7, to strike out:

Improving outlet of the Mississippi River by constructing a sill across Pass a Loure and by constructing and operating two dredges, $50,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to carry on such improvements, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $450,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated. A board of four engineers shall be appointed by the President, of whom at least two shall be from civil life, who shall prepare and report, as soon as conveniently may be done, a project for securing a navigable channel of suitable width and of 35 feet depth at mean low water of the Gulf of Mexico throughout the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi River; said board of engineers shall submit detailed estimates of the cost of each and every feature of the project, and they shall report especially whether it is necessary to construct inner jetties; and if, in their judgment, inner jetties should be constructed, they shall provide for the location of the same, so as to involve the least cost consistent with the safety and efficiency of the work hereby contemplated. The sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to defray the cost of said board and of the preparation of said project.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 7, to insert:

Improving the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi River: For the purpose of securing a navigable channel of adequate width and of 35 feet depth at mean low water of the Gulf of Mexico throughout the Southwest Pass of the Mississippi River, in accordance with the plan submitted in House Document No. 143, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, or any modification of such plan that may hereafter be made by the Secretary of War, including the construction or purchase of dredges, $600,000; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to enter into contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be required for prosecuting such improvement, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,000,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 23, after line 24, to strike out:

Improving Galveston Ship Channel and Buffalo Bayou, Texas: For improvement of the Galveston Ship Channel and Buffalo Bayou, by dredging or otherwise, from the jetties at Galveston, Tex., up through the present ship channel and Buffalo Bayou to the proposed harbor site at Houston, Tex., to be provided by the citizens of Houston, $250,000: Provided, That out of said sum a suitable dredge may be constructed for said work.

And insert:

For commencing the improvement of the water route from the mouth of the jetties at Galveston, through the existing ship channel and up Buffalo Bayou to Houston, Tex., including harbor at Houston, in accordance with project submitted by the Board of Engineers in report of survey dated November 3, 1897, $250,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for the whole or any part of such materials and work as may be required for prosecuting said improvement, or the said materials may be purchased and the work done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $2,000,000: Provided further, That out of said sum two dredges may be constructed for said work.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 24, after line 23, to strike out:

Mouth of Brazos River, Texas: The Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause an examination and such survey as may be necessary to be made to determine the cost of improving the mouth of Brazos River, Texas, and to report the same to Congress, together with a report as to such rights, privileges, and franchises as the Brazos River Channel and Dock Company may surrender to the United States, including such an amount of wharf property fronting on said river as said company may be willing to surrender to the United States, and upon what conditions the same will be surrendered, and report the same to Congress as soon as practicable, the expense thereof to be paid from the general fund herein appropriated for surveys.

And insert:

Mouth of Brazos River, Texas: For dredging, $85,000; and for extending the jetties 1,000 feet, $115,000: Provided, That no part of said sum shall be expended until the Brazos River Channel and Dock Company shall file with the Secretary of War a transfer to the United States of the jetties, auxiliary works, and all rights conferred upon it by its charter, and shall convey to the United States a tract of land one-half mile long and 300 feet wide on each side of the river and fronting the same, to be selected by an engineer of the United States, subject to the right of said company to lay railway tracks on 50 feet of said ground farthest from the river. The Secretary of War shall determine the value of the works constructed by the Brazos Channel and Dock Company, and report the same to Congress for its action on the first day of the first session of the Fifty-sixth Congress; and the Secretary of War is directed to have an examination made of the mouth of the Brazos and the jetties, and report to Congress the estimated cost of extending the jetties one-half mile, and the estimated depth and width of the channel to be obtained by such extension, and the estimated cost of obtaining 20 feet of water and a channel 150 feet wide by dredging.

Mr. FRYE. I move to amend the amendment of the committee, in line 9, on page 26, after the words "150 feet wide," by striking out the words "by dredging."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 26, after line 9, to insert:

Deepening the channel from Galveston Harbor to Texas City, Tex.: The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to enter into a contract or contracts for deepening the present channel north of Pelican Island from Galveston Harbor to Texas City, Tex., to a depth of 25 feet and 100 feet wide at the bottom, at a cost not to exceed $250,000, of which amount $100,000 shall be paid whenever it shall satisfactorily appear to the Secretary of War, through Army engineers, that said channel has been deepened to a depth of 21 feet, and the remainder of the price shall be paid when the whole work has been completed in a manner satisfactory to the Secretary of War.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 26, line 23, after the word "For," to strike out "the" and insert "dredging and other;" so as to read:

Improving Aransas Pass, Texas: For dredging and other improvement of Aransas Pass Harbor, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 27, line 19, to increase the appropriation for straightening, widening, and otherwise improving the main ship channel, Sabine Pass, Texas and Louisiana, from $50,000 to $100,000.

Mr. FRYE. I move to amend the amendment of the committee, in line 19, on page 27, by inserting, after the word "hundred," the words "and fifty;" so as to make the amount of the appropriation $150,000.

Mr. MILLS. That is right.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 27, after line 19, to strike out:

Corpus Christi and Padre Island Harbor, Texas: Section 2 of "An act to promote the construction of a safe deep-water harbor on the coast of Texas," approved February 9, 1891, and as amended January 23, 1893, is hereby amended so as to extend the time to locate and commence the construction of the said Corpus Christi and Padre Island Harbor, off Padre Island, on the coast of Texas, two years from February 9, 1890.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 17, after the word "report," to strike out "of Col. Jared A. Smith;" and in line 21, after the word "hundred," to strike out "and forty-five thousand five hundred dollars" and insert "thousand dollars;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Black River (Lorain), Ohio: Continuing improvement,

$50,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the project designated as Plan B in the report dated November 1, 1897, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $500,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 28, line 25, after the word "report," to strike out "of Col. Jared A. Smith;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Cleveland, Ohio, according to the report of January 10, 1899, $75,000, of which amount such sum as may be necessary may be used in dredging between the Government piers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 5, to reduce the appropriation for continuing the improvement of the harbor at Conneaut, Ohio, from $100,000 to $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 29, line 7, to reduce the appropriation for continuing the improvement of the harbor at Fairport, Ohio, from $100,000 to $75,000.

Smith" and insert "dated;" in line 21, before the word "thousand," to strike out "and fifty," and in line 25, before the word "thousand," to strike out "and fifty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Toledo, Ohio, by providing a straight channel through Maumee River and Bay 400 feet in width and 21 feet deep, in accordance with the project dated December 16, 1897, $100,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed $500,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. With respect to all these items relating to Ohio and Ohio appropriations, I will state that I am permitting them to go by now without objection because my colleague [Mr. HANNA] does not appear to be in the Chamber, and I wish to confer with him in regard to them. But I want to reserve the right to call them up hereafter for further consideration before the bill is finally disposed of.

Mr. WHITE. As I understand the matter, the bill is now in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and will hereafter be subject to revision in the Senate.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be subject to amendment.

Mr. WHITE. I presume the Senator's rights will be reserved.

Mr. FORAKER. I want to reserve all rights.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in the item for improving outer harbor at Michigan City, Ind., on page 30, after the word "modified," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $195,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the item for improving harbor at Waukegan, Ill., on page 30, line 19, after the word "Illinois," to strike out:

Continuing improvement, $7,000; of which so much as may be necessary shall be used by the Secretary of War to cause a survey of said harbor with a view to obtaining a channel 300 feet wide and 20 feet deep, together with an estimate of the cost thereof.

And insert "For maintenance, $5,500."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 31, line 2, to strike out "seventy-five" and insert "one hundred;" and after the word "dollars," in line 2, to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said project for the improvement of said harbor according to the recommendations of Maj. W. L. Marshall, in his report of July 16, 1897, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $377,823, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Chicago Harbor, Illinois: Continuing improvement, $100,000.

Improving harbor at Ahnapee, Wis.: Continuing improvement according to Plan A, submitted under date of December 31, 1896, $13,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 5, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Of which sum $6,000 is for maintenance, and of the balance of said sum 75 per cent may be expended in improving the channel from the mouth of Fox River to the city of Greenbay, and 25 per cent may be expended, if necessary, on the further improvement of Fox River from the city of Greenbay to the city of Deperre.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Greenbay, Wis.: Continuing improvement, $28,600.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 35, line 14, before the word "January," to strike out "reported by Capt. James G. Warren" and insert "dated;" in line 18, before the word "January," to strike out "reported" and insert "dated;" in line 19, after the word "ninety-seven," to strike out "by Capt. George A. Zinn;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out the comma and insert "of which $3,000 may be used for maintenance;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Kenosha, Wis., according to the project dated January 12, 1899, and the project for deepening the basin and widening and deepening said harbor, based upon the removal of the present north pier, dated January 23, 1897, $50,000 of which $3,000 may be used for maintenance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for improving harbor at Milwaukee, Wis., on page 36, line 16, after the word "dollars," to insert:

For deepening the channel at the entrance in accordance with the project submitted November 23, 1896, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 21, on page 36.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask that the next two items, improving the harbor at Racine, Wis., and improving the harbor at Sheboygan, Wis., may be passed over for the present.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning with line 23, page 37.

Mr. FRYE. On page 37, after the word "dollars," in line 24, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. In the appropriation for improving harbor at Ashland, Wis., after the word "dollars," in line 24, page 37, it is proposed to insert:

Of which so much as shall be necessary may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended in completing the shore end of the breakwater now partly constructed and connecting it with the land.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 38, line 9, to reduce the appropriation for continuing improvement of Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship Canal from $30,000 to $15,000.

Mr. SPOONER. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee why the appropriation for the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship Canal is cut in two—reduced from $30,000 to $15,000?

Mr. FRYE. Because the Engineer Department in its estimates of what could be expended this year made the amount about $100,000,000.

Mr. SPOONER. The aggregate?

Mr. FRYE. The aggregate $100,000,000. Therefore, it is impossible, as the Senator will see, to come up to the estimates in every case. Wisconsin is up to the estimates in nine out of ten cases, and here we have given half, which is more than the average given throughout the bill; and it is not a very important place, either.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know about that. Upon that basis of reasoning I should think the argument would be very sound, but I hardly feel able to give my assent to the basis. There may be some appropriations that ought to be diminished and can be without any detriment to the public interest, but I respectfully submit to my friend the Senator from Maine that this is not one of them. I send to the desk and ask to have read a letter upon the subject. It is a very important matter.

Mr. WHITE. If I may make a suggestion to the Senator from Wisconsin, can we not allow the matter to go over until the bill reaches the Senate? Possibly the Senator from Wisconsin may be able to communicate with the chairman of the committee and look the subject over without delaying the Senate. The bill is now in the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, I understand.

Mr. FRYE. I should rather it would be acted upon now.

Mr. WHITE. Very well, if the chairman so desires.

Mr. FRYE. In my judgment, no State has been treated so abundantly under the pending bill as the State of Wisconsin. Every request, I think, made by the Senator from Wisconsin was complied with by the committee. They had a member of the committee in the House also who took care of Wisconsin.

Mr. SPOONER. I know, but that hardly touches this proposition. I am not asking this as a favor. If it is not right I do not want it.

Mr. FRYE. It would be right to appropriate the entire amount estimated by the local engineer, which was $50,000. The Chief of Engineers then reduced the amount to be used this year to $25,000. Of course it would be right to appropriate that, but we can not do it, because it would make a river and harbor bill of $100,000,000.

Mr. SPOONER. There ought to be some discrimination from that standpoint as to the necessity of the improvements. I have no doubt there are some items which could be cut down. I do not think Wisconsin, having regard to navigation and tonnage and all that, is treated with any greater generosity in the pending bill than other States. I think I could mention States not far from Wisconsin which have fared quite as well. I have no complaint to make of the committee. In fact, it is true, as the chairman states, that almost every request I made has been complied with; but I want the Senate to hear the letter, which I have no doubt is perfectly accurate, and I think when the Senator learns the amount of the commerce there, and the real situation, he will agree with the Engineer Department that the amount passed by the House and the amount recommended by the Department should be kept in the bill.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Wisconsin may be certain he will not.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested. The Secretary read as follows:

STURGEON BAY AND LAKE MICHIGAN SHIP CANAL.

Sir: The total amount expended for this waterway up to June 30, 1897, was $115,749.50. The amount recommended by the War Department that can be profitably expended in fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, is $30,000, and this amount was allowed by the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the House. The importance of this waterway can be measured best by the number of vessels, with their measured tonnage, that have annually passed through the canal since a depth of 14.6 feet of water has been secured throughout the length of the canal. According to the reports of the superintendent of this waterway that were submitted to the War Department for the season of 1897 and 1898, about five thousand vessels of various sizes, and with a measured tonnage approximating 2,000,000 tons, in each of these years passed through the canal.

There is every reason to suppose that when the final project is completed, providing for a depth of 18 feet of water, not less than five millions of measured tonnage will avail itself of this waterway. At the present time it is conceded by those who have a personal knowledge of the maritime situation on the Great Lakes that this canal ranks only second in importance to the Sault Ste. Marie. It will be proper to say that the banks of this canal are, on the average, 20 feet in height, and of beach-sand formation, so that the slightest disturbance of the water in the canal undercuts the banks, causing the sand to slide into the canal in large quantities, and this alone emphasizes the necessity for revetment the entire length of the waterway. About two-thirds of the revetment is completed.

The $15,000 recommended by the Committee on Commerce would probably remove the sand that would cave into the canal during the coming season of navigation, but further improvements that could be made with this amount of money would be slight at best.

It is therefore of the utmost importance that not less than $30,000 be appropriated for this important waterway.

I desire to add that this canal is within 2 miles of the boundary line of the city in which I reside; that prior to the date of purchase from a private corporation of this waterway by the United States I was connected with the canal, and for eight years had immediate charge of it. I assume, therefore, that it will be conceded that I speak from a personal and practical knowledge of the true situation touching this important improvement, for which I appeal to the Senate to reinstate the original amount recommended by the Secretary of War and carried in the bill as it passed the House of Representatives.

E. S. MINOR, M. C.,
Eighth Wisconsin District.

HON. JOHN C. SPOONER,
United States Senator.

FEBRUARY 20, 1899.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I hope this letter will satisfy the chairman of the committee and the Senate that in this case—I do not say it because it happens to be in Wisconsin—the amount recommended by the Engineer Department ought to be retained in the bill. This letter shows that 5,000 vessels pass through the canal. It also shows that the banks of the canal are on the average 20 feet in height and of beach-sand formation, so that the slightest disturbance of the water in the canal undercuts the bank, interfering with the channel. It will take fully $15,000, Mr. MINOR says, to keep the canal clear of the sand, leaving a very small amount for the improvement. Mr. MINOR is now the member of Congress from that district. He is himself a navigator, and was connected with this improvement before the Government purchased it, and I know of no man who is more accurately informed upon the subject and the necessities of that channel than he is. He agrees entirely with the recommendation of the Department, and I hope the chairman of the committee will not object to retaining the amount in the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 38, line 14, after the word "ninety-seven," to strike out "by Lieut. Col. W. R. King;" so as to read:

Completing harbor at La Crosse, Wis.: Continuing improvement according to the project reported January 11, 1897, $12,000, exclusive of $5,000 appropriated by river and harbor act of June 3, 1896.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 8, to increase the appropriation for continuing the improvement by dredging in the inner harbor at Humboldt, Cal., from $35,000 to $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 13, after the word "made," to strike out "by Col. Charles R. Suter;" and, in line 20, before the word "dollars," to strike out "five hundred and thirty-eight thousand six hundred and twenty" and insert "five hundred thousand;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving San Francisco Harbor, California: By removing Arch Rock and Shag Rocks numbered 1 and 2, all to a depth of 30 feet below mean low water, according to the report made October 13, 1897, $100,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for the materials and work necessary for the completion of said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $500,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, line 23, to increase the appropriation for continuing improvement of Tillamook Bay and Bar, Oregon, from $17,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 39, after line 23, to insert:

Mouth of Siuslaw River, Oregon: Continuing improvement, $30,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 40, to insert:

Improving entrance to Coos Bay and Harbor, Oregon: Continuing improvement, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 7, to insert:

Improving Pearl Harbor, Hawaii, in accordance with the report submitted by Rear-Admiral Walker July 11, 1894, and contained in Senate Executive Document No. 43, Fifty-third Congress, third session: Completing improvement, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 40, after line 15, to insert:

Improving Penobscot River, Maine, in accordance with the project submitted May 3, 1897: Completing improvement, $28,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for improving Union River, Maine, on page 41, line 2, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into contract or contracts for such material and work as may be necessary to complete the present project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $115,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 41, after line 12, to insert:

Improving Exeter River, New Hampshire, in accordance with project submitted May 3, 1897: Completing improvement, $12,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 8, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "twenty-five;" and in line 9, after the word "to," to strike out "approved project" and insert:

The project printed in House Document No. 178, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Mystic River, Massachusetts, below the mouth of Island End River, $25,000, according to the project printed in House Document No. 178, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 42, line 15, after the word "the," to strike out "improved and modified project" and insert "project submitted May 5, 1897;" and in line 17, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Merrimac River, Massachusetts: Continuing improvement in accordance with the project submitted May 5, 1897, $25,000.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, in regard to reduction on the Merrimac River, I hope the committee will be willing to allow the appropriation to stand at the House figure. The improvement of that river affects the city of Haverhill, which is one of the largest shoe manufacturing towns in the State. On the strength of the improvements there ordered by the Government, the whole improvement amounting to only $171,000, a steamship company was started, with the result of reducing freight from 10 cents per hundred pounds, which the railroads then charged, to 5 cents per hundred pounds. But owing to the extreme slowness of the Government improvements and the difficulties of the channel of navigation, the steamship company lost two vessels there, lost the cargoes, was obliged to suspend its operations, and immediately the freight rates were put up. The average amount of freight carried there in summer by water is 126 tons daily. It is a very great improvement to that city, and unless the appropriations are made in sufficient amounts to enable the work to go forward, it will be impossible for them to get the benefits from it.

There are two companies now ready to start steamship lines. It makes an immense saving to the people of that city, and the delay in making the improvement is extremely prejudicial. It ought to have been a continuing improvement, but as it is not, I hope the chairman of the committee will allow the House amount to stand. I have no desire to be unreasonable. I have not questioned any of the other decisions of the committee, and I hope that in this case they will be willing to allow the amount to stand as the House fixed it—$40,000.

Mr. BERRY. Mr. President, the committee spent about two weeks hearing everybody, trying to reconcile differences, and to satisfy, as far as possible, all the interests in every State. We were compelled to strike out a number of items which the House put in. There was a reduction in my own State, a reduction in the State of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST], both of whom are on the committee, and in a number of other cases. If the Senator is going to put back all the appropriations that the House had in, and in addition put in others, it will be impossible to pass the bill. Senators should not insist on getting all they ask for, because if they do get all the bill, outside of the Nicaragua Canal, will amount to $100,000,000, and then we can not pass it. The Senator from Massachusetts, no doubt, makes a good showing, but I have no doubt any Senator on this floor can make a good showing for any improvement asked for or for anything that was put in by the House. I hope the Senate, if it expects to pass the bill, will stand by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. I made no request in regard to the Merrimac Harbor, and I was never notified that there was any intention of touching that appropriation. The committee never even heard us in regard to it. They cut it down without any notice to us at all, and that is the only reason why I present it here.

I should have been glad to have had an opportunity to present it before the committee. I do not ask for anything extra here. I supposed of course that the House appropriation would remain unless some notice was given to the Senators from the State. But as none was given, and the appropriation was cut down, I have brought this matter up. There is a reduction of $25,000 in a Massachusetts item just above that, which was made in the same way, and which I have not contested.

As the Senator from Wisconsin said, there are differences in these cases and there must be some discrimination. But this is a case where great absolute injury is being suffered by the failure to push the improvement, where vessels have been lost, where freight rates have been changed, and where the business of a great city is directly affected, where men have invested money in shipping on the faith of the Government improvement, and the Government improvement has been carried forward in such a slack manner that it has resulted in great loss to the people who invested their money on the strength of that appropriation.

As I have said, we asked for no increase here and made no request. All we desired was to retain what was granted in the House, and which I do not think was an exceptional or a very large amount.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, I wish to say, in answer to some of the suggestions that are involved in the remarks which have just been made by the Senator from Massachusetts, that we have had a similar experience with regard to the appropriations for Ohio. I supposed if there was to be any attack upon the appropriations made by the House the Senators from that State would have some notice and some opportunity to be present and to protest against it.

I do not wish in this way to insinuate any complaint against the committee, but simply to state the fact that we did not have any such notice and did not have any such opportunity. When the bill was reported, I was very much surprised to find that in some eight or nine cases, all of them important harbors, there had been reductions similar in amount to the reduction made in the case that has just been spoken of by the Senator from Massachusetts.

We have reserved our right in regard to these matters, as I understand it, to have them further considered when the bill is in Committee of the Whole for revision, before being reported to the Senate; but for the present I want it understood that we stand upon the same footing precisely, and have the same ground of complaint precisely, in so far as the merit of the case may make us equal, with the case in Massachusetts.

I have learned from this experience that if we do not want our appropriations attacked by the committee without our notice we ought to be present in the committee room all the while. I supposed I was doing the committee a favor by staying away and not haunting it, assuming that we would not be interfered with without some notice to us.

Mr. FRYE. Now, Mr. President, just a word. If the Senate Committee on Commerce in considering this bill believed that certain amendments should be made to the bill as it came from the House, decreasing the amounts appropriated, and then notified the Senators from the States interested, there never would be any reduction whatever.

The Senator from Ohio has a chairman of the committee in the House knowing all about the Ohio appropriations, and the bill came over here with Ohio treated in it as anybody might naturally expect it would be treated, with the chairman of the committee representing the State.

As to the case which the Senator speaks of, there were two dams, and they were both authorized to be completed by continuing contracts. The committee did not believe there was any necessity of completing those two dams this year. This is a bill for only one year. Ordinarily it is a bill for two years. We supposed that Ohio could stand off one year the building or construction of one dam under a continuing contract and that there was no harm done in cutting out that other continuing contract.

Mr. FORAKER. I did not say anything about the dam that the Senator from Maine has now alluded to. I was speaking about other appropriations which the committee saw fit to make changes in. I stated in that connection that I was not making any complaint against the committee, although I might have said that I had a right to expect that I would have notice before any liberties were taken with this appropriation, because the Senator will admit that I went to him and said that I was interested, as he might assume I was, in all these appropriations, and that I did not want to stand about the committee room haunting it and annoying the committee unless there was some necessity for it, but if there should be any objection in his committee to any of the House appropriations I would be glad of an opportunity to be heard. I supposed that was understood and that that was enough for me to say. I did not get any notice.

I am not making any complaint about it; but I am simply placing in the RECORD, alongside of the remarks made by the Senator from Massachusetts, a statement which shows that I stand in the same relation to this matter in which he stands, and that I have the same right to complain of the action of the committee that he may have. I do not mean to complain of it, in the sense that the action of the committee was taken in any improper way, but only that the action of the committee expressed a different judgment from that which had been expressed in the House and from that which I wanted here to stand for. But, as I said, it is all passed over now, and I speak of it only that I may have in the RECORD a full reservation of my right to consider it when we come to that point.

So far as the fact is concerned which has been adverted to, that the bill in the House was in the hands of a member from Ohio, that is true; but I do not think it follows from that, certainly not necessarily, and I do not think it does in fact, that Ohio has been any better treated than she ought to be.

When we come to the matter of the dams, I will ask the consideration of the Senate upon that point. I think the dams ought to be built, both of them.

Mr. FRYE. Does the Senator think that all the rest of them ought to be built?

Mr. FORAKER. Yes, in time.

Mr. FRYE. Why two now? Why not wait?

Mr. FORAKER. This is a long story, and when we come to it I will take it up and discuss it; but inasmuch as the Senator now asks the question, I will answer him.

These dams are but a part of a great number of dams that have been provided for in the system which has been entered upon for the improvement of the Ohio River. Six of these dams in the upper waters of the river have been constructed and are in operation with great good results. Two of these dams which the House provided for are located, one at Wheeling and the other at Marietta.

The engineer by whose recommendation the committee must have been guided recommended that there should be two dams and that the first dam built should be the one at Marietta. The committee departed from that recommendation and provided for the dam at Wheeling. I do not object to the provision for the dam at Wheeling; I think it ought to be built; but I shall contend that we ought to have the dam at Marietta. An appropriation amounting to $850,000 and involving the improvement of one of the most important rivers in point of commerce in the United States certainly ought not to have been stricken out of the bill without some opportunity having been given to the Senators from that State for a hearing of the matter.

I do not care, as I said a while ago, about the smaller matters. They are not so especially important, although important to the full extent that matters of such magnitude are; but this is a matter of very great importance, and it is a matter about which I supposed I would have a hearing in the committee. I did not have it. I shall ask for the hearing here, and take the judgment of the Senate upon that subject, and not be bound, unless I am compelled to be bound, by the action of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I had no intention of complaining in the least of the action of the committee in not sending for me to be heard upon this Merrimac River improvement. I know very well that they do not send for everybody on all these items. But the fact that it was stricken out without my having the opportunity to present the case of course obliges me to ask for the reasons. I can not afford, and I do not think any Senator can afford, to allow the appropriations affecting his State to pass without a word, and not at least enable his constituents to know the causes of the action.

I do not think I have been unreasonable. I asked the chairman for an explanation in regard to the omission of the appropriation for the improvement of the harbor of Lynn, which is in my immediate neighborhood. He gave me an absolutely sufficient explanation. I am perfectly willing to accept an explanation and any proper reason for a reduction which seems to me suitable. I have raised no question about the other reductions.

But in this particular appropriation I think there are especial reasons for retaining the House amount. The only reason which has been given is that we must keep the appropriations down to a certain level or we lose the bill. If that is the case, Mr. President, the next item is doubled; $15,000 is added to it. I have no doubt it is a proper increase and I have no doubt it was done on special grounds, and of course it must have been done on especial reasons, because we have not made a horizontal cut in all the amounts suggested by the House. Some have been increased, some have been left the same, others have been decreased; and I think each case stands on its own merits. In this particular case it seems to me that the reasons justify the retention of the House amount. In a case just above I have no question that the reasons justify a reduction of the House amount.

I do not think it is possible to lay down one general rule concerning these items; and where a Senator has had no opportunity in regard to it—I do not complain of not being heard at all, but, as I was not heard, in justice to myself and to my constituents, I think I at least ought to have an opportunity to show to my State that I am trying to look after what they consider to be their interests. It is for that reason that I have made this point about the Merrimac River improvement. Involving the interests of a great city in which money has been invested and lost on the faith of the Government continuing the improvement at a proper rate, it seemed to me that I could fairly ask for the House amount, whereas in another case I do not ask for the House amount and accept the decision of the committee.

Mr. ELKINS. Mr. President, I do not think this is the time to discuss this amendment or the action of the committee. I am a member of the Commerce Committee. But so far as the improvement of the Ohio River is concerned, I join heartily with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] in asking for that improvement.

The fact is that the Ohio River does not belong to Ohio, but it belongs to West Virginia, and it ought to have been put in the bill under West Virginia. The State of West Virginia is very much interested as well as Ohio in the improvement of the river. Not only are these two States interested, but thirteen or fourteen States of the Union are dependent somewhat upon the cost and the supply of coal affected by the improvement of the Ohio River. When that item is reached regularly I hope that some arrangement will be made, satisfactory to the chairman of the committee and the Senator from Ohio, about the appropriation for the dam which was stricken out by the committee.

Mr. FRYE. Anything is satisfactory to the chairman of the committee which the Senate does. It may make an appropriation of $100,000,000. The chairman cares nothing about it at all; not the slightest.

Now, as to this Massachusetts improvement, the Senate committee increased the Massachusetts improvements very largely and complied with about every request that was made by the Massachusetts Senators, and it properly did so.

Mr. HOAR. Will my honorable friend answer a question at that point?

Mr. FRYE. With pleasure.

Mr. HOAR. Is it not true that the Massachusetts improvements which the committee so properly and wisely increased were improvements on the coast where the general commerce of the country and of the States north and south of us is interested quite as much as the local commerce of Massachusetts?

Mr. FRYE. That is true.

Mr. HOAR. The great single increase was at a point for a harbor of refuge where 70,000 vessels pass annually, from all parts of the country and of the world, almost; and where there have been between thirty and forty wrecks in a single storm, and hundreds of lives lost. So I ask my friend if it is quite fair to speak of that as a Massachusetts improvement?

Mr. FRYE. I did not speak of that as a Massachusetts improvement. We made quite a number of increases in Massachusetts and put in new items on account of the destruction by the recent storm.

Mr. HOAR. But they are all—

Mr. FRYE. There was a suggestion of complaint on the part of the Senator from Ohio and on the part of the Senator from Massachusetts that the Committee on Commerce had not been dealing fairly with them. That is what I resent.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President—

Mr. LODGE. I made no such suggestion. I disclaimed it in words.

Mr. FORAKER. So did I. There is not a word in anything that was said by me which would justify the Senator from Maine in making such a statement as that, and I take this opportunity to correct him at once. There was no such intention on my part, as I stated at the time.

Mr. FRYE. Now, as to the Merrimac River. There was a project for the Merrimac River. It was completed and ended, and everything obtained by it that was expected to be obtained by it. Then in the last river and harbor act a survey was made. A new project was recommended by the engineer, upon which no money had ever been expended. The whole of it was only one hundred and seventy-odd thousand dollars. In the judgment of the committee, with a new project, without any estimate at all, with no recommendation at all as to how much could be expended this year by the engineer, the committee thought they were treating the matter fairly and justly when they gave $25,000 to commence this new project.

Mr. LODGE. If it had been made a continuing contract, so as to assure the continuance of the work, I should have been very content to get on with a small appropriation. It was because it is not made a continuing project, and will lead, I am afraid, to the same results that occurred before, that I hoped the committee would give us the House amount.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bill (H. R. 11022) for the reorganization of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. HAWLEY. I had already signified my consent that the Army bill shall go over until to-morrow. Let it go over for the present, with the right to call it up at any time.

Mr. FRYE. Let it be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the pending bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. To be called up as the unfinished business at any time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If there be no objection, that will be the order. The pending amendment before the Senate is the one reported by the Committee on Commerce, on page 43, in line 17, to strike out "forty" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

Improving Merrimac River, Massachusetts: Continuing improvement in accordance with the project submitted May 5, 1897, $25,000.

Mr. LODGE. My attention has been called to the fact that this is a continuing improvement. I understood from the Senator from Maine, when he spoke just now, that it was a new project for which this was the first appropriation. I see the bill states that it is a continuing improvement.

Mr. FRYE. But it is a new project.

Mr. LODGE. How can it be a continuing improvement, then, unless there is a provision to make it so?

Mr. FRYE. Because there have been improvements in the river heretofore. That improvement has been completed. We do not say "commencing an improvement." The Senator will not find in the river and harbor bill anywhere "commencing a project."

Mr. LODGE. I supposed this was a continuance of the project, on which appropriations had already been made.

Mr. FRYE. It is entirely a new project.

Mr. LODGE. By making it a continuing improvement, may I ask, does that permit them to contract for the whole amount?

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no.

Mr. LODGE. That is exactly what I supposed.

Mr. FRYE. No; that is a contract.

Mr. LODGE. That is, putting it on the contract list. That is what I supposed it did not.

Mr. FRYE. No.

Mr. LODGE. If it had had that feature I should have been glad to take a very moderate amount there. I want to assure the continuance of it, so that the people who are investing money in navigation there, and who have already lost two vessels from the failure to keep it up, may know what they have to depend upon. I think this appropriation is too small for that purpose.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 43, line 19, to increase the appropriation for continuing the improvement of Pawtucket River, Rhode Island, from $15,000 to $30,000.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment. On page 43, line 19, after the word "dollars," I move to insert:

Provided, That so much of this sum as may be deemed necessary by the engineer in charge may be used in straightening the channel between the mouth of Ten-Mile River and Bucklins Island.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 23, to increase the appropriation for continuing the improvement of Housatonic River, Connecticut, from $10,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, line 12, to increase the appropriation for continuing the improvement of Pawcatuck River, Rhode Island and Connecticut, from $10,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 12, to insert:

Sakonnet River, Rhode Island: Completing improvement, $20,000, with authority to use the unexpended balance.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 15, to strike out:

Improving Connecticut River between Hartford, Conn., and Holyoke, Mass.: For the purpose of further examination and report upon the project for improving the Connecticut River between Hartford, Conn., and Holyoke, Mass., a board of three officers of the Engineer Corps, to be designated by the Secretary of War, shall personally make examination of the improvement proposed by the engineer in charge, and report thereon, with reference to the probable cost of said proposed improvement, to the commercial advantages, if any, to be derived from such improvement, and such other information as the board may deem essential; and $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to pay the expenses of said board and for any surveys ordered by said board.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I hope the committee will be good enough to listen to what I have to say, and that the members of the Senate will do me the favor to listen.

This matter is not the case of a failure to be heard, although the Massachusetts Senators had no such opportunity, but it is a matter of a sheer mistake on the part of the committee, as I think, and of hearing simply another side without hearing us. Supposing that the matter was one which affected Connecticut and not Massachusetts, finding that the Connecticut Senators did not care to have the paragraph stand in the bill, or were opposed to it, it was stricken out without any notice to us. I suppose I am not invading the proprieties of debate when I say that there was a full hearing on this matter before the committee of the House of Representatives. The Connecticut Representatives were present, and after hearing the Massachusetts Representatives, making no objection, the House put in this provision.

Mr. HAWLEY. Oh, Mr. President, there was strenuous opposition before the House committee.

Mr. HOAR. I have the written authority of one of my colleagues who was present.

Mr. HAWLEY. I was there myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. Pasco in the chair). Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HOAR. There was opposition made by a mill man on the river, but the Connecticut Representatives in the House, although present at the hearing, did not oppose this appropriation. I have a letter.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. HENRY, representing the district in which this improvement or alleged improvement is to occur, was a strenuous opponent.

Mr. HOAR. Now, let us come to the merits. This is simply a proposition for a survey, and nothing else. It is for a survey for the improvement of the Connecticut River above Hartford, above the last city in Connecticut. It is to enable the water freights which now stop at Hartford to continue by water to Springfield instead of being unshipped—the brick, lime, coal, lumber, and stone, all the things that come by water to go up to Springfield to serve a community made up of four populous cities, several towns, and amounting to between 140,000 and 150,000 people: the city of Springfield, the city of Holyoke, one of the most rapidly growing cities in the country, the great town of West Springfield, and the city of Chicopee, besides Long Meadow and some other substantial towns, where there are large factories.

Now, there was a survey in the ordinary way and a recommendation of an expenditure of $1,800,000 on this improvement, and it stands recommended by the War Department. Then there was a question of the possibility of its injury to some dams and mills on the river, although the real question is the old river and harbor bill—question of paying high freights to a great railroad, the Connecticut River Railroad, or small freights by water. This proposition is to have another and further survey, for which the engineers, in their discretion, are authorized to expend a sum not exceeding $25,000, but they are not compelled to expend that sum. That survey, if made, will ascertain whether the previous recommendation ought to stand unqualified or whether there is anything of injury to any local interest or structure or community which will require its not going any farther.

I believe there has not been an instance in the history of the Senate where such a survey, a mere inquiry to report, has been denied to any Senator on his sole authority. If any Senator can remember such an instance, I wish he would mention it.

Mr. President, this was done without hearing the Massachusetts Senators. The Connecticut Senators were present before the committee and expressed their views. The committee understood, as they have told me, that it was a matter which affected Connecticut, when, in fact, it is just as if there were an improvement close to the Louisiana line for the benefit of Arkansas. I do not think my friend from Arkansas on that committee would consider that he was not entitled to a hearing somewhere under those circumstances.

As I said, these great manufacturing communities, which are not only great now, but are growing like weeds, except that they are of more valuable growth, have a very important interest, and the question is whether we are entitled to have for some future consideration the results of an inquiry into this matter. If we are denied, we are for the first time in the history of the Senate of the United States denied an opportunity to have the Senate know what the facts are, and we are denied that opportunity in regard to a matter affecting 140,000 or 150,000 people; we are denied that opportunity without a hearing; we are denied that opportunity in a case commended to at least the respectful consideration of the Senate by the fact that there has been a unanimous report of the engineers recommending the work.

Mr. HAWLEY. What engineers?

Mr. HOAR. The engineers of the Department; the authority of the Department. We are denied that when we have not had any hearing; we are denied that when the committee thought that the work affected another State than ours when it affects our State, if not wholly, chiefly.

Mr. HAWLEY. I rise to correct what I think is an entire misapprehension on the part of the Senator. The committee knew where these improvements began and to what place they were to extend. They knew they would go up by Springfield and up to Holyoke. They understood that perfectly.

Mr. HOAR. Two members of the committee, now on the floor, have told me that they supposed it was a Connecticut case, and that is the reason they heard the Connecticut Senators and did not notify the Senators from Massachusetts or hear us. Both the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. BERRY] and the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] told me that.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senator from Maine knows all about this case.

Mr. HOAR. How can a man know all about a case when he will not hear what the engineers say or inquire as to what they have said?

Mr. HAWLEY. There [exhibiting] is one of the reports.

Mr. HOAR. Favorable or unfavorable?

Mr. HAWLEY. Unfavorable. Here is another [exhibiting] about eleven years old.

Mr. HOAR. Very well. There are two reports, then. Mr. President, the danger of this gross injustice is not in anybody denying what we ask for if they listen; the danger is in the Senate not listening. That is all.

Let me repeat, you have this great community affected. You have, as the Senator says, two reports from the Department; at any rate, he says there has been one recently; and that is enough. What we ask is simply that there shall be a further inquiry by the Engineer Department, not to expend a dollar unless they find it necessary, and not to expend more than $25,000 in any event. We ask that there shall be a further inquiry by the Engineer Department to see whether the objections of the people below are well grounded.

My honorable friend from Connecticut, who is a just and honorable man, if ever one lived, would not do an injustice to Massachusetts or to anybody else, and he will not say that this is just. He will not say—of course such a motive could not enter his soul—that all this freight should be taken out of the water at Hartford and taken on the cars of the railroad running right along the banks of this great natural waterway and avenue of commerce until it reaches Springfield and Holyoke, West Springfield, Chicopee, and the other towns, when you could do it for half price by water. It is not a question of a few dollars more or less in the price of coal. It is a question of the growth of great communities, the cheapness of great manufactures, the wages of thousands and thousands of workmen, the comfort of happy homes.

In the great competitions of this world the American manufacturer competes with his English, his German, and his Belgian rival according as he can get his motive power dear or cheap; and that depends, of course, on the price of coal; that depends upon freights; and will not the Senate look into the question when we ask in the name of these great manufacturing communities simply to have the facts presented? Will they say they can not examine them, and turn upon us and say, "We did not hear you in committee; we heard the Connecticut Senators, not you, and therefore we will stand by this result, no matter whether it is just or unjust?"

Mr. President, it has been said by the Senator from Maine, and I do not know but by my honorable friend from Arkansas, that Massachusetts has been very well taken care of in this bill; that she has had large increases in it. With the exception of $75,000 to our numerous rivers and local harbors, every item in this bill which comes under the head of "Massachusetts" is a matter in which Galveston and New Orleans and Baltimore and Philadelphia and New York and Maine have quite as deep an interest as we have. It is the great pathway through that stormy and windy and bleak and desolate coast, as my honorable friend from Michigan [Mr. McMILLAN], who hears me, knows as well as I do, because he is familiar with this question. It is a thoroughfare of the ocean commerce of the world.

The principal increase in this bill is for a harbor of refuge at Sandy Bay. At the very mouth of that harbor, which is now in process of construction, pass 70,000 ships a year—great steamers, great ships of great burden, bearing the great commerce of the world. We have had within a short time two storms there. There was one last November, when there were 30 vessels wrecked and hundreds of lives destroyed. If we had had that harbor of refuge, the steamer Portland, with its passengers, its crew, and captain, belonging to the city of Portland, in the State of my honorable friend from Maine, would not have gone to destruction.

It is not fair to count that improvement up to Massachusetts. If Massachusetts were a desolate spot, without commerce or manufactures or population, there is not one of those Massachusetts works, except the bare appropriation of $75,000, that would not be built by the rest of this country for its own protection.

When my honorable friend gave a hearing and a day as to those works, the men who were heard were seafaring men, shipmasters, and shipowners, the representatives of property from the city of Portland, Me. When the construction was originally begun, the leading advocate for it was a great company of underwriters in the city of Philadelphia. I repeat, there is but $75,000 in this bill which is properly and fairly to be charged up to Massachusetts. So there is nothing in the contention which the Senators from Connecticut have made.

I say again, I do not see how any Senator or how any member of the committee can say, when we ask you simply to inquire into this matter, "We will slam the door in your faces," they having heard the Senators from Connecticut and not having heard us.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator allow me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. HOAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORAKER. Allow me to ask on what ground the Senators from Connecticut oppose this appropriation?

Mr. HOAR. I was not present. How can I know the grounds of their opposition when I did not hear them?

Mr. FORAKER. I thought possibly you had heard.

Mr. HOAR. I have been told that the work would injure the dam and manufacturing appliances of somebody at Windsor Locks in Connecticut, and some bridges which are in Massachusetts, belonging to private companies, and that possibly the work might be so constructed as to flood a part of the city of Hartford.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Allow me to say that this survey has been made over and over again, and the work has been reported against.

Mr. HOAR. But we want a more thorough working survey to answer the objections which have been raised. The only thing submitted to the War Department is the question whether they think there should be a further survey; and they are authorized not to expend a dollar unless they think there should be one. I repeat, this further working survey will show whether there is anything in the objections which have been made, whether the work can not be done without injury to manufacturing establishments, and whether the work can not be done without any possible risk to any part of the city of Hartford. Then the Senate will know. Do you not want to know that fact when we ask you to make an appropriation to construct this work? Our request is a request in the interest of fairness and justice.

If we had happened into that committee when the hearing was had before the members of the committee and had stated that this affected Massachusetts' interests and not those of Connecticut, I do not believe there is a member of that committee who would for one moment have refused to give to my colleague and myself the usual courtesy which, I say again, has not been denied to a Senator from the beginning of the Government, so far as I have ever heard.

I should like to ask my honorable friend from Nevada [Mr. STEWART], who knows more about the courtesy, customs, and usages of the Senate than any other man since our friend from Maine [Mr. FRYE] has left the Chamber, whether he ever heard of the Senate refusing the request of the Senators from a State for a mere survey?

Mr. STEWART. Such requests are usually granted as a matter of course. I do not think I ever heard of such a request being refused when the Senators from a State merely asked for a survey.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, the people of Connecticut, especially those whom I particularly represent in Hartford and about Hartford on the Connecticut River for 25 miles before it enters Massachusetts, do not care so much about a survey as they do about the project itself, and we are fighting that project in limine—at the threshold.

This survey is needed no more than a last year's bird's nest. Some few years ago the Connecticut River was thoroughly surveyed by Brig. Gen. Theodore G. Ellis, a very accomplished engineer. To be sure, the canal in question was on the other bank of the river, but this is substantially the same scheme; and he thought that to carry out his plan would cost $1,250,000 or $1,300,000; but the project fell through. The people of Connecticut did not want it; they did not push it.

I hold in my hand here the report of a survey which is not two years old. It is dated in December, 1897. It goes over every step of the river and all the ground concerned here—the Ellis survey. It gives the depth of water every 100 feet. It is a perfect and complete survey. I have had an accurate copy in my hands within two months.

We do not believe in this work for several reasons. It is a question whether the so-called improvement would be worth the money. It is calculated by the engineer that the Government could afford to take coal for Springfield on board the cars at New Haven, take it up to Springfield in bags, give it to the consumers, and save money upon the operation, receiving pay on the basis of the property.

The cost of completing the work is estimated at $2,000,000. Four per cent interest on that sum would be $80,000, and it is estimated—and it is an underestimate—that it will take only $8,000 to keep in good order the stretch of river and the dams involved, repairs, etc. That would make $88,000 a year for this improvement.

Mr. HOAR. Which engineer was that?

Mr. HAWLEY. There was but one engineer, Mr. Leach. He may have had a young assistant. I do not know anything about that.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator says there was but one engineer.

Mr. HAWLEY. The last report is made by the very capable engineer, Colonel Leach. The plan begins at Hartford with a dam right across the river near the upper part of our city. That dam would back the water 13 miles—so the engineers say—and it would overflow a portion of the city of Hartford, where we have fine new ground that we have dedicated for a park. There is nothing said about paying for that, but I presume this generous Government would not take it away from us without payment.

The back water would rush into the wheels of some of the factories.

There are $3,000,000 invested in profitable manufacturing at Windsor Locks. The buildings of the nine factories are situated upon the canal that avoids the rapids. The survey proposes four dams in the 34 miles from Hartford to Holyoke. There are thirteen bridges across the river now between Hartford and Holyoke, only two of which have draws. I suppose other draws could be supplied, but it would be at very considerable expense.

The report says:

The second dam is to be built just above the mills in Windsor Locks, and this dam will flood the water of the river to a point opposite Kings Island, lying between the towns of Enfield and Suffield.

The third dam is placed opposite Kings Island, and will flood the water back to Holyoke.

The fourth dam extends from the head of Kings Island to the river bank in the edge of the town of Suffield. This is to be a fixed dam. The others are known as "beaver" dams, and are, to a certain extent, movable—they adjust themselves to high stages of water.

The plan involves the destruction and removal of the dam across said river, now owned and maintained by the Connecticut River Company, at Enfield Falls, which diverts the water of the river into the canal.

Whence this great water power comes.

The Connecticut River Company obtained a charter generations ago from the State, empowering it to improve navigation, and authorizing it to own and sell water power, water rights, and water lots on the bank of the Connecticut River. This company constructed a canal 6½ miles long, with several locks, upon which has grown up the thriving town of Windsor Locks.

For many years barges carried freight through the canal and up and down the river, and the old-fashioned stern-wheel steamers ran through it; but it is too small for the modern barges and it has fallen into disuse for those purposes.

The dam was formerly 39 feet above zero at the Hartford docks. The company had the right to raise the dam at the head of the canal, and did so raise it, so that its crest was, and now is, 40.31 feet above zero mark at Hartford. This right to raise the dam was questioned by the Holyoke Water Power Company, and that company brought suit in the United States circuit court, at Hartford, to determine this right of so raising said dam.

The Connecticut River Company won the suit.

Up to about twenty years ago the Government used to dredge the river between Hartford and the lower end of this canal for the purpose of enabling the barges and similar craft to go up the river to the canal and thence through it into the pool above.

But there was little interest in it, and so little profit in the business that the dredging was suspended after a while.

On July 1, 1881, there was an unexpended balance available for this kind of work of $13,600.80. This sum has been diminished from time to time since then by reason of surveys and some slight work, until the present time, when there appears to be left the sum of $5,000.

Now, what do we want with a survey, when we have an admirable and excellent survey? That sum ought to be enough, and more than enough, to examine the work of Engineer Leach. The clause under consideration proposes to appoint three engineers to examine Colonel Leach's work. I do not see why, as nobody has disputed Leach's report, it is necessary now to give $25,000 to examine it—to examine Leach, who was the examiner of General Ellis's survey.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will pardon me, I understand the proposition of the House is to authorize the Department, in its discretion, to make a further inquiry.

Mr. HAWLEY. The word "discretion" is not in there.

Mr. HOAR. It is in this bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. The paragraph, wisely, I think, stricken out by the committee says:

Improving Connecticut River between Hartford, Conn., and Holyoke, Mass.: For the purpose of further examination and report upon the project for improving the Connecticut River between Hartford, Conn., and Holyoke, Mass., a board of three officers of the Engineer Corps, to be designated by the Secretary of War, shall personally make examination of the improvement proposed by the engineer in charge—

I suppose that to be Colonel Leach—and report thereon, with reference to the probable cost of said proposed improvement—

Leach is as careful as any three engineers they can get, and he says the work will cost $2,000,000.

The paragraph which the Senate committee has struck from the bill continues:

to the commercial advantages, if any, to be derived from such improvement, and such other information as the board may deem essential; and $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to pay the expenses of said board and for any surveys ordered by said board.

I believe I have run over the most important part of the report of Colonel Leach, which is the foundation of this scheme. It is based on the survey and map of General Ellis, to whom I referred a while ago. Now, we want to place another report on top of the Leach report—making a three-story report. If any further surveys are needed, the unused balance of $6,000 certainly might be used in looking out what Leach did to see whether Leach was correct.

Nine large manufacturing establishments have been built on the banks of the river at Windsor Locks between the river and this canal, and they rent their power from the Connecticut River Company.

The company sells 5,000 horsepower for $5 each, receiving $90,000 therefor. I suppose that somebody will have to be handsomely compensated when that water power is seriously injured.

This improvement is supposed necessary to lower the rate charged for freights, which freights are almost entirely coal, and it will cost only $8,000 a year to keep that in order, Colonel Leach says, whilst now it costs $20,000 a year to keep the river in order between Hartford and Middletown. We have alluvial soil there, and it has to be dug out frequently. That costs about $20,000 annually. It is 16 miles from Middletown to Hartford; and while the expenditure for that distance is $20,000, we are told that the 34 miles from Hartford, which includes the four dams and the canal, will cost but $8,000 annually. It is quite impossible that it can be done for $8,000.

The freight charge on a ton of coal from tide water at New Haven to Hartford is 75 cents, and it is precisely that amount to Springfield, Hartford and Springfield being the same as to facilities for getting freight from tide water by rail.

In the year 1898, 147,290 tons of coal came to Hartford by river. The amount which came to Hartford by rail during the same year was 60,000 tons.

The cost of bringing a ton of coal by river to Hartford in barges is 75 cents. There is a fixed charge of 15 cents a ton for transferring the coal from the barges to the "pockets" on the wharves. It therefore appears that the cost of placing a ton of coal upon the wharf at Hartford, coming by river and available for commerce, is 90 cents per ton.

The Connecticut Western Railroad Company, which is now leased and run in connection with the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company, and which extends from Hartford to the coal regions, brings coal to Hartford and lands it at the factories of consumers for $1 per ton.

That railroad charges $1, which gives an advantage of only 10 cents per ton in favor of river carriage.

The Connecticut Western Railroad is now extending its tracks to Springfield, and is within 12 miles of that city. When this track is completed, this company will deliver coal in the market at Springfield at $1 per ton for the freight. However much it may improve the Connecticut River—

This is a statement prepared for me by a gentleman of the utmost credibility, a large manufacturer on that canal—

no company owning barges can afford to bring coal to Springfield, 34 miles above Hartford, at $1 per ton placed in pockets on the wharves of that city.

Mr. HOAR. Is he an attorney?

Mr. HAWLEY. No, sir. Do not try to sneer at me. I am trying to read from a gentleman of the highest standing, a large manufacturer, having great interest, of course, in this matter, as many of the rest of us have. He is not an attorney. He might very well be one, and he would be an able one.

I will not trouble the Senate by reading any further. I simply say that we have had surveys enough, and that another survey can only be intended as a sort of entering wedge to an appropriation of millions of dollars, in my judgment, for what would not be worth 1 per cent a year as a private investment.

Mr. LODGE obtained the floor.

Mr. HOAR. Before my colleague proceeds, I am authorized by the Representative from that district to say that Mr. Leach—I am not quite sure whether it is in the report—the man who made the previous survey, declares that there ought to be a further survey before the question of entering upon the work is definitely considered.

Mr. HAWLEY. Who said that?

Mr. HOAR. Leach, the man who made the survey. I am so told by my colleague in the other House from that district. I think it will be found somewhere in this report, but I have not the time to search for it. Here it is in Mr. Leach's report:

The available data . . . are still insufficient as a basis for detail estimates of the cost of the structures proposed on the sites provisionally selected.

There is just this one proposition: A survey is being asked for by a hundred and forty or a hundred and fifty thousand people, as represented by their Senators and Representatives, there having been one survey lately and several others before recommending the work, and thinking that it is expedient. The survey now being asked for is asked for at the suggestion of the engineer who made the old one, that a further survey should be made before the work is taken up. The question is whether the Senate is going to refuse it to us, after the House, on hearing both sides, put it in, merely because, without hearing from us, hearing one side only, the Senate committee struck it out.

Mr. HAWLEY. To show how much references to the House are worth, the House in the first place decided that way, and a very able Congressman or ex-Congressman came down, and they decided the other way. We have a report on each side from the House.

Mr. HOAR. The final report is here, after both sides were heard.

Mr. LODGE. Yes; the provision is certainly in the House bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. Just a remark. I do not think both sides were heard on the last hearing.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not think there ought to be any misapprehension about the matter so far as the House committee is concerned. There was a hearing had in which both sides were represented, Massachusetts asking for the appropriation for this project and Connecticut asking that it should not be made. It was decided against an appropriation. The Connecticut people went home. Nothing was said about a survey. After that the committee, without any hearing, put in the survey.

Mr. LODGE. I understand from the member of the House representing that district that there never has been a hearing on the appropriation; at least he never had one. Of course he is the one most immediately interested. The only hearing was on the survey, as I am informed by those who were present; that is, our Representatives from Massachusetts know of no other, and I suppose it is likely they would have been called.

The Senator from Connecticut has kept saying, "We have a survey; we have another survey; why do you have a third survey?" Mr. President, because he is opposing it. That is why we want a third survey. The surveys have all been favorable to the proposition as we advocated it. Every engineer who has examined it, so far as I am aware—that is, General Ellis and Major Leach—has reported favorably; but the opposition from below the Connecticut line has been so strong and their allegations of the damage that would be done have been so earnest that we ask for a further survey in greater detail, so that we may be able to demonstrate that it would not injure Connecticut's interests, which we have no desire to injure at all. I realize that there is an important manufacturing village at Windsor Locks. I have no question that it has a business of two or three millions a year. I should be the last to urge anything that should injure it; but there are four cities in Massachusetts affected by this improvement, which have a business of $24,000,000 a year, and the interest of those people is certainly fair to consider.

Mr. President, this idea that they can get their coal cheaper by the railroad is a total mistake; and when the argument is made about how cheaply the railroad carries the coal you can see whence the opposition to this improvement comes. The opposition comes from the railroads—the great New York, New Haven and Hartford and the Boston and Albany, corporations that control the business; and if I were in their places I would fight water carriage. I do not blame them. That is business. They want to get to be able to charge the freights, and those towns are at the mercy of those corporations. There is no railroad competition at all. The roads have all been absorbed within the last few years, and of course they desire to keep control of the freights.

In Springfield and Holyoke there were in 1895 about 20,000 families, and of these families approximately 15,000 buy their coal at retail in small quantities of from 4 to 10 tons annually. Granting a saving of only 50 cents a ton, and an average consumption of 6 tons each yearly, or 90,000 tons in all, and we have a total of $45,000 saved to those people. There would be a saving on the coal alone to the industries in the cities I have named of $175,000 a year. On the 2,000,000 tons of freight that go into those great cities there would be a saving of $480,000 a year on the same calculation.

Mr. President, I think the inhabitants of those cities, I think those great industries, those great manufacturing establishments, have a right to be considered; and I deny absolutely the doctrine that in this country the State at the mouth of the river has the right to say what the treatment of the river shall be. Will anyone argue that the State of Louisiana is to say what the treatment of the Mississippi River shall be? Rivers that affect different States must be considered with reference to the interests of all the States and all the communities along their borders.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will the Senator allow me to interject a remark there? That is all right about the Mississippi River, but what will he say about the city of New Orleans?

Mr. LODGE. That is why we want the survey. The engineer says it can be arranged so that it will not hurt Windsor Locks or any Connecticut interest, but the Senator from Connecticut states from the brief which he has read that it will hurt them. That is exactly what we want to know. We do not want to hurt a single thing in Connecticut. We want to help the business there by water navigation. We do not want to injure anybody. If it can not be demonstrated that this improvement can be made without injuring the manufacturing industries of Connecticut, without injuring the public park in Hartford, we do not want to press it—not the least. But we are perfectly willing to reduce railroad freights. We hear no objection whatever to that. That is why we want another survey. Every survey that has been made has been favorable to us.

What is the argument as the Senator from Connecticut makes it now? He says, "True, they have had one survey and another, and they have been favorable, but we, who are not engineers and who have not examined it, say it will flood Hartford Park and will injure the manufacturing interests at Windsor Locks." We say in reply, "Very well; have another board of engineers; go into the details, as Major Leach asks that you go into the details." He says a further examination is necessary. Do that. We do not ask for the appropriation of a dollar, although we have the entire right to ask for an appropriation on the existing survey. We ask simply for a further and a fuller survey. We have asked for that purpose $25,000. The War Department need not spend a dollar of it if it does not want to. There is not the slightest occasion for it.

The Senator from Connecticut says he is going to fight this in limine; that we shall not have a survey; that we shall not even know the facts from a further survey. He is opposed to giving us anything on all the favorable surveys that have come along so far, and we are not to have another survey. I have never known a survey to be refused in either House of Congress in my experience. I never heard of a suggestion of such a thing. All States and all projects have been held entitled to a further survey.

Mr. President, I return to the argument which I was trying to make when I was interrupted. I do not think any State which holds the mouth of a river has a right to shut off and say the States above shall not be considered, that their interests shall not be treated. There are 350,000 people, according to the report of the major of engineers, directly affected by this improvement. They have rights. Their rights are just as extensive as those of the people of Connecticut. They have no more and no less. I do not see why we should not have a survey as is given us by the House.

Now, as to the bridges, I believe every bridge above Hartford, in the State of Connecticut—I think it so appears in the report, on page 6—is owned by a private corporation, so that no public interests are interfered with. Private companies building a bridge across a navigable stream, as the Connecticut has always been held to be, do so at their own peril, as is well known. Within the bounds of Massachusetts I do not suppose they will be worried about bridges.

Mr. President, I think I have shown very clearly that there is an immense body of people, that there are very large industries—Holyoke is the great paper-manufacturing center of the entire country—directly affected by this improvement. We have had two surveys, one by General Ellis and one by Major Leach, both favorable, but the Representatives of Connecticut oppose it on the ground that it will injure them at manufacturing towns along the river and in the public park at Hartford. We say in reply, "Very well, we do not think this will be the case." The engineer denies in his report that such will be the case.

We do not want to be unreasonable about this matter. We ask for a further report which shall cover the whole matter. I want the Senate to understand that we do not ask for the appropriation of a dollar for the purpose of beginning the work. We commit the Government to absolute nothing. We ask simply for a further and fuller survey. We do not oblige them to spend the small amount appropriated for the survey. We only ask for a survey which shall satisfy all representatives along the line of the river of the feasibility or nonfeasibility of the scheme. We believe we can convince everybody along the river, if we can have proper time and proper surveys, that it is to the advantage of every interest to have this improvement made. If the board reports against us, we shall have nothing further to say. We have not had any report against us yet. No engineer, nobody with any authority or any right to speak as an expert, has said that it would injure interests lower down than Holyoke or that it is an impossible project. Nobody has said so who has the slightest technical authority in the matter.

But, Mr. President, there is this great question of the saving in freight; and there is where this thing turns, really—on the question of saving of freight. I do not, as I have said, blame the railroads for wishing to maintain control of the freight, but I do think the inhabitants of that section of my State are entitled at least to have this survey, and I do not see any reason why the Senate should suddenly depart from all its practices and refuse a survey of a river project, which is always granted, no matter how unlikely the project may be, and which is asked in this case after two favorable surveys, in order to remove, if possible, all doubt that may yet remain.

Mr. HAWLEY. A word of explanation just here, for fear I may forget it. The Senator has referred, with considerable emphasis, to the railroads as having something to do with this matter. A railroad is supposed to be innocent until proved guilty of some offense. But I have not heard a word from any officer of a railroad upon this question. The people who come to me have represented, some of them the interests of Hartford, some the interests at Windsor Locks. The people along the shores do not like very well to have their lowlands flooded.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Mr. President, I ought not to consume any time, and I shall not to any great extent. The chairman of the committee can scarcely, as it seems to me, have represented to the Senators from Massachusetts that the reason why this was stricken out of the House bill was because the committee supposed it to be a Connecticut project, with which Massachusetts had nothing to do, because the chairman of the committee knows all about this matter, and he knows about this river from Holyoke to its mouth—from Holyoke to Hartford, certainly. If he made any suggestion that this was supposed to be a Connecticut project only, I should be very much surprised.

Whatever may be the rule with regard to the country which is situated up a river having a right to be heard with reference to the improvement of the river, certainly the Senator from Massachusetts will not claim that the State through which the river runs has not some interest in it if its citizens are to be largely damaged.

Mr. LODGE. Will the Senator from Connecticut allow me? All I claimed was that the State which has the mouth of the river has no right to deny all rights to the inhabitants of the river above.

Mr. HOAR. That is just what we want to know—whether they will be largely damaged. That is what the inquiry is for—to determine whether they will be damaged.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. We believe they are to be, and we have been taken to task here, as I understand, because we entered any objection to this scheme, which is for the benefit of Massachusetts, which has 9 miles of this river in it below Springfield. The Senators from Massachusetts seem to carry the idea that we have not anything to say about it; that we are really interfering with their project when we suggest that we are interested.

Mr. HOAR. My honorable friend will pardon me. No Senator from Massachusetts has made any such suggestion.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I did not say any such suggestion was made.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the Senator did.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. That is the whole drift of the talk.

Mr. HOAR. If my honorable friend will pardon me, all we have said or intimated is that we think under such facts as the Senator states the Senators from both States should be heard somewhere.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. The Senators from Connecticut were heard because they had notice that at a certain time the items relating to New England would be considered. They went there under that notice, and I supposed Senators from all the States had similar notice.

Mr. ELKINS. During the consideration of the bill the chairman gave notice to all Senators.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Senators must address the Chair. It is impossible for the reporter to hear at the desk.

Mr. HOAR. No such notice was ever given to me. I have never heard of it until this morning.

Mr. ELKINS. Notice was given.

Mr. HOAR. I had notice that they were going to take up the whole bill.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If New England Senators wanted to be heard, the notice was that they could be heard at a certain time. That is the notice we got.

I wish to clear away one or two of these matters. Massachusetts seems to insist that this is a Massachusetts project, and therefore Connecticut ought not to be very much considered in the matter. One other suggestion is that it is a railroad fight. So far as I know, the railroad which runs from the Sound to Springfield has never indicated any interest whatever in this project, and Senators ought not to come here and say that we are representing railroads, that we are reading from the briefs of railroad lawyers.

Mr. LODGE. I did not say and never should think of saying that anybody here represented the railroads. I said the railroads were opposed to the improvement, and they are, in my judgment.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. If they are, they have never indicated that fact either to my colleague or to myself.

Mr. LODGE. I assume that.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Nor has anyone in behalf of them. I do not suppose the railroads care a ha'pence about this matter.

The railroad delivers coal at Springfield for precisely the same rate at which it does at Hartford, 28 miles below. Where Hartford meets water competition, 75 cents per ton, they meet the water communication and transportation at Hartford with a 75-cent rate, and they give Springfield the benefit of that rate.

Mr. HOAR. How is it at Holyoke?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I am not informed. So I think that settles the question that the railroads are not opposing this project.

Having disposed of those points, I want simply to refer to one other matter. This is not the ordinary case where a preliminary survey is asked for. That is always granted as a matter of course. This is a case where Massachusetts has been trying for years and years to get this large amount of money expended on the improvement of the Connecticut River, and where the people along the river who are to be damaged have been remonstrating. It is not a new case, where a survey is asked for as a matter of course. It is an old case. Whatever may have been the immediate question before the committee in the House, as to whether there should be an appropriation for the whole project or whether it should be merely for a survey—and I am bound, upon the statement of the member from the Massachusetts district, to say that the question was whether there should be a survey or not—I think I am correct in saying that this whole project was argued before the committee of the House—the question of the feasibility of it, the propriety of it, the cost of it, whether it would justify such a cost by any possible improvement. I think that was done, and whenever that question has been argued before a committee they have decided against the project, and the committee in the first instance decided against this survey.

Mr. HOAR. Let me ask my honorable friend a question. Was it ever argued before a committee?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Before the House committee.

Mr. HOAR. On the project itself?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think the entire question was gone over before the committee.

Mr. HOAR. I should like to ask my honorable friend if he states, and if he does so state to give the authority, that this question was ever argued before a committee anywhere on the merits or decided on the merits.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. My colleague was there. I can therefore only speak from hearsay, but I understand that all the arguments in favor of and against the scheme were brought up there.

Mr. HAWLEY. The statistics of population, manufacturing, quantity of coal, probable quantity of other freight—every item that could enter into the discussion of this matter was brought up before the committee of the House. I do not care about quoting another House so often. This committee and this Senate decided against the project.

Mr. HOAR. Now, may I inquire if "this committee and this Senate" ever heard the friends of the project at any time? Was the project ever discussed except by one side? I beg the Senator's pardon, if he will yield to me a moment. It seems to me we are entitled to have a little justice in statements. My honorable friend the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT] stated that whenever this has been argued before a committee on the merits they decided against it. I asked him if he had authority that it was ever so argued or decided against, and he says, in reply to that, that he does not know, but he thinks his colleague does. His colleague gets up and says that the question was discussed before the committee of the House; and on being inquired of where they decided against it, it appears that the committee of the House recommended the survey. Then, on calling attention to the fact that that statement is utterly unfounded, I am met with the statement that at any rate the Senate committee decided against it. I now call the attention of my honorable friends, who do not mean to do anybody injustice, to the fact that the Senate committee never heard our side.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not often complain of interruptions, and if I did it would not make any difference. It may not be exactly proper to refer to what occurred in the House committee, but one thing is certain. I think it will not be denied that after the hearing there, at which my colleague was present, the committee voted against putting the survey into the bill. There was no hearing thereafter, and why they changed their vote I think I will not say here.

I think I have said all that it is necessary to say on the subject. There is an ample survey here. There is money to make a further survey, if a further survey is necessary, and this project is for the simple purpose of trying to keep alive this scheme, in which we feel certainly a very great interest and think it ought not to be adopted.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I am very sorry to trouble the Senator further, but I wish I could have the attention of Senators to this one proposition. A survey was ordered. There was a favorable report on the project. There have been two surveys, both of them favorable. The engineer who made the last survey says in his report that there ought to be a further inquiry before the matter is definitely decided, and the House put in on the hearing a proposition for a further inquiry. The Senate committee, without hearing the Massachusetts Senators, struck it out, and it stands, therefore, on the simple proposition, Will the Senate deny us, on our request, what they never denied a Senator before, a survey in the discretion of the Department, when the House has recommended it, and when the engineer who made the first survey reported favorably upon the project? That is the whole proposition in a nut shell.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not know that I am anxious to get the last word in this matter, but the Senator from Massachusetts now says that the engineer who made the survey states that there ought to be another one. I want to read what he does say.

Mr. HOAR. He tells my colleague, Mr. GILLET, so. Now read what he says in his report also.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not know what he tells your colleague.

Mr. HOAR. I do.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I do not know what he might say about that outside of his report, but what he says in his report is the following:

The available data, though unusually elaborate and complete, considered as a general survey of the river, are still insufficient as a basis for detail estimates of the cost of the structures proposed on the sites provisionally selected. The locks in view are of the usual type, with mitered gates maneuvered by hand; but the fact that the locality supplies stone for good masonry makes the character of construction to be adopted depend on local inquiry, and possibly on alternative bids. It is necessary to base preliminary estimates upon actual experience with similar constructions in other localities. Data obtained from trustworthy sources are used, and the figures given below are believed to be adequate and to be in excess rather than in defect of the probable actual cost.

All he says in his report is that he has not got the detailed data from which to make the estimates, but that, judging from similar work in other places, he makes the estimates, and they are believed to be above rather than below the cost.

Mr. LODGE. I will state that the Senator from Connecticut did not finish that paragraph, because at the end of it Major Leach says:

So far as can be foreseen, every interest that is affected at all is to be benefited.

The point is, and I desire to make it once more, we are perfectly willing to stand on this report and on the previous one. We are perfectly willing to ask for an appropriation on it and to work in the usual way to get an appropriation in order to begin the improvement. It is a large project. We can not get it now, as the chairman takes occasion to remind us, but we could have gotten it; and we are still able to make trouble; and we can get it in the future. Some of us may survive long enough to try again.

But, Mr. President, the objection that is made comes from the opponents of the survey. We want, if possible, to have a survey that will make it clear there is no reasonable objection. All we ask is a survey. We do not commit the Government to anything. We do not even commit them to spending this money. The Secretary of War may determine that it is not worth while to spend it. But we do think that it is not too much to ask, in view of the great interests involved, that we should have at least this opportunity to see what the improvement will possibly cost.

I am sorry to have detained the Senate at all, but we were never heard before the committee; our side was never presented there, and our only way was to present it here and ask the decision of the Senate on our case.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the committee to strike out the paragraph beginning on page 43, in line 16.

Mr. LODGE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. CHILTON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. I withhold my vote in his absence.

Mr. KENNEY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE]. As he is absent from the Chamber, I will withhold my vote.

Mr. MALLORY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR]. I will transfer that pair to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] and vote "yea."

Mr. MORGAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. QUAY].

Mr. TILLMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. THURSTON], who is absent. I will transfer my pair to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. TURPIE], and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SULLIVAN (after having voted in the negative). I forgot at the moment that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MASON] is paired with me. I therefore withdraw my vote.

Mr. KENNEY. I am informed that if the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] were present, he would vote "yea." I will therefore vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR. I am paired with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], and withhold my vote.

Mr. BURROWS. I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY].

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 28; as follows:

YEAS—30.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 44, line 7, after the clause "Improving Hudson River, New York: Continuing improvement, $100,000," to insert:

And the Secretary of War may make such changes in the project for location and width of channel at and near Troy as in his opinion the interests of navigation may require: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and labor as may be required for prosecuting such improvement according to approved project, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,000,000, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, line 16, after the word "improvement," to strike out "twenty-five thousand dollars" and insert:

One hundred thousand dollars. And the Secretary of War is authorized and directed to take such action as may be most advantageous to the United States regarding the unused stone originally excavated for this improvement and now stored on leased ground known as Dyckmans Meadows, and so much of the appropriation herein made as may be necessary may be used for such purpose.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Harlem River, New York: Continuing improvement, $100,000. And the Secretary of War is authorized and directed, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 1, to increase the appropriation for continuing the improvement of East River and Hell Gate from $100,000 to $250,000.

Mr. FRYE. I offer an amendment to the amendment. I move, in line 1, after the word "improvement," to insert the words "including the removal of Man of War Rock."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, line 15, to reduce the appropriation for continuing the improvement of Bronx River, New York, from $20,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 7, after the words "New Jersey," to strike out "Continuing improvement, $3,000" and insert "Completing improvement, $8,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Goshen Creek, New Jersey: Completing improvement, $8,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, after line 11, to strike out:

Improving Rancocas River, New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $2,000, to be expended in the Lumberton branch thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 46, line 16, after the word "the," to strike out "report of the Chief of Engineers, dated December 6, 1897," and insert "project presented in;" and in line 19, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty-five;" so as to read:

Improving Mantua Creek, New Jersey, in accordance with the project presented in House Document No. 123, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, $25,000: Provided, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 7, after the clause "Improving Delaware River from Trenton to its mouth, Pennsylvania and New Jersey: Continuing improvement, $300,000," to insert:

Of which the Secretary of War may use so much as may, in his opinion, be required between Trenton and Christian street in Philadelphia, and the balance shall be available for obtaining a channel 600 feet wide and 30 feet deep from said Christian street to deep water in Delaware Bay, in accordance with the report printed in House Document No. 319, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, or such modified project as shall hereafter be recommended by a board of engineers and approved by the Secretary of War: Provided, That the total cost of the work shall not be increased thereby: And provided further, That the Secretary of War may enter into contract or contracts for such materials and work as may be required for prosecuting such improvement, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,000,000, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law.

Mr. FRYE. I move to strike out "three," in line 13, and insert "two;" so as to read "House Document No. 219."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 47, line 25, before the word "crib," to strike out "moving" and insert "mooring;" so as to read:

Improving Monongahela River: For the enlargement and improvement of Lock 6 on the Monongahela River, and for extension of existing fender and mooring crib 300 linear feet above Lock 3, and building a deflecting dike 1,800 feet above said lock on said river, and for a new repair steamer with snagging appliances, and for a new dredge boat and two dump scows, $50,000: Provided, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 48, line 17, after the word "improvement," to strike out "$5,000" and insert:

Eight thousand dollars, of which $3,000 shall be used in reopening the mouth of St. Jones River, Delaware, and removing from said river the obstruction therein known as Calamus Shoal.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Murderkill River, Delaware: Continuing improvement, $8,000, of which $3,000 shall be used in reopening the mouth of St. Jones River, Delaware, and removing from said river the obstruction therein known as Calamus Shoal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 5, after the word "Maryland," to strike out "Continuing improvement, $1,500" and insert "Completing improvement, $3,300;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Chester River, Maryland: Completing improvement, $3,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 49, line 13, before the word "hundred," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to insert:

For the purpose of obtaining a channel 30 feet in depth, in accordance with the project submitted December 1, 1894, as amended by the report of December 8, 1896, and the Secretary of War may enter into contracts for such material and labor as may be required for prosecuting such improvement, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,000,000, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Patuxent River and channel to Baltimore: Continuing improvement, $200,000, for the purpose of obtaining a channel 30 feet in depth, etc.

Mr. FRYE. I move to strike out "eighth" and insert "three" in line 17; so as to read "December 3, 1896."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, line 2, before the word "thousand," to strike out "fifty" and insert "one hundred;" and in line 3, after the word "may," strike out:

In his discretion, expend such part thereof, as well as of any balance on hand, as may be necessary, according to the plan and estimate set forth in report of survey of said river, dated November 6, 1891, and printed in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1892.

And insert:

Enter into a contract or contracts for the materials and work necessary for the completion of the improvements below the city of Washington, in accordance with the project submitted November 6, 1891, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $150,000.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Potomac River at and below the city of Washington, D. C., $100,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for the materials and work necessary, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 50, after line 16, to insert:

Improving the Anacostia River and the reclamation of its flats in conformity with the project contained in House of Representatives Document No. 87, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, on page 13, estimate No. 1, as reported to the Congress in said document, agreeable to the provisions of joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution making an appropriation for the improvement of the Anacostia River and the reclamation of its flats," approved April 11, 1898, $200,000.

Mr. FRYE. I move to strike out the words "of Representatives" in line 18, before the word "Document;" so as to read, "House Document No. 87."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 8, to reduce the appropriation for continuing the improvement of the James River, Virginia, from $150,000 to $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 10, to reduce the appropriation for continuing the improvement of Nomini Creek, Virginia, from $10,000 to $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, after line 10, to strike out:

Improving Deep Creek, Virginia, from the South Branch of the Elizabeth River to the new lock at the Dismal Swamp Canal, Turners Cut Level, Croatan Sound, and Pasquotank River, North Carolina, $25,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the project for the said improvement as submitted by Maj. Thomas L. Casey, to be paid for as appropriations may, from time to time, be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $22,450, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 51, line 24, to reduce the appropriation for continuing the improvement of Rappahannock River, Virginia, from $15,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, line 1, before the word

"Creek," to strike out "Urbanna" and insert "Urbana;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Urbana Creek, Virginia: Continuing improvement, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 52, after line 8, to insert:

Improving Nandua Creek, Virginia: Completing improvement in accordance with the project submitted June 17, 1896, $3,000, in addition to the amount heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 18, after the word "For," to strike out "maintenance, $1,000," and insert "clearing obstructions and maintenance, $743;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Little Kanawha River, West Virginia: For clearing obstructions and maintenance, $743.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 1, after the word "Wilmington," to strike out "For maintenance, $2,500," and insert "Continuing improvement and maintenance, $5,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Cape Fear River, North Carolina, above Wilmington: Continuing improvement and maintenance, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 10, to increase the appropriation for improving the Neuse River, North Carolina, from $5,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 15, to increase the appropriation for improving the Trent River, North Carolina, from $1,000 to $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 17, to increase the appropriation for improving Black River, North Carolina, from $1,500 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 53, line 22, after the words "North Carolina," to strike out "For maintenance, $2,000" and insert "Completing improvement, $7,750;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Fishing Creek, North Carolina: Completing improvement, $7,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 4, to reduce the appropriation for continuing the improvement of Santee River, South Carolina, from $20,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 8, to increase the appropriation for improving Wateree River, South Carolina, from $2,500 to $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 54, line 9, after the words "South Carolina," to strike out "Continuing improvement, $1,500" and insert:

From Gervais Street Bridge, Columbia, to Granby, in accordance with plan submitted January 2, 1894, $50,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $200,000 exclusive of the amount herein appropriated.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Congaree River, South Carolina, from Gervais Street Bridge, Columbia, to Granby, in accordance with plan submitted January 2, 1894, $50,000: Provided, That contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not exceeding in the aggregate $200,000 exclusive of the amount herein appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 9, before the word "thousand," to strike out "twenty" and insert "ten;" and in the same line, after the word "dollars," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War to complete the present project of improvement, namely, the project proposed in the report of a preliminary examination and survey of Capt. O. M. Carter, printed in House Executive Document No. 215, Fifty-first Congress, first session, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $136,000, exclusive of amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Ocmulgee River, Georgia: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 55, line 20, to increase the appropriation for continuing the improvement of Oconee River, Georgia, from $5,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 56, line 2, after the word "ninety," to strike out "printed in Executive Document No. 213, Fifty-first Congress, first session;" and in line 6, after the word

"sixty-three," to insert "or the required materials may be purchased and the work done otherwise than by contract;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Savannah River between Augusta and Savannah: Continuing improvement, $30,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for the materials and work that may be necessary to complete the existing project of improvement, namely: The project provided by the survey of 1890 and published in the Appendix to the Report of the Chief of Engineers, 1890, pages 1228 to 1263, or the required materials may be purchased and the work done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $250,000, exclusive of the amounts herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 57, line 1, after the word "dollars," to strike out "shall" and insert "may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Choctawhatchee River, Florida and Alabama: Continuing improvement, $16,000; of which amount $10,000 may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended for the improvement of the river between Newton and Geneva.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the clause making appropriations for continuing improvement of St. Johns River, Florida, on page 57, line 15, after the word "dollars," to insert:

Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary for the completion of the jetties contemplated in the project submitted February 27, 1895, and contained in House Executive Document No. 346, Fifty-third Congress, third session, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $1,339,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PASCO subsequently said: I ask that the accompanying statements be added in connection with the St. Johns River improvement, on page 57, without being read.

Mr. FRYE. Let it be inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. PASCO. I desire to have it inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILTON in the chair). The Senate has heard the request of the Senator from Florida, that the document he has sent to the desk be inserted in the RECORD. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The paper referred to is as follows:

There has been a very marked increase in the number of steamships and sailing vessels as a result of the improvements of the St. Johns River. The Clyde Steamship Company is now running a triweekly line of five fine steamers, the tonnage of which has increased from 2,600 to 3,500 tons.

The following statement of the business of the port in 1883 and 1893 will afford a comparison to show the growth and advancement that have resulted from the improvement of the river:

Year.	Vessels.			Value of commerce.
	Entrances.	Clearances.	Tonnage.
1883	812	292	147,678	$3,500,000
1893	490	437	847,551	15,000,000

A saving of distance between Northern ports and other Atlantic seaboard ports has been effected, so that not only have the productions of Florida found a Northern market through Florida, but also cotton and wool from Texas, Louisiana, and Georgia.

Not only this, but by every steamer large quantities of merchandise are coming from the North and being forwarded to Texas, Arkansas, Colorado, and up the Mississippi to St. Louis.

As to the future probabilities, it is only necessary to deepen the river according to the project of Major Handbury to insure the annual shipment, through Jacksonville, of 150,000 to 200,000 tons of phosphate now going to other ports.

The lumber interest, which has always been a leading feature in the business of Jacksonville, will be heavily increased, the attention of some of the great business firms of the Northwest having already been induced to locate here, attracted by the prospect of the further improvement of the St. Johns River.

Besides the six railroads already coming into Jacksonville, the Atlantic, Valdosta and Western will be completed and ready for business in February next, and this is a first-class road in every respect. This road extends from south Georgia to this city, and its managers estimate that with 24 feet of water in the St. Johns River that they could bring a largely increased tonnage to Jacksonville.

Another railroad is also projected, which will run through Duval, Baker, Bradford, Alachua, and Levy counties, over which will be shipped 450,000,000 feet of lumber, besides wood and cross-ties and 1,400,000 tons of phosphate, and the same tonnage of lime rock, besides naval stores, cotton, and sugar cane as soon as vessels of sufficient draft can sail from here to foreign ports.

It is believed from the estimates of conservative business men that the completion of this project will add not less than 300 per cent to the tonnage passing over the St. Johns Bar. This statement shows that this work is one of extraordinary importance, not only to the shippers of the immediate section, but to the whole country.

The bar at the mouth of the St. Johns River, deepened as proposed, would afford the United States Government a naval station much needed in case of war, as no other port is available, all others farther south being easily within reach of an enemy's guns.

It being also a competitive port enables the Government to use it as a distributing center for men, coal, and other supplies, thereby avoiding the evil so manifest at noncompetitive points. To these advantages should be added the fresh water, giving immunity from the terebo, so destructive to vessels and docks. It also has machine shops, foundries, marine railways, and other things so essential to a naval station.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 59, line 10, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And the unexpended balance of the amount heretofore appropriated may be expended in the construction of training wall or piling for the protection of the dredged channel.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Indian River, Florida: By dredging channel at Negro Cut near Indian River Inlet, $5,000; and the unexpended balance of the amount heretofore appropriated may be expended in the construction of training wall or piling for the protection of the dredged channel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 58, line 22, after the word "mouth," to strike out "in accordance with the project submitted, $2,000," and insert:

So much of the unexpended balance as is necessary in the opinion of the Secretary of War is hereby reappropriated for maintenance in accordance with the existing project.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Holmes River, Florida, from Vernon to its mouth: So much of the unexpended balance as is necessary in the opinion of the Secretary of War is hereby reappropriated for maintenance in accordance with the existing project.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, line 11, after the word "the," to strike out "west coast of Florida" and insert "coast of Florida and the waters tributary thereto;" so as to make the clause read:

The sum of $35,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be expended, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, in the purchase or construction of a suitable dredge, with snagging outfit, to be used in connection with the several works of river and harbor improvement on the coast of Florida and the waters tributary thereto.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 59, after line 12, to insert:

The sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the construction of a boat suitable for operating on the navigable streams of the State of Florida in removing therefrom the aquatic plant known as the water hyacinth so far as it is an obstruction and hindrance to interstate or foreign commerce; also $1,000 for log booms to be used as adjuncts to such steamer, and $10,000 for conducting the necessary operations, making $35,000 in all, according to the estimate and recommendation of the War Department as found in House Document No. 91, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 14, before the word "thousand," to strike out "and twenty;" and in line 14, after the word dollars, to strike out:

Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to construct three locks and dams next below Tusculocosa, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $440,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Warrior and Tombigbee rivers, Alabama: Continuing improvement of Warrior River, $300,000.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President, this amendment, I hope, will not be adopted. This is one of the most important pieces of work that is being done under this bill. The work embraced in this particular item is for the purpose of enabling the miners in Alabama to transport their coal and iron to Mobile by water. This industry is going to be one of the largest in the United States. The supply of coal and iron from the immediate banks of this river is now an immense trade. It is carried almost entirely at the present time by rail from Birmingham and the surrounding country to Pensacola and Mobile.

Already, Mr. President, the iron production in that region has been so great and so advantageously conducted that the iron transported by rail to the Gulf of Mexico is being shipped to England and largely to Asia and other places. This industry does not in very large degree interfere with the particular trade of other sections of the country, because it supplies places which they can not supply. Other parts of the country can not ship their iron to England, because they can not produce it at a price which will enable them to do so. It is true that there is not such a large output at the present time from these mines as from mines in other sections of the country, but there is an immense output at this time, and it is growing daily. Very large plants of the greatest importance to the iron trade are being almost continually built in and around Birmingham and that section of the State. One of the large steel plants of the United States is being constructed there to-day, a matter of immense importance to the Government itself outside of the general interest of the people of the United States.

The supply of coal and iron in Alabama is perhaps larger than in any other State in the Union. I have no doubt it is larger in all respects. It is true we have no anthracite coal; but outside of anthracite coal we have the best steam-making coal that can be found, and that has been decided by the United States. It exists in immense quantities. There are five or six of the counties of the State of Alabama which lie on a coal bed. There are two immense areas in the State; one is called the Cahawba coal field, which is about 30 miles in diameter and nearly round, and banded all around with iron ore, banded all around also with limestone as a flux for making this iron, and the valleys all through that region of country supply the very best sort of fire clay.

Everything, it seems, that goes to make up the iron trade in its natural state is there, and there together. Iron ores of various qualities are there. The brown hematite is spread over whole regions of country. It extends from Briarfield, in Bibb County, down into the southern part of Dale County, and all the way up to Rome, Ga., a band of iron perhaps one-half mile wide; and through the whole length between Briarfield and Rome there is an immense quantity of brown hematite, and, as I have told you, it bands both of these large coal fields. The Warrior coal fields, which this stream runs through, are of immense extent and of great richness.

Mr. President, it seems to me, where we need the production of this metal and of the steel which is made in such quantities, where the United States itself needs it for its own use, where the people of the country need it, and where it contributes so largely to the commerce of the country, there ought to be something done for the development of that particular branch of industry.

The Warrior River runs through the whole length of the Warrior coal fields. The coal crops out on every bank from Tuscaloosa upward, or within 15 miles of Tuscaloosa. The improvements have already run into the coal fields, but only for a few miles. They have not reached the best of the coal. This provision, which was inserted in this bill in the House of Representatives on the recommendation of the Secretary of War, it seems to me, ought to stand.

It is true that the committee has put in another amendment on the next page concerning an examination and survey, but that does not relate to this coal business or to the iron business at all. That relates to the Tombigbee River, which runs substantially on the line between Mississippi and Alabama almost the entire navigable distance from above Fulton, in Mississippi, down through Mississippi and Alabama until it joins the Warrior River near Demopolis. This amendment, which the committee has put in as a substitute, providing for a survey of Tombigbee River, is well enough; and that ought to be done because it is an important piece of work; but it does not concern either the iron or the coal trade until after it reaches Demopolis, which is about 40 or 50 miles below the southern boundary of the coal fields.

Mr. President, I told you about the Cahawba coal field, about 30 miles in diameter. The Warrior coal field is of much larger extent; it is of much greater length, and it, like the Cahawba coal field, is banded all around with the brown hematite ore. You can not go out of the coal field without going onto the iron. In addition, on the eastern side, about a mile from Birmingham, there is a mountain of the red ore, which extends back a large part of a hundred miles right along up nearly to Chattanooga, Tenn. That supply ought to be developed; and it ought to be developed not only for the benefit of the people there, but it ought to be developed for the benefit of all the people of the United States to make this thing, universally used of all men of all degrees, and very largely employed now in the construction of ships—it ought to be made as cheap as it can be made, and the carrying of it by water transportation, as you all know, is of vast importance in cheapening the price to the consumer.

If the Warrior River can be opened up to this coal field, and it can be very easily done by the appropriations which have been made for the work which has been commenced on it—it is already, as I say, built 15 miles above the falls of Tuscaloosa—it ought to be continued, and it ought to be continued by the appropriation of a sum sufficient to bring this vast amount of wealth for the use of the people as rapidly as it can reasonably be done.

This provision was estimated for by the engineers and by the Secretary of War. It was put into this bill by the committee of the House of Representatives after mature deliberation and careful examination. I was present, and I heard the engineers themselves testify before the committee, and also the people who are acquainted with the business. Having been so carefully considered, I do not think that the Senate committee ought to cut it down. They only cut down the appropriation $20,000, but they cut down the most important part of it. The committee has eliminated the continuing-contract idea, which ought to be carried into this bill for the benefit of the world, not merely for the benefit of Alabama and those who own these vast sources of wealth.

Mr. President, I do not know the reasoning of the committee by which this was done, and therefore can not answer it; but it seems to me that there are worse appropriations in this bill, of vastly less importance, where there is four or five times as much expended as is proposed to be expended here. It may be that the committee had some reason for striking out this appropriation which I have not been able to conceive, but I will confess that I see no reason upon which this provision ought to be stricken out which would not strike out more than two-thirds of this bill in other respects.

I do not want the committee to suppose that the survey which they have ordered of the Tombigbee River will be of any benefit whatever to the coal and iron trade. It will be of very little benefit. True, the Tombigbee River, which runs along the edge of the Alabama line in Mississippi, is not any very great distance from the coal fields, but it is not in them: it does not touch them; it does not touch a foot of the coal fields or of the iron ore. The navigable part of the Tombigbee River goes, as I stated before, from above Fulton between 30 and 40 miles above Aberdeen. From Fulton down to Aberdeen it runs through a pine woods country, but from Aberdeen it runs through the richest black-land farming country that I know of down until it enters the State of Alabama, in Pickens County, a little above Pickensville, and from there down it runs through a black-land country until it gets below Demopolis, in Marengo County.

I am not objecting at all to the improvement of that river. It is of vast importance to the farming interests of that country to have it developed, but it is the Warrior coal fields that would be of the greatest benefit to all the people of the world by cheapening the price of iron. They have already cheapened it to that degree that they can sell it as an article of commerce in every part of the world cheaper than anybody else can sell it. If they had this water transportation, they could and would develop a large amount more.

Mr. President, in fact the production of that coal and iron field has been wonderful in its growth. I have a little pamphlet containing a statement of the increase in the production. The production of iron ore in Alabama advanced from the sixteenth place in the States in 1870 to the second place in 1889, being exceeded only by Michigan, and that position has been easily held ever since. The output of iron has increased during the years of general depression as follows: In 1894, 592,392 tons; in 1895, 854,667 tons; in 1896, 922,170 tons; in 1897, 932,918 tons. Now you will see from this table the great increase. It doubled in the four years, and in the four years of the least activity in the iron business that we have had.

You all know that the iron business was greatly depressed in the years I have named, and yet the output in Alabama just about doubled in the four years, and since there has been an increased demand for the iron the increase in the output is almost marvelous. It grows out of the fact that there is a better demand all over the world for iron and the further fact that this iron is so located and so surrounded with charcoal and bituminous coal and fire clay and everything else that goes to make up the work in the rough iron; and if there is some encouragement given in the way of cheap transportation, Alabama can almost furnish iron enough to supply the United States, and we will supply a very considerable part of the world.

Mr. President, I am not talking about digging out a creek in a Congressional district or in a State where they want some money expended for the benefit of the people. I am talking about the most important iron and coal country in the United States and, so far as I have ever heard, in the world. It ought to be developed, and I hope that this amendment will not be sustained—striking out the continuing improvement hereafter by contract on the Warrior River.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I desire to submit a few remarks on this matter. The chairman of the Committee on Commerce has done more for the commerce of the United States since I have been here than, I think, every other man in the Senate. His attention has been riveted upon every proposition that seemed to give any promise at all of success in the exportation of our products from the interior to foreign countries, and I am a little surprised that he or the committee should have found a reason for altering the plan of the House in regard to this particular improvement. I must attribute it to the fact that he has not looked carefully enough into the real merits of this proposition.

There is not a more important communication in the United States for the commerce of this country than this little plan here—it has cost only $220,000—of connecting the great coal-producing and iron-producing fields around Birmingham with the outside world. Why do I speak of it as the outside world in this connection? For the reason that that district, acting in concert, I will grant you, with the great Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois, and other iron-mining districts of the United States, has produced an effect on the commerce of the United States in one of the great staples that may well be called an absolute or a perfect revolution. We have been here for a hundred years raising cotton and having it priced in Liverpool. We have been raising the grains—wheat and corn—in competition with Russia and the Argentine and various other places, and we have not until recently, and then only in a single production in the United States, so mastered one of the great elementary industries as to be able to price the products of that industry in all foreign countries. I am making a statement of the utmost degree of importance to the commerce of the United States and to the people of the United States at large. Iron and steel, but more particularly iron, are the most elementary of all productions. There is no valuable industry that can be based on anything else than iron. The price of iron has much to do with the profit and value of that industry and every industry of a leading character in this country and in all other countries.

Now, what have we accomplished from Birmingham, not discarding, by any means, the assistance that comes from other iron and coal producing fields in the world? What have we accomplished?

We are shipping into Liverpool, and in fact into every European port and into every Asiatic port in the world that has any consequence at all, pig iron and other iron productions of our own mines and factories and are underselling the foreigners in their own harbors and in their own ports. That is a fact which the Senate of the United States has not had time to consider. The truth of it has not been developed except within the last two or three years, but I state to you a proposition that is absolutely true and is conclusively established by an experience that is undeniable and that has been gained under the handicap of heavy rates of transportation adverse to this industry and the transportation of its products to Europe and Asiatic countries.

The business man of the great Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company, with its headquarters located at Birmingham, is a man of great ability. He is an Englishman who was reared and educated in Great Britain until he was about 30, in one of the most important manufacturing centers, at Middlesbrough, in that country. He is a very accomplished metallurgist and manufacturer of iron. He is a man of great ability and of the highest possible integrity. I had Mr. James Bowron to write answers to certain questions which I put to him last summer when I was home, in order to get to the attention of the world the real facts in regard to this great industry. His letter in reply to me came out and has been published in the Manufacturers' Record, of Baltimore, with very commendable commentaries—in fact, commentaries that have drawn the attention of the manufacturing and industrial men of the United States to the vastness of this proposition. He says:

In reply to your question as to the ports to which iron is being shipped and the extent of the movement, I will say that for the eighteen months ending January 1 the sales were about 297,000 tons.

That is, from his own works, not from other places.

Some parties have doubted statements of this kind and have pointed to export figures of the United States Government, which have shown smaller results. My answer to that is that I am quoting sales and not shipments. It is obvious that when one commences at zero, with no tonnage on the books, and runs up to the present time with perhaps 250,000 to 300,000 of export business on the books of the various producers of this country, there must have been a great deal more iron sold than there has been shipped. I make this statement to disprove in advance idle charges of exaggeration, such as have been made in the past.

The movement for the year 1898 has not yet been completed, and it is impossible for me to state exactly how it will wind up as compared with 1897. The average of sales for the eighteen months above quoted is 16,533 tons per month; for this year, 1898, I have before me figures not of sales, but of actual shipments, which for the past nine months amount to 117,135 tons. This is undoubtedly below the tonnage for 1897 for the same period, owing to the absolute cessation during the period of the Spanish war, during which time no iron could be shipped except in neutral bottoms, and with the disadvantage of war risks paid in addition. The sales have been extremely heavy for the past two months, the sales of our own company alone for export from the 1st of August to the present date being more than 90,000 tons.

That is, two months.

I am satisfied that the aggregate sales for 1898 would exceed those for 1897, although, owing to the hiatus in shipments during the spring and early summer, the actual movement shown by the United States custom-house figures may be less this year than last.

The port to which these shipments have been made—

Now, mark you, from Birmingham—

The ports to which these shipments have been made have been substantially, and quoting in about the order of their importance, as follows: Liverpool, Manchester, Genoa, Hamburg, Rotterdam, Trieste, Antwerp, Copenhagen, Stockholm, Venice, Belfast, Bristol, Glasgow, Hull, London, Marseilles; in the Orient the shipments have been made chiefly to Yokohama, Melbourne, Tokyo, Kobe, Nagasaki, Shaghai, Hongkong, and Calcutta.

Now, the producing point of the metal, to say nothing of the coal that we are trying to find a way out for to the Gulf of Mexico, is at Birmingham, or close in that vicinity. Has the Senate given any attention at all to the fact that Birmingham, with all the disadvantages of having nothing but railway transportation, has been sending her iron and her steel, too—but these remarks relate to iron—to these various foreign cities and is doing so to-day and underselling them in their ports and making a profit upon the enterprise?

That thing has never occurred in regard to corn or wheat or cotton or any other of the great leading productions of the United States, not even sugar. But here we in the South have set the pace and we have actually established this trade in foreign countries, and now when we come here and ask that the Warrior River, which runs right out of the bosom of these mines, shall have a small allowance the committee have chosen to cut it down. They have not heard, I think, all that was said before the House committee. Perhaps they did. I was not present. My colleague was. How much has it been cut down? Twenty thousand dollars. What was the appropriation? Two hundred and twenty thousand dollars. Now, I think that is a mighty close calculation and a very unnecessary shave upon the estimates of the engineers. The other part that was taken out I will read:

Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to construct three locks and dams next below Tuscaloosa, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $440,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

Suppose this work should cost the Government of the United States $440,000 in the outcome. It will be paid in the savings of a single month of the work of these men in that great interior of iron and steel which my colleague has so properly described here to-day. A month's saving will pay the whole sum. That provision ought to be allowed to remain there, I respectfully suggest to the committee, for the reason that it gives permanency to the improvement. But I dare say that there will never be a dollar spent on this improvement in excess of $440,000, and it is a mere bagatelle compared with the vast, the enormous interests we have already developed and that have enabled this country to do what it has never been able to do heretofore in its history, to control the price in all the markets of this world of one of the great staple elements of our country, for no products are more widely scattered and more abundantly found throughout our country than coal and iron, and particularly iron.

I want the committee to consent to reinstate that item. When they go back to the House of Representatives with this amendment, if they shall go there with it, I have no doubt it will be reinstated; but I want the committee of the Senate to do justice to that country, to put back the $20,000, and then to allow that portion which provides for this as a continuous improvement to remain there, for I assure the honorable chairman of the committee and the body of the committee and the Senate that there is not to-day anywhere in the United States a more important interest than this to the general welfare of the people of the whole country or more creditable to our enterprise, or for which we should be more grateful to the providence of God. The committee have added here at another place the following:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a board of five engineer officers, whose duty it shall be to make an examination and survey and submit plan and estimate for the general improvement of so much of the Tombigbee River as embraces the several reaches appropriated for in this act.

I am perfectly willing for that clause to remain in the bill; I wish it would stay in. At the same time the committee of five engineers, when they have gone over this work, will probably add nothing at all to the knowledge and information that the two Houses have now before them in regard to this improvement and the manner of handling it. The Warrior River is not a very large stream. At the same time it is one of those streams that is capable of being made navigable at all seasons of the year at very slight expense.

The greater length of it, after you leave Tuscaloosa, going to the southward, runs through a level country of prairie formation and what is called rotten limestone rock, where the banks of the river are seldom lower than the measurement up to this gallery here. The channel or canal, which occasionally fills up at places, runs over some shallows, perhaps where there is some transverse seam of rock of different character a little harder than that in which the bed of the river is formed—it runs across those and makes it shallow. It is only necessary to put in a lock and dam at two or three places there to have continuous navigation from the very heart of the Warrior coal field clear down to Mobile.

What is coal worth to-day in Mobile, with all this inconvenience and all this drawback and without the competition of railroads to reduce the rates of freight? What is the price at Mobile of the best steaming coal in the United States? It is $1.25 a ton. The fleet in the waters of the Caribbean Sea and the Gulf of Mexico that we had to have there doing our war could have been easily coaled from Mobile, Ala., through this difficult process of getting it out south, at one-half the cost we paid for it. The Government of the United States has lost at least 100 per cent upon the amount that ought to have been paid for coal for that fleet. We have already lost in the failure of this Government to avail itself of that coal at $1.25 a ton, deliverable at Mobile from an elevator, more than three times the money that we ask for here—yes, more than five times the money we are asking for here to make this little improvement.

Now, if I felt that I was bringing forward something new or something inconsiderate, a mere venture to get some money spent in my State, I would not interrupt the course of this great bill. But I am quite sure the committee and the Senate are likely to overlook a matter of enormous importance, not merely to the State of Alabama—that is the smallest part of it, perhaps—but to the whole country, for surely we ought to be able, if we can deliver coal at Mobile at $1.25 a ton, and the Government will furnish us some facilities for transportation, to get it down there at $1 a ton or 90 cents a ton. That is something in which the whole people of the United States are interested.

We have got into a condition now where we can not do without coal. Coal is now the true element of commerce in respect to transportation. It is the great motive power. The winds have ceased to blow upon our sails, almost, and our ships are run almost exclusively by coal. There are, I may say, really illimitable fields of production situated in proximity—I may almost say close proximity—to the great Gulf of Mexico, furnishing an opportunity for fuel for all the steam fleets of the United States and the other parts of the world; and we ought to see to it that they get the advantage of that. We are setting back the prosperity of the country by giving out these little doles and refusing to give as much as is absolutely necessary to carry on a work of this kind.

There is one other paragraph here that is stricken out. I do not know why. I can not see why.

Provided, That the same or so much thereof as may be necessary shall be used to complete the lock at McGrews Shoals.

There is a lock there, and it is incomplete, and it needs to be completed. It was put there in pursuance of regular surveys, regular estimates, and by vote of Congress on that subject. There is money enough to complete it, and the work ought not to be allowed to run to waste. So you appropriate $50,000 for improving Tombigbee River from the mouth to Demopolis without designating that any part of it is to be used on McGrews Shoals. I think it was a very careful provision to prescribe that that shoal should be taken care of out of the $50,000 appropriation. But it neither makes a larger or smaller appropriation to put that language in or leave it out. It is a designation of the purpose to which the money ought to be applied. I think it wise, and it ought to be kept in there.

Now, I hope the chairman of the committee will feel authorized to say that he will not controvert this point with us—as to the $20,000 and as to allowing a continuous contract. It is a matter of convenience. It will relieve the engineers from coming here and reporting from time to time. The evidence upon which this work has been projected in the House of Representatives is conclusive, full, complete, and undeniable. That is the situation, and, really, I am at a loss to understand why the committee has stricken out the $20,000.

If it is not asking too much, I desire to put this letter of Mr. Bowron's into the RECORD. It contains a great deal of very important information from a man whose means of knowledge are fine and whose character is above reproach.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alabama requests permission to print in the RECORD the letter to which he refers. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The letter is as follows:

At the request of United States Senator MORGAN, Mr. James Bowron, of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company, has written an interesting letter touching the industrial outlook in Alabama, as follows:

"Whilst the export of pig iron is a very interesting subject to us at present, it is much less so than the subject of steel, to which your communication so largely refers. Answering, however, your inquiries on the subject of pig iron, I take pleasure in saying:

"First, as to quality, that the iron of this district largely resembles the well and favorably known foundry iron produced in Scotland, which for half a century was supposed to be essential to the production of clean, sharp castings, especially architectural work, stoves, etc., and was used for the purpose of giving fluidity in combination with irons of almost every other district in the world. Birmingham iron is better than that produced in Middlesboro, which is the principal seat of manufacture in the Old World. Our iron is extremely like it, except in the one element of phosphorus, which is an objectionable metalloïd, and our proportion is not more than one-half that of the contents in Middlesboro pig. This has the desirable result of making our iron stronger and causing less shrinkage in the casting when it cools. The pattern makers' rules by which patterns are measured are made specially with an extra allowance of length to provide for this shrinkage, and the allowance in the rule used in the Cleveland district of England is double that in the rule used here.

"Our iron has been subjected to the usual amount of vilification which attends the use of almost any competitive product in a new field, but we have lived down in the East, the Chicago district, in St. Louis, and now in the foreign field, the doubts of timid or captious buyers, and our iron is recognized as standard in quality all the world over.

"Where the iron is known it sells at a parity with brands of local production, and sometimes at a higher price. We have sold tens of thousands of tons in this country at from 50 cents to 75 cents per ton above the prices prevailing at the point of delivery for irons locally produced, and this has been caused by the necessity on the part of the buyer of having our iron in his mixture to correct the failings of local brands, to add fluidity, or to reduce the relative percentage of sulphur.

THE EXPORT TRADE.

"In reply to your question as to the ports to which iron is being shipped and the extent of the movement, I will say that for the eighteen months ending January 1 the sales were about 297,000 tons. Some parties have doubted statements of this kind, and have pointed to export figures of the United States Government, which have shown smaller results. My answer to that is that I am quoting sales and not shipments. It is obvious that when one commences at zero with no tonnage on the books and runs up to the present time with perhaps 250,000 to 300,000 of export business on the books of the various producers of this country, there must have been a great deal more iron sold than there has been shipped. I make this statement to disprove in advance idle charges of exaggeration, such as have been made in the past.

"The movement for the year 1898 has not yet been completed, and it is impossible for me to state exactly how it will wind up as compared with 1897. The average of sales for the eighteen months above quoted is 16,533 tons per month; for this year—1898—I have before me figures not of sales, but of actual shipments, which, for the past nine months, amount to 117,135 tons. This is undoubtedly below the tonnage for 1897 for the same period, owing to the absolute cessation during the period of the Spanish war, during which time no iron could be shipped except in neutral bottoms, and with the disadvantage of war risks paid in addition. The sales have been extremely heavy for the past two months, the sales of our own company alone for export from the 1st of August to the present date being more than 90,000 tons.

"I am satisfied that the aggregate sales for 1898 would exceed those for 1897, although, owing to the hiatus in shipments during the spring and early summer, the actual movement shown by the United States custom-house figures may be less this year than last. The ports to which these shipments have been made have been substantially, and quoting in about the order of their importance, as follows: Liverpool, Manchester, Genoa, Hamburg, Rotterdam, Trieste, Antwerp, Copenhagen, Stockholm, Venice, Belfast, Bristol, Glasgow, Hull, London, Marseilles; in the Orient the shipments have been made chiefly to Yokohama, Melbourne, Tokio, Kobe, Nagasaki, Shanghai, Hongkong, and Calcutta.

THE COAL OUTPUT.

"Now, in answer to your inquiry as to the production of coal. The immediate Birmingham district is at present producing nearly 500,000 tons of coal per month, and I am free to say that it would be quite as easy to produce 1,000,000 tons per month. The reason why more coal is not produced here is because there is an inadequate market for that which is already produced. There have been too many coal mines opened in this district, and the coal has been sold consequently at such unremunerative prices that many producers have failed in business and their property has passed into the hands of their creditors. The coal deposits of the Pratt, Blue Creek, and Cahawba coal fields are so extensive and so accessible that, with a price to afford any reasonable margin of profit, and with a steady and continuous market offered to the owners of the land, capital and labor will be very rapidly combined together in sufficient volume to meet any requirement that the exigencies of business would suffer to arise. There need be no question nor hesitation upon this subject.

INDORSED BY FACTS.

"Its quality being thus established in our own country as the result of years of experiment and demonstration, I can not believe otherwise than that, as the months go by, the price in the foreign field will similarly rise to a parity with the English, Scotch, German, and Spanish brands of pig iron, which our own is gradually replacing and supplementing and against which it must be sold in the open market. It is true, however, that from the inception of the foreign movement until the present time the prices of Alabama pig have habitually been below those of the foreign production against which we have competed.

"This has been due partly to the necessity for offering some inducement to the distant buyer to try a product with which he is not familiar and partly to the greater difficulties attendant upon its delivery. We can not make deliveries in Europe with the same punctuality and regularity as the European producer, and a lower price is demanded quite naturally by the buyer to compensate for such inconvenience as he may incur. We are dependent upon the occasional movement of great staples, such as the cotton crop, and at another period the tobacco crop, and at other times the movement of ocean tonnage is irregular and unsatisfactory.

"It is quite correct, as you suggest in your memorandum, that the salient factors in the production and exploitation of Alabama pig iron are so stable and regularly controlled by the producers that their fluctuations are not likely to militate against the continuance of this export movement. The danger which threatens our continuance lies in another direction, namely, in the subsidence of the present favorable conditions which exist in metallurgical circles in the countries of the Old World and a return to those starvation prices which have prevailed for several decades, as a general proposition, and have been largely responsible for the failure of the English iron producers to improve their works and bring them up to what we consider a modern standard.

"It would be arbitrary and dogmatic on my part to undertake to give a categorical answer to your question as to whether the movement would continue permanently or not. I can readily see that if prices should unfortunately return in England and Germany to the lowest point ever known, there would be no profit whatever left to the Alabama producers, even in selling against those rock-bottom European prices we should still continue to receive, as we now receive, several shillings per ton below their parity. If, on the other hand, history should repeat itself, and as the result of their greater familiarity with our brands the English and continental buyers should then be willing to pay us the full parity of their own brands, I am tolerably satisfied that we would be able to continue to hold the trade and to make a small margin of profit even under the most adverse circumstances. If to this condition I might add the hope of the Warrior River being, by slack-water dams, made navigable up to the Kansas City Railroad bridge, so that iron might be conveyed to Mobile by barge at one-half the lowest feasible cost of railroad carriage, then I would confidently predict the fullest continuance and development of the present movement.

THE STEEL OUTLOOK.

"With respect to the numerous and interesting questions which you propounded on the subject of steel, I beg to state that every experiment that has been made in the production of steel from Southern iron has been entirely satisfactory. Steel which was made in Chattanooga by the Southern Iron Company in 1890 and by ourselves at the vacant plant of the Jefferson Steel Works, North Birmingham, in 1892, and by Mr. Cullom at Fort Payne in 1895, was produced on an experimental scale, regardless of cost, but answered every requirement and met every imposition of the most technical men either in this country or abroad. Having thus before us a large number of favorable opinions of the highest metallurgists in the world as to the feasibility of what we propose to do—these opinions, including Andrew Carnegie and Sir Lowthian Bell—we undertook in 1892 and thenceforth to raise the necessary capital, but were delayed in doing so from disturbed political, fiscal, and social conditions until 1898.

"In the meantime the movement crystallized on a larger but still on a comparatively small scale by the construction of two 25-ton furnaces by the Birmingham Rolling Mill Company, which plant has been in operation for one year and a half, making an entirely satisfactory quality of metal, and producing an average of 100 tons per day. The iron which we have made in the city of Birmingham we have been supplying producers of open-hearth steel all over the United States and in England, Italy, Germany, and Russia, thence delivered to the Birmingham Rolling Mill, there converted into steel, thence delivered to the Birmingham contractors, who have bent and drilled the plates and are now erecting the same as part of the new works at Ensley.

"The cumulative testimony as to the suitability of the basic iron now produced here for the manufacture of basic open-hearth steel has led to the provision of $1,100,000, which money is now being expended at Ensley, a suburb of this city, in the finest open-hearth steel plant in the world, with the sole exception of that now in existence at Homestead, belonging to the Carnegie Company. I had the pleasure this morning of seeing a squad of men at work preparing timber and burning brush and getting land ready for the engineers, who will to-morrow or next day commence to drive their stakes for the construction of the plant of the Alabama Steel and Wire Company. This company has raised a capital of $1,000,000, contributed by gentlemen from Chicago, Cleveland, Ohio, and Joliet, Ill., who have been respectively prominent officers, filling high executive positions in the American Steel and Wire Company, which is to-day the largest, most powerful concern of its kind in the world.

"They have exhibited to myself and other officers of this company samples of the wire and of the wire nails produced from our steel which have been subjected to intensely destructive tests. They have shown the toughness and strength of the Alabama steel as compared with Bessemer steel, having subjected various nails to the same test of hammering the heads until the heads of all the Bessemer nails were hammered off, without succeeding in breaking off the head of a single nail produced from Alabama steel. Their own experiments have been conclusive as to the tensile strength and ductility of our steel. Anyone can make hard steel—that is simply a question of adding a sufficient amount of carbon in the bath or in the ladle. It is not everyone, however, who can make soft steel. There is no question whatever as to the ability of this district to provide in sufficient quantity large masses of steel of great purity and homogeneity. The adoption of the open-hearth process in itself guarantees the latter, and as to quantity, it is only necessary for me to state that we are now constructing at Ensley ten 50-ton open-hearth furnaces in a row, with a capacity of 500 tons of soft steel every ten hours. This plant can be increased indefinitely.

"Ship plates, channels, angles, and T or I beams can be produced for the purpose of shipbuilding more cheaply at this place than at any other place on the face of the globe, and could be laid down at Mobile for less money than at any other shipyard existing to-day in the world. Ship plates are being sent from Pittsburg and Chicago to the shipyards in Belfast and Glasgow to-day, and yet we are shipping from Birmingham pig iron to Pittsburg and Chicago to be made into steel at those points. The freight to these two points is three times as great as it is to Mobile, say, $3.10 to Chicago or $3.30 to Pittsburg, as against $1 to Mobile, the latter being the export rate; but it is certain that our railroad companies would be sufficiently broad minded to make that a local rate if by so doing they could establish a shipbuilding enterprise on a large scale at Mobile.

"In such case the matter stands that the shipbuilding material could be laid down at Mobile at a saving in freight of $2.10 as compared with Chicago, plus the whole of the freight from that point to Glasgow, and at a saving of $2.90 per ton as compared with Pittsburg, plus the entire cost of freight from that point to Belfast, and yet this Mobile shipyard might obtain the same prices for its vessels from the buyers of the world as can be obtained in Belfast or in Glasgow. In this country, it is needless to say, they would not have Scotch or Irish competition to face.

ORDNANCE AND ARMOR PLATE.

"There is no trouble whatever in producing of the requisite quality the steel that would be required for the manufacture of ordnance and of armor plate. I am not in a position to say whether any of the ultimate treatment given to steel in preparing it for such use could be controlled by makers in this district. There may be processes for which the United States Government holds a right, and there may be others which are under the control exclusively of the Northern firms now engaged in this manufacture. For example, the Krupp process, which is being applied to the armor plate, can not be used by anyone in this district without making satisfactory arrangements with the Krupp Company, and probably with its ally or licensee, the Bethlehem Iron Works, of Pennsylvania.

"With respect, however, to the manufacture of ordnance my belief is that nothing would be requisite except the application in the initial production of the soft steel of such processes of tempering and hardening as the ordnance officers of the Government are fully conversant with, and that such processes would be conducted under their inspection and direction, so far as they were performed by the independent producers at all. It might well be that the producers of steel would simply furnish the Government with the rough forgings, which would be a very simple matter-of-fact undertaking, and then they would be specially treated by the Government itself. It is only a question of time when everything will be done in Alabama in the way of carrying to higher forms of manufacture its present crude products of iron and of steel that is now done or will be done in Pennsylvania. We have substantially the same natural resources plus the inestimable blessings of greater contiguity, greater concentration of these resources, and of mild, benignant, though temperate, climate, together with the presence of a large and docile colored population valuable for heavy work and not susceptible to climatic interference."

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I do not think the Senators from Alabama have any reason to complain of the action of the committee. In the first place, the continuing contracts for the smaller improvements are all contrary to the general principle of continuing contracts. When that was inaugurated, it was intended that it should be applied only to contracts of large importance from a national point of view, where time was of as much essence as money. But another body than this has seen fit in the pending bill to apply it to twenty, thirty, or forty of the smaller and more local improvements which have been suggested. I think they have made a very profound mistake and that all of these smaller continuing contracts should have been stricken from the bill. I urged that upon the Committee on Commerce. I did not succeed in prevailing with them that it should be done.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator will allow me to remark that this is not a small contract.

Mr. FRYE. It is only $400,000. That is pretty small in a bill of this size.

Mr. MORGAN. It runs over a number of years.

Mr. FRYE. In a bill that has the Nicaragua Canal appropriation of $115,000,000, $400,000 is a very small item.

Mr. MORGAN. And that appropriation could not have been there but for the very great patriotism of the Senator from Maine, which I am happy to acknowledge on all occasions.

Mr. FRYE. I do not care to carry my remark in that direction.

Mr. MORGAN. What I want to say is that this appropriation is small only in the amount appropriated. The amount is $240,000, but as to the usefulness of the work for commercial purposes, there is not a work provided for in this bill that is larger, except the canal.

Mr. FRYE. Mr. President, I am just as familiar with the Tombigbee River as I am with the way from the Hamilton House down to this Chamber.

Mr. MORGAN. This is the Warrior.

Mr. FRYE. Both the Tombigbee and the Warrior. They have been before me now for the last eighteen years, and we have been pretty liberal with them all, and liberal with them because we recognize the vast importance of the improvements to be made in them touching coal and iron.

Mr. MORGAN. Now, if the Senator will allow me—

Mr. FRYE. If the Senator will just allow me, I wish to say—

Mr. MORGAN. I wish to appeal to the Senator on one other proposition. Does the Senator from Maine feel very proud that I am able to stand on this floor and tell him that from the mines in the vicinity of Birmingham, in cooperation with other mines in the United States, we have become able at last to price pig iron in every market in the world?

Mr. FRYE. I am proud of the State of Alabama that it permits the Senator from Alabama to be on this floor, and I hope it will permit him to be here as long as he lives, for few broader Senators can be found than he.

I wish to call the Senator's attention to the fact that these river and harbor bills for the last ten years have been made each for two years and all the estimates of expenditure have been for two years. This bill is now an exception to that rule. It is an estimate for one year, and one only, because there will be another river and harbor bill at the first long session of the next Congress. So here we are providing for one year where ordinarily we provide for two years.

The entire estimate of the engineer, when he supposed that it was to be for two years, was an expenditure of $350,000 on the Warrior and Tombigbee in two years. We have allowed in this bill an expenditure of $300,000 for one year. I claim that you can not expend on the Tombigbee River over $200,000 in one year by any possibility, and then the next year we will all be ready to go on with the Tombigbee River again. I expect to go on with it. If my people let me stay here, I expect to go on with it just as long as I live. It is going to open those great coal beds of Alabama to the world. The Nicaragua Canal is to be built, and instead of coal being seven, eight, or nine dollars a ton over on the Pacific coast we are going to bring it from Alabama and sell it for four, five, or six dollars a ton, and supply Chile and every other country. We are going to supply coal from Alabama. I recognize all that.

Mr. MORGAN. Long life to you!

Mr. FRYE. All right. Now, I hope the Senators from Alabama will be content to allow this, I assuring them that if I am alive the Tombigbee shall be taken care of in the next river and harbor bill.

Mr. MORGAN. I can not call for the yeas and nays on the amendment. I hope the Senator will withdraw it.

Mr. FRYE. I do not like to withdraw it. I can not withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee, in line 13, after the word "hundred," to strike out the words "and twenty," so as to read "$200,000." The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 60, line 14, after the word "dollars," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to construct three locks and dams next below Tuscaloosa, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $400,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, line 7, after the clause "Improving Tombigbee River, Alabama, from mouth to Demopolis: Continuing improvement, $50,000," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the same, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used to complete the lock at McGrews Shoals.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 61, after line 9, to insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to appoint a board of five engineer officers, whose duty it shall be to make an examination and survey and submit plan and estimate for the general improvement of so much of the Tombigbee River as embraces the several reaches appropriated for in this act.

Mr. PETTUS. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by inserting, in line 14, after the words "Tombigbee River," the words "and the Warrior River."

Mr. GALLINGER. There is no objection to that amendment, Mr. President.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was, on page 61, line 19, after the words "by the," to strike out "report of Maj. William T. Rossell" and insert "reports dated December 28, 1896, and August 29, 1898, respectively;" and on line 23, after the word "dollars," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the plan of improvement so recommended, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $267,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

So as to make the clause read:

Pascagoula River, Mississippi, and Horn Island Harbor: Improving the same as recommended by the reports dated December 28, 1898, and August 29, 1898, respectively, $50,000.

Mr. MONEY. Mr. President, I dislike to have any contention with the committee upon this or any other measure. I did not go before the committee, because I was satisfied that the money which had been given by the House would be sufficient in this bill, knowing, as the Senator in charge of the measure said, that there would be another bill within a year. I mentioned to some of my friends on the committee that I would not take up the time of the committee, as they were very much pressed and hurried, and that I would be perfectly content if what was given in the House could be retained. I thought that that would be the case. I was not aware that there was any difficulty about it until the bill was reported and printed, when I found that the continuing-contract clause near the bottom of page 61 had been stricken out.

I know the committee were under the necessity of excluding a great deal that Senators insist upon as being necessary for the local interests of their States, and I know the difficulty they will have in conference. I sympathize with them, but this amendment of the committee, I think, arose from a misunderstanding of the report of the committee and of the language of the text. It says:

Pascagoula River, Mississippi, and Horn Island Harbor: Improving the same as recommended by the report of Maj. William T. Russell, $50,000.

And then proceeds:

Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete the plan of improvement so recommended, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $267,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

That is all one project. There have been two surveys, one in the effort to secure a 17-foot channel up to 3 miles above the mouth of the Dog River, in Pascagoula, to enable ships of some size to come to the wharves and load, and the other from the end of that survey out to the harbor under the lee of Horn Island to make a suitable channel. But it is really the same improvement. At last with this appropriation, which is recommended by the engineers and which in the House is made a continuing contract, we secure constant work upon this measure. There was not sufficient water to bring up, especially the Norwegian and Swedish ships, ships of large burden, that carry lumber all over the world.

Out of that river mouth go 150,000,000 feet of lumber every year, with the business constantly increasing, but it is retarded in a great measure by this lack of water. Those people are confident that if they can get 17 feet of water, which they ask for, there will be an enormous increase of output of lumber there, and I have no doubt of it myself. However, the engineers, after having reported upon a 17-foot channel, have reported also that they were instructed by the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers to report upon a 12-foot channel. So it is a 12-foot channel that has been adopted by the engineers. The reports estimate the expenditure at $267,000, in addition to the $50,000 now appropriated by the bill.

In striking out this continuing contract there is not a dollar taken out of the bill. Just as much money is carried by the bill now as would have been carried had the text been allowed to remain as it came from the House. So there is no further appropriation this year but simply what has been considered heretofore.

I was rather surprised at this action when the Senator from Maine, who has charge of it, said it was found to work well, and that the continuing contract had been very economical. I know that under General Casey and under General Craighill the engineers said repeatedly that it would be economical, running from 30 to 50 per cent, to have a continuing contract with any amount of money because of the economy in the plant. When a man has the assurance that he can get the bid for a number of years he can afford a plant there that will greatly economize his work, and can afford to bid very much cheaper. That is a fact so obvious that it needs no argument nor any explanation.

This calls for $267,000 more, which will be expended, because I know that Congress will not permit this work to stop, it is so necessary to the welfare of that coast, to the lumber interest there which is increasing so fast. I know the money will be appropriated, and it is in the interest of economy that this continuing contract should be left in the bill just as it came from the House.

The engineer who reports upon this measure reports a 12-foot channel, 150 feet wide above the railroad bridge and 300 feet wide below the bridge, 669,000 cubic yards, at 40 cents, $267,600. For a 17-foot channel he reports $1,050,222. It is only a question of dollars and cents. Of course the people who are interested in this work will feel very much assured and confident if they know the contract is to continue. It is to be left to the discretion of the Secretary of War. He need not continue it if it does not seem to be a proper thing to do in his judgment. But if he is allowed that discretion and can make a contract to continue instead of calling for a larger appropriation it will call for a smaller appropriation than is provided for in the report of the engineers.

Nothing, as I said, will be taken from or added to the bill by this amendment of the committee; but, on the contrary, the $50,000 will remain in the bill just as much a part of the appropriation as though the whole had been under one survey. I do not see, in other words, what is to be gained by striking it from the bill. Certainly nothing is gained in the immediate appropriation, and certainly there will be an expense above what will be incurred if the bill remains as it came from the House.

Therefore I submit to the Senate and to the committee that it would be better that this provision should remain in the bill. I have no desire to contend with the committee upon these matters. I know that they are generally disposed to be as liberal as they can be. But in this measure it seems to me they can see very easily after this explanation that nothing is to be made by cutting the provision out of the bill. I hope, therefore, that the Senate will not agree with the committee in this proposed amendment.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. President, I desire to say a few words with respect to this proposed amendment striking out this continuing-contract feature. We all understand that anything which is done by wholesale is done cheaper than by retail. We all understand that if a contract is made by which an improvement begun to-day is to be continued, better terms can be had than if only a portion is to be let, with nothing for the future.

This particular contract will improve a stream that covers a very large portion of the State of Mississippi, not a county, not two counties, but many counties, absolutely a territory larger than many of the New England States, a territory that not only needs the appropriation, but a territory that has no railroad of any kind. I do not believe that if the real facts were known anyone would be willing to vote against the contract that is provided for in this bill.

As was well said by my colleague, by the adoption of the provision in the bill as it came from the House you do not add a single dollar to be paid out. There is not a single dollar further to be paid out under the present bill, but a contract is entered into and continued for the improvement of this stream. The money that is to be spent as presently provided for will be worth very little if that is to be the end of it. The money will be spent to little purpose if it is to go only that far. On the other hand, if this contract is entered into the work will be done upon a basis that will be not only fair and right to the Government, but of great and immense benefit to the people in that section.

The depth of channel that was asked for has been wiped out by the committee, and instead of 17 feet a provision for a 12-foot channel has been inserted. That is the depth of channel that is now provided for even if this proviso were allowed to remain in the bill; but by a stroke of the pen the whole provision for the continuing contract is wiped out.

I desire to say to those who are interested in the appropriations in the river and harbor bill that there is not a more meritorious measure, there is not one that really, if known to them, would appeal more strongly to their sense of fairness than this one; and requiring no present money to be paid out, but merely a continuation of the contract, it appears to me that the interest of the Government, to say nothing of the interest of those down there, demands that it should not be stricken out, but should remain in. The hearing was full and complete and exhaustive in the House before the Rivers and Harbors Committee.

Gentlemen appeared there and testified orally and were catechized even like a witness upon the stand in an ordinary court of common law as to the propriety, the necessity, and the expediency of this appropriation and of this work. The Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the House did not accept exactly what they said, but as a matter of compromise reported the bill as it originally came to this Chamber. This is not all we are entitled to there, but it is a modified provision, and one with which we have made up our minds to be content if it can be had. For these reasons I think that not only should it be passed as it was originally reported here, but there should not be a question about the propriety of voting down the amendment as proposed.

Mr. MONEY. I call for a vote on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee at the bottom of page 61.

Mr. SULLIVAN. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator will not do that. If he wants to reserve the amendment for a vote in the Senate, let him do so, but I ask him not to press for a vote now.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Very well. I will withdraw the call for yeas and nays.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Senator from Maine to yield to me for a moment, that I may have a little bill passed to correct a military record. It will not lead to any debate.

Mr. FRYE. I understand the Senator from Nebraska is called away from the Chamber.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir. It is House bill No. 2668.
Mr. FRYE. Under those circumstances I will yield.

WILLIAM HENRY JOHNSON.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator from Maine gives way, and I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2668) for the relief of William Henry Johnson.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of William Henry Johnson, of Ceresco, Saunders County, Nebr., who served under the name of Henry Johnson, of Company H, Second Pennsylvania Cavalry (Fifty-ninth Pennsylvania Infantry), transferred to Company H, First Pennsylvania Provisional Cavalry, and to grant him an honorable discharge to date April 30, 1865. But no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PASADENA AND MOUNT WILSON RAILWAY.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PASCO in the chair) laid before the Senate the bill (S. 5446) to grant to the Pasadena and Mount Wilson Railway Company right of way and certain lands for railroad purposes through the San Gabriel Forest Reserve, returned to the Senate in compliance with its request.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, as I understand a House bill covering that subject has already passed, I move the indefinite postponement of the Senate bill.

The motion was agreed to.

FRANCIS SCOTT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the bill (S. 1649) granting an increase of pension to Francis Scott, returned by the House of Representatives to the Senate in compliance with its request.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask the Senate to take up the motion I made some days since to reconsider the vote by which that bill was passed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] heretofore entered a motion to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 1649 was passed. The question now is on the motion to reconsider.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. Both Houses have passed an identical bill. I therefore move that the Senate bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

SIoux CITY AND OMAHA RAILWAY.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate Senate bill 5076, which has been returned from the House of Representatives with amendments, for the purpose of moving concurrence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5076) authorizing the Sioux City and Omaha Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Omaha and Winnebago Reservation, in Thurston County, Nebr., and for other purposes, which were, on page 5, line 16, to strike out "ten" and insert "fifty;" to strike out all of section 5 and in lieu thereof to insert:

SEC. 5. That said company shall cause maps showing the entire route of its located lines through the said Omaha and Winnebago Reservation to be filed in the office of the Secretary of the Interior, which maps shall be approved by said Secretary before any rights shall vest in said company under this act. After the filing of said maps and approval thereof by the Secretary of the Interior no claim for a subsequent settlement and improvement upon the right of way shown by said maps shall be valid as against said company: Provided, That when a map showing said railway company's located line is filed and approved, as herein provided for, said company shall commence grading said located line within six months thereafter, or such location shall be void.

On page 7, in line 5, to strike out "three" and insert "two;" and on page 7, line 6, to strike out "five" and insert "three."

Mr. ALLEN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

CODE FOR ALASKA.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the progress made some days ago in the partial reading of the bill providing for a criminal code for the district of Alaska. I wish again to emphasize the imperative necessity of passing some sort of a criminal code for that district at this session of Congress; and, with a view to making progress, I ask unanimous consent that at the hour of 6 o'clock this evening we may resume the reading of the Alaska code bill. I think it can be finished this evening. We will not ask the Senate to pass on any amendments to-night. My request for unanimous consent is qualified with the suggestion that no other business shall be transacted than the formal reading of the bill after the hour of 6 o'clock.

Mr. BERRY. I hope we shall be permitted to get through with the river and harbor bill.

Mr. FRYE. We can not get through with it to-night.

Mr. BERRY. We can get through with the reading of the bill to-night, even if we can not finish its consideration.

Mr. BATE. I think the reading of the Alaska code bill should be continued and completed.

Mr. BERRY. Very well.

Mr. BATE. I think it proper that we should to-night at 6 o'clock have the reading proceeded with.

Mr. BERRY. Very well; I make no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana asks unanimous consent that the reading of the bill providing a code for Alaska be resumed at 6 o'clock this evening, with the understanding that after that hour no other business shall be transacted. Is there objection?

Mr. GALLINGER. With the understanding that no other business shall be transacted and no amendments be acted upon.

Mr. BATE. There will be no amendments acted upon to-night.

Mr. CARTER. No amendments to be acted upon to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Montana, and that order will be made.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 63, line 19, after the word "necessary," to strike out "shall" and insert "may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Yazoo River, Mississippi: Continuing improvement, $20,000, of which so much as may be necessary may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended in removing the bar at Yazoo City.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 4, after the word "the," to strike out "approved;" and in the same line, after the word "project," to insert "dated December 23, 1896;" so as to make the clause read:

Mouth of Pearl River, Mississippi: Completing improvement in accordance with the project dated December 23, 1896, $18,199.80.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 63, line 17, after the word "improvement," to strike out "according to the plan of Maj. J. H. Willard;" and in line 18, before the word "thousand," to strike out "and fifty;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Red River, Louisiana, Arkansas, and Indian Territory: Continuing improvement, $100,000. And an examination shall be made of the harbor of Alexandria, and a report as to what improvement, if any, should be made thereof, together with an estimate of the cost thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 64, after line 7, to insert:

The sum of $25,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War, for the construction of a boat suitable for operating on the navigable streams of the State of Louisiana in removing therefrom the aquatic plant known as the water hyacinth, so far as it is an obstruction and hindrance to interstate or foreign commerce; also, $1,000 for log booms to be used as adjuncts to such steamer, and $10,000 for conducting the necessary operations, making $36,000 in all, according to the estimate and recommendation of the War Department as found in House Document No. 91, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 65, line 7, after the word "improvement," to strike out "$10,000" and insert "by removal of the raft at its mouth, $20,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Bayou Courtableau, Louisiana: Continuing improvement by removal of the raft at its mouth, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 68, line 6, after the word "specifications," to strike out "reported and recommended by Capt. William L. Sibert" and insert "submitted in report printed;" and in line 10, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And the Secretary of War may also enter into contract or contracts for the completion of Dock No. 2, according to same plan, at a cost not to exceed $150,000, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Upper White River, Arkansas: For the construction of Lock and Dam No. 1, on Upper White River, at or near Batesville, according to the project, plans, and specifications submitted in report printed in House Document No. 73, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, to complete said lock and dam, $160,000, and the Secretary of War may also enter into contract or contracts for the completion of Lock No. 2, according to same plan, at a cost not to exceed $150,000, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law.

Mr. FRYE. After the word "Lock," in line 11, on page 68, I move to insert the words "and dam."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 68, line 20, after the word "specifications," to strike out "of Capt. William L. Sibert" and insert:

Printed in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1898, page 1994 et seq.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Buffalo Fork of White River, Arkansas: For completion of improvement, according to project, plans, and specifications printed in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1898, pages 1994 et seq., $3,500.

Mr. FRYE. I move to amend the amendment on page 68, line 22, by striking out the date "1898" and inserting "1897."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 69, line 21, after the word "dollars," to insert:

And so much thereof as may be necessary may be used for the construction and equipment of a dredge boat

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Tennessee River below Riverton, Ala., $100,000; and so much thereof as may be necessary may be used for the construction and equipment of a dredge boat.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, after line 12, to insert:

Improving Tennessee River at Colbert Shoals and Bee Tree Shoals: Continuing improvement, $250,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 70, line 21, to reduce the appropriation for maintenance of improvement of Forked Deer River, Tennessee, from $3,000 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 71, line 4, before the word "in," to strike out "one lock and dam" and insert "two locks and dams;" in line 9, before the word "hundred," to strike out "two" and insert "four;" in line 18, after the word "of," to strike out "site" and insert "sites;" and in line 19, after the word "above-named," to strike out "lock and dam" and insert "locks and dams;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Big Sandy River, Kentucky and West Virginia: Continuing improvement, $32,500: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete two locks and dams in the Big Sandy River between Louisa and the mouth of the Big Sandy River, in accordance with the report of Major Bixby, April 27, 1898, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $420,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated: Provided further, That of the amount authorized to be expended, $1,000 may be expended for maintenance on Levisa Fork, and $1,500 on Tug Fork, and $20,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for a detailed survey of the Big Sandy River and Levisa and Tug forks of the same in Kentucky and West Virginia: Provided, That the rest of the amount may be used for the local survey, acquisition of sites, and commencement of construction of the above-named locks and dams.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. On page 71, line 6, after the words "report of," I move to strike out the name "Major Bixby."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 73, line 3, to increase the appropriation for the continuation of the repair of the embankment of the Ohio River at Lawrenceburg, Ind., from $15,000 to $25,000.

Mr. FRYE. I ask the Senate to disagree to that amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRYE. That restores the amount of $15,000 instead of the $25,000 recommended by the committee. In line 4, on page 73, after the word "Indiana," I move to strike out "$15,000" and insert "$25,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

Mr. FRYE. In line 24, on page 73, I move, after the word "report," to strike out the words "of Maj. W. H. Bixby."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 74, after line 8, to strike out:

Improving Ohio River: Continuing improvement at Dam No. 18, $50,000, to be used for the local survey, acquisition of site, and commencement of construction of said dam in accordance with the report of Maj. W. H. Bixby, of December 28, 1898: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $800,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAKER. We have already had some discussion on the provisions in regard to the improvement of the Ohio River, so far as the dams are concerned. I suggest, as a compromise of the differences, that the provision as to the Wheeling dam, which is No. 13, be changed so as to read "$400,000" instead of "$800,000" for the continuing contract.

Mr. FRYE. In line 7?

Mr. FORAKER. In line 7, on page 74. I also ask that the provision put in the bill by the House of Representatives as to Dam No. 18 be allowed to stand as the House made it, with a change to $400,000 instead of $800,000 for the continuing contract.

The result of these two amendments would be that each of these dams would be provided for, $50,000 being appropriated for each and $400,000 for each as a continuing contract.

Mr. FRYE. Without consulting the committee, I am inclined to accept that proposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Committee on Commerce striking out the paragraph on page 74 from line 9 to line 20, inclusive, will be regarded as reconsidered for the purpose of the motion offered by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], if there be no objection; and the amendments offered by the Senator from Ohio striking out the word "eight," in line 7, on page 74, and substituting "four," and in line 18 striking out "eight" and substituting "four" will both be regarded as agreed to, in the absence of objection.

Mr. FRYE. Now, in line 4, on page 74, I move to strike out the word "complete" and insert "prosecute."

The SECRETARY. In line 4, on page 74, after the words "necessary to," it is proposed to strike out "complete" and insert "prosecute;" so as to read, "as may be necessary to prosecute said improvement," etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. In line 16, on page 74, I move to strike out "complete" and insert "prosecute."

The SECRETARY. On page 74, line 16, after the words "necessary to," it is proposed to strike out "complete" and insert "prosecute;" so as to read:

That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to prosecute said improvements, etc.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. In line 12, on page 74, after the word "report," I move to strike out the words "of Maj. W. H. Bixby."

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 74, line 21, before the word "River," to strike out "Bell" and insert "Belle;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Belle River, Michigan: Completing improvement, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 75, line 18, to reduce the appropriation for continuing the improvement of Saginaw River, Michigan, from $40,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 77, line 25, after the date "1896," to strike out "by Capt. George A. Zinn;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Menominee River, Michigan and Wisconsin: According to the second, or dredging, plan, reported November 30, 1898, $18,920.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, line 5, before the word "thousand," to strike out "five" and insert "ten;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Red River of the North, Minnesota, and its tributaries: Continuing improvement, $25,000, of which sum $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used in improving the navigation of the Red Lake River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 78, after line 11, to insert:

For removing a sand bar at the mouth of Warroad River, Minnesota, $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 79, to insert:

For making a further survey of Big Stone Lake and Lake Traverso, Minnesota and South Dakota, with a view to construct reservoirs therein for the improvement of the navigation of the Minnesota River, and an estimate of the cost of such improvements, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 11, after the word "dollars," to strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That the expenditure of said money shall be made upon said river from the mouth thereof to the forks in said river.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 79, line 15, to reduce the appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Illinois River from $100,000 to $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 80, line 2, before the word "report," to strike out "Maj. W. L. Marshall in his;" so as to make the clause read:

Illinois River and Des Plaines River, Illinois: The Secretary of War is directed to appoint a board of three engineers, which board shall make a survey and estimates of cost for the improvement of the Upper Illinois River and Lower Des Plaines River, in Illinois, with a view to the extension of navigation from the Illinois River to Lake Michigan at or near Chicago; said board of engineers shall report the estimates of cost for a channel 7 feet deep, and also for a channel 8 feet deep, throughout said proposed route; said survey and estimates of cost shall be made in pursuance of and according to the recommendations of report of January 27, 1897, and there is hereby appropriated for the expenses of said board and such survey the sum of $30,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. On page 80, line 1, after the word "recommendations," I move to strike out the word "of" and insert the word "in;" so as to read:

According to the recommendations in report of January 27, 1897.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 81, line 24, after the word "improvement," to insert "or said material may be purchased and the work done otherwise than by contract;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving the Mississippi River, between the Chicago, St. Paul, Minneapolis and Omaha Railroad bridge at St. Paul, and the Washington Avenue Bridge at Minneapolis: Continuing improvement, $150,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said improvement, or said material may be purchased and the work done otherwise than by contract, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $815,579.33, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 82, after line 6, to insert:

For improving the Missouri River from its mouth to Sioux City, Iowa, according to plans and specifications of the Missouri River Commission, $100,000: Provided, That of this amount the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, shall be expended for continuing improvements at the following places, namely: For work at the mouth of Kaw River, in Missouri, $5,000; for work on the right bank above the mouth of Little Blue River, in Missouri, $7,500; for work above Glasgow, Mo., $12,500; for work near Huntedale, Mo., $10,000; for work in Pelican Bend and vicinity, in Missouri, $30,000; for local works above Kansas City, Mo., not yet completed, $30,000; for repairs on works and contingencies, $15,000.

Mr. VEST. I move certain amendments to that clause as reported by the committee, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments proposed by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment on page 82, line 16, before the word "thousand," by striking out "seven" and inserting "five;" after the word "thousand," by striking out "five hundred;" in line 17, before the word "thousand," by striking out "twelve" and inserting "ten;" after the word "thousand," by striking out "five hundred;" and in line 19, after the word "dollars," by striking out "for work in Pelican Bend and vicinity, in Missouri, $30,000;" so as to make the clause read:

For improving the Missouri River from its mouth to Sioux City, Iowa, according to plans and specifications of the Missouri River Commission, $100,000: Provided, That of this amount the following sums, or so much thereof as may be necessary, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, shall be expended for continuing improvements at the following places, namely: For work at the mouth of Kaw River, in Missouri, $5,000; for work on the right bank above the mouth of Little Blue River, in Missouri, $5,000; for work above Glasgow, Mo., $10,000; for work near Huntedale, Mo., $10,000; for local works above Kansas City, Mo., not yet completed, $30,000; for repairs on works and contingencies, $15,000.

The amendments to the amendment were agreed to.

Mr. VEST. At the end of the amendment just adopted, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. I will state this does not change the amount appropriated by the committee.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the amendment just adopted, on page 82, line 22, it is proposed to insert:

Provided also, That of said amount of $100,000, the sum of $35,000 may be expended in operating snag boats on the Missouri River between Sioux City and its mouth, in removing snags, wrecks, and other obstructions.

Mr. FRYE. There is no objection to that amendment. As I understand, it is simply a change of appropriation.

Mr. VEST. That is all; it does not change the total amount.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Commerce as amended on motion of the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST].

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 82, line 25, after the word "Missouri," to strike out:

By the construction of a lock and dam in accordance with the plan and estimate submitted by the Missouri River Commission in their report of July 12, 1898, and printed in volume 6 of the Report of the Chief of Engineers for the year 1898, $25,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such work and materials as may be necessary for the completion of such lock and dam, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $146,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

And insert "Continuing improvement, $25,000;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Osage River, Missouri: Continuing improvement, $25,000.

Mr. VEST. I ask that that amendment may be disagreed to. That is the most important improvement upon that river, and the slack-water navigation has been continued there at some expense—not very much. There is considerable commerce upon that river, and it is the largest tributary of the Missouri.

Mr. FRYE. I simply desire to say that when that provision was stricken out the Senator from Missouri was not present in the committee.

Mr. VEST. That is so.

Mr. FRYE. It was stricken out without consulting him.

Mr. VEST. I was detained by sickness and was not at the committee meeting that day, or I should have asked to have the provision retained.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. VEST. I move to amend the provision which has now been restored to the bill by inserting the amendment I send to the desk.

Mr. FRYE. Relating to the Osage River?

Mr. VEST. Yes. It merely gives the commission the right to have this work done by days' work, as it is called, instead of by contract.

Mr. FRYE. That is right. It should be done.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Missouri will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 83, line 9, after the word "dam," it is proposed to insert:

Or the materials may be purchased and the work done otherwise than by contract.

Mr. FRYE. That is recommended by the War Department.

Mr. VEST. Yes, that is recommended by the War Department, and I have the letter of recommendation here.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 13, on page 83.

Mr. FRYE. The two items following relate to reservoirs, and the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] desires to have something to say in relation to them. He asked if we would take them up to-night. I told him probably not, but in the morning. So I ask that they may be passed over until morning.

Mr. CARTER. I shall be very glad to have both amendments passed over until morning. I wish to make some observations thereon.

Mr. FRYE. They will be passed over.

Mr. WARREN. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if it is the purpose to let them be disposed of at the end of the bill or to take them up in the morning?

Mr. FRYE. The first thing in the morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments beginning with line 14, on page 83, and ending in line 18, on page 84, will be passed over until to-morrow.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 84, after line 21, to insert:

Improving Missouri River: Continuing improvement, including necessary harbor improvements, at Sioux City, Iowa, $30,000; above Sioux City, to and including Bismarck, $170,000, to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment. On page 85, after line 2, I move to insert what I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 85, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That of said sum $30,000 may, in the discretion of the Secretary of War, be expended on the Nebraska side of said river, between the first re-vestment north of the communications bridge, between Sioux City, Iowa, and South Sioux City, Nebr., and a point opposite Elk Point, S. Dak.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know where the amendment to the amendment comes in.

Mr. FRYE. At the end of line 2, page 85.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I certainly object to the amendment. As I understand it, the amendment on pages 84 and 85 appropriates $170,000 for the Missouri River above Sioux City, to and including Bismarck, N. Dak.

Mr. FRYE. Yes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. This amendment proposes to divert a part of that appropriation to another purpose. Is not that the purpose of the amendment?

Mr. FRYE. Is not the place there between those two localities, Bismarck and Sioux City? The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN] and the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. KYLE] desire that it shall be done.

Mr. KYLE. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Maine that the words "Elk Point" were not in the amendment when I saw it originally. I supposed that the work could be done at Yankton, as has been done in the past. On the Nebraska side work has been begun and is incomplete.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to hear the amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment will again be stated.

The Secretary again read the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. This is an entire diversion of the appropriation.

Mr. KYLE. I also shall object to that wording.

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is an entire diversion of this appropriation to another purpose. I have no objection to the amendment, but I have serious objections to a diversion of a part of the $170,000 to this purpose. It does not include any portion of the river included in this amendment as reported by the committee.

Mr. FRYE. In the absence of the Senator from Nebraska the matter had better go over until morning.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I shall resist any effort to divert any part of this appropriation. I do not object to this amendment at all, but I do object to taking this sum of money—

Mr. FRYE. The Senator does not object to an additional appropriation?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not object to an additional appropriation for this purpose, but this is a diversion of a part of the sum mentioned in the bill.

Mr. FRYE. I think I will let it go over until to-morrow morning, when the Senator from Nebraska will be present.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment to the amendment and the amendment will go over without action until to-morrow morning.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 85, line 7, after the word "project," to strike out "as recommended" and insert "printed," and in line 14, after the word "appropriated," to insert:

The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept from the State of California the use of any dredger or appliances owned or controlled by said State, conformably to any offer thereof by the said State; and the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to use any such dredger or appliances in any river or harbor improvement that may be prosecuted therein by the United States, either on the part of the United States alone or conjointly with said State: Provided, That nothing shall be paid to the State of California for the use of said dredger, and that nothing herein contained shall create any liability against the United States.

So as to make the clause read:

Improving Sacramento River, California, from the city of Sacramento to the mouth: Continuing improvement, $30,000: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to carry out the revised project printed in House Document No. 186, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, and House Document No. 48, Fifty-fifth Congress, third session, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate the sum of $184,000, exclusive of amount herein and heretofore appropriated. The Secretary of War is hereby authorized to accept from the State of California, etc.

Mr. FRYE. In line 13, page 85, I move to strike out "one hundred and eighty-four" and insert "two hundred and fifty;" so as to read "two hundred and fifty thousand dollars."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 86, to insert:

That the provisions of an act of Congress entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1898, authorizing the Secretary of War, in expending certain specified appropriations in the preparation for and construction of certain works for the restraining or impounding of mining debris in the State of California, to enter into a contract or contracts wherein the contractor or contractors shall look solely to that State for one half of such expense, and that the United States shall in no wise be liable for said one-half, are hereby extended to any appropriations, when made, that may hereafter be made for said purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 86, after line 14, to insert:

That the Secretary of War, in carrying out the provisions of any act of Congress providing for the restraining or impounding of mining debris in California, may, in his discretion, when in his judgment the aggregate of appropriations already made by said State and Congress and available therefor are sufficient to complete the same, undertake the works necessary thereto by hired labor and by purchase of supplies and materials therefor, and may accept payments on account thereof as the work progresses under and according to the provisions of the acts of the legislature of said State for such purposes.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 87, line 4, after the word "the," to strike out "city limits of the city of Stockton" and insert "heads of navigation;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving San Joaquin River, California: Continuing improvement, $30,000, to be expended in dredging, making cut-offs, or otherwise improving said river, and Stockton and Mormon Channels to the heads of navigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 87, line 9, to increase the appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Upper Columbia River, Oregon, from $5,000 to $7,500.

Mr. FRYE. I offer an amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 87, line 8, after the word "Columbia," it is proposed to strike out the words "River, Oregon," and insert "and Snake rivers, Oregon and Washington;" so as to make the paragraph read:

Improving Columbia and Snake rivers, Oregon and Washington: Continuing improvement, $7,500.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 87, after line 10, to insert:

Improvement of Coos River, Oregon: Completing improvement, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 87, after line 12, to insert: Canal at Cascades, Columbia River, Oregon: Continuing improvement, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 87, after line 14, to insert:

Improving Columbia River, Oregon and Washington, at Three Mile Rapids, and the construction and equipment of a boat railway from the foot of The Dalles Rapids to the head of Celilo Falls, in the State of Oregon, the same to be constructed in accordance with the plans and specifications of the Engineer Department of the United States, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 87, after line 21, to insert:

Improving Long Tom River, Oregon: The sum of $3,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to be expended in the discretion of the Secretary of War, is hereby transferred from the balance remaining to the credit of the appropriation made June 4, 1897, sundry civil act, for the improvement of the Willamette River above Portland.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, line 7, before the word "thousand," to insert "and fifty;" so as to make the clause read: Improving Lower Willamette River in front of and below Portland, Oregon, and Columbia River below the Willamette River in Oregon and Washington: Continuing improvement, $150,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, line 9, to increase the appropriation for continuing the improvement of Coquille River, below Coquille City, Oreg., from $25,000 to $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, after line 9, to insert:

Improving Clatskanie River, Oregon: To complete improvement recommended in report printed in House Document No. 218, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, $13,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, line 17, to increase the appropriation for continuing the improvement of the Upper Coquille River, between Coquille City and Myrtle Point, Oreg., from $6,000 to $9,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, after line 18, to strike out:

Improving Columbia River between the mouth of the Willamette River and the city of Vancouver, Wash.: Continuing improvement, $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 88, after line 21, to insert:

Improving Columbia River below Tongue Point by way of the South Channel in front of Astoria, Oreg., in accordance with project submitted in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for the year 1895: Completing improvement, $71,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, after line 6, to insert:

For the improvement of the Lewis River, Washington, from its mouth to Lacenter, according to the plan submitted by the Chief of Engineers in his annual report for the year 1897, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 89, after line 15, to insert:

For the improvement of the Pend Oreille River, Washington, from Albany Falls to the town of Metalline, Wash., in accordance with approved plans, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for improving Willapa River and Harbor, Washington, on page 89, line 24, after the word "dollars," to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That in the discretion of the Secretary of War so much of this amount as may be necessary shall be expended for more thoroughly clearing a channel through the North River jam.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 90, line 5, after the word "with," to strike out "approved project" and insert "project printed in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1898;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving Okanagon River, Washington: Continuing improvement in accordance with project printed in the Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1898, $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of line 16, on page 90.

Mr. FRYE. A request was made for a short executive session at a quarter of 6, and I ask that the reading of the bill may be suspended at this point.

I am instructed by the Committee on Commerce to move that when the Senate adjourns to-night it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning, instead of at the usual hour.

The motion was agreed to.

DENISON, BONHAM AND NEW ORLEANS RAILWAY.

Mr. CHILTON. I ask leave to call up the bill (S. 5514) to amend an act entitled "An act to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Denison, Bonham and New Orleans Railway Company for the purpose of constructing a railway, and for other purposes," approved March 28, 1898, and to vest in the Denison, Bonham and Gulf Railway Company all the rights, privileges, and franchises therein granted to said first-named company. It is a very short bill, and there will be no contest over it, I am sure.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WILLIAM BRITTON.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5740) to remove the charge of desertion against William Britton, reported unanimously by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] from the Committee on Military Affairs.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with amendments, in line 7, after the word "August," to strike out "fifth" and insert "fourth;" in line 8, after the word "and," to strike out "sixty-four;" in the same line, after the word "pay," to insert "allowance;" in line 10, after the word "August," to strike out "fifth" and insert "fourth;" and in the same line, after the word "and," to strike out "sixty-three" and insert "sixty-four;" so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion now standing against the record of William Britton, of Company A, Fifty-eighth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and to grant him an honorable discharge as of August 4, 1864: Provided, That no pay, allowance, or emoluments shall become due by virtue of this act subsequent to August 4, 1864.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

GEORGIA PINE RAILWAY.

Mr. BACON. I ask the Senate to take up for present consideration the bill (H. R. 11867) to authorize the Georgia Pine Railway, of Georgia, to construct a bridge across the Flint River, a navigable stream in Decatur County, Ga. It provides for the construction of a bridge for a railroad now in process of construction.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After ten minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BUTLER submitted an amendment proposing to make available for the fiscal year 1900 any unexpended balance of the appropriation made by the act of July 7, 1898, for the establishment of a fish-cultural station in the State of North Carolina, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $8,000,000 for the construction, maintenance, and operation, in connection with the Post-Office Department of the United States Government, a submarine cable or cables connecting land lines from San Francisco to Honolulu, in the Hawaiian Islands, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. McBRIDE submitted an amendment proposing to extend to the port of Astoria, Oreg., the privilege of immediate transportation of dutiable goods in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 10, 1880, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

JUDICIAL SYSTEM OF THE NAVY.

Mr. McBRIDE (by request) submitted the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

Resolved, That as the Navy is entitled to nothing less than the best legal ministry, and as the Judge-Advocate-General decides all questions of constitution, law, and justice for every ship, station, and department in the whole naval service, as well as the many comprehensive matters stated in Congressional Directory as pertaining to said office, inquiry be made if so important a judicial elevation should not be limited to jurists who, while being versed in naval law and regulations, shall have had at least five years' legal practice, instead of being, as now, limited (act June, 1880) to officers of the Navy.

CODE FOR ALASKA.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8571) to define and punish crimes in the district of Alaska and to provide a code of criminal procedure for said district.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to know what the understanding is with regard to the reading of this bill. I was not present when unanimous consent was given, and therefore I do not know what it was.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Montana [Mr. CARTER] will state the agreement. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair at the time.

Mr. CARTER. I will state it. It is that the formal reading of the bill shall be proceeded with; that amendments shall not be acted upon, and that no other business than the formal reading of the bill shall be transacted during the evening prior to adjournment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have no objection.

The Secretary resumed the reading of the bill at page 56, chapter 8, section 135, and continued the reading to the end of section 413, chapter 40, Title II, page 212.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, it will be observed that the sections have been renumbered by the committee. I should like to have an understanding as to whether the Secretary is to read the amended numbers of the sections or the numbers as they appear in the original print.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHANDLER in the chair). In one or two instances, by mistake, the Secretary has read the amended numbers.

Mr. CARTER. I have observed some confusion in that behalf, and certain Senators have complained of their inability to follow the Secretary closely. I presume that condition has resulted from the confusion as to the numbers of the sections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The rule requires that the original numbers shall be read and that the amended numbers shall not be read; but the amendments to the bill, the Chair understands, are none of them to be read in this reading of the bill. Only the original bill is to be read, according to the understanding of the Chair. The Secretary will proceed.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, I understand the fact to be that the amendments are to be read, but not acted upon to-night.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not know what the understanding is. On page 211, for instance, "Chapter 40. Of justices of the peace and constables ex officio," the Committee on Territories report to strike out sections 412 and 413. Does the Senator desire to have those sections read?

Mr. CARTER. My understanding was that the amendments, together with the text of the bill, were to be read, but that no action is to be taken upon the amendments at this session of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading, and read the sections as originally numbered.

Mr. CARTER. I understand the Secretary to have read the amendments as proposed by the committee as well as the original bill thus far.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the amendments have been read, although the Chair had not particularly noticed.

The reading of the bill was resumed, at chapter 41, Title II, section 414, on page 212, and continued to the end of the section.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that none of the amendments are to be acted upon, although they are to be read.

Mr. CARTER. None of the amendments are to be acted upon at this session of the Senate.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of chapter 43, Title II, to the end of page 223.

Mr. CARTER. I understand the Secretary is now reading chapter 44 of the original print.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Chapter 44 of the original print, amended chapter 43.

Mr. CARTER. I may have been mistaken about it, but my impression was that the Secretary read chapter 43, and I wish to state that that would mislead Senators. I therefore suggest the propriety in reading the chapters and sections of reading the original section in each case with accuracy, as well as the amendment, so that no mistake can occur with reference to the place at which the reading is in progress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That will be the course pursued. The Chair will call attention to certain sections soon to be reached, new section 455 and new section 457, covering more than a page. The Chair understands that those sections are to be read, but not acted upon.

Mr. CARTER. I understand that all the amendments are to be read, and I will state here for the information of the Senate that during a former session of the Senate, on behalf of the Committee on Territories, I announced that the committee report would be amended by striking out all of the reported bill after page 248.

The reading was resumed and continued to the end of line 7, section 457, page 236.

Mr. SHOUP. I understand now that the Secretary is reading a proposed amendment.

Mr. CARTER. That is on page 236, as I understand. The Secretary has read what is a substitute for sections 461 and 462.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho ask to have section 457, which is a section proposed by the committee, again read? If so, the Secretary will again read section 457.

Mr. SHOUP. I rose merely for information.

Mr. CARTER. I desire to call attention to the fact that section 457 is a substitute for what are known as the license sections of the House bill, found on page 59, section 142 and following, and is essentially a substitute for the parts stricken out in section 442.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 83, section 459, page 230.

Mr. CHANDLER. The sections which are now being read appear to be all new additions to the bill proposed by the Senate Committee on Territories. There appears to be a very elaborate system of taxation by license fees, and then there follow statutes regulating the sale of liquor in the Territory. They seem to have been carefully prepared, but they will, of course, arouse some discussion before the bill is disposed of in the Senate. I only wish now to have from the chairman of the committee, whom I see present, or the Senator from Idaho [Mr. SHOUP], tell me, if he can and is willing to do so, from the statutes of what other States these sections have been derived, if they have been taken from similar statutes in other States. What is the origin of those provisions? Are they original with the committee or are they taken from previous statutes in existence elsewhere?

Mr. SHOUP. I wish to state to the Senator from New Hampshire that by previous agreement there is to be no action upon these amendments to-night. The license law is practically the same as that of the District of Columbia. I will state, not for the purpose of discussion, but merely for the information of the Senator from New Hampshire, that the license law is taken from that of the District. The Committee on Territories have thoroughly investigated the condition of affairs in Alaska and have prepared certain licenses which in their judgment will create a revenue sufficient to defray all the expenses of the government of the Territory of Alaska.

Mr. CHANDLER. I was well aware that it was understood there should be no action upon these amendments this evening. I did not understand there would be any objection, however, to inquiries from time to time to be made by Senators who might stay here to familiarize themselves with the bill while it was being read. I did not understand that any objection would be interposed to the making of such inquiries and having replies made to them.

Mr. CARTER. No objection can be made.

Mr. CHANDLER. Do I understand the Senator to say that the body of the license taxes provided for and the liquor licenses are taken from the statutes prevailing in the District of Columbia?

Mr. SHOUP. The details are somewhat different, but they are based, so far as the liquor law is concerned, on the District law. The other licenses are not. They are licenses peculiar to the condition of affairs in the Territory of Alaska on certain lines of goods, articles of commerce, etc., which, in the judgment of the committee, should bear a license, inasmuch as there is no taxation whatever in Alaska. Not one dollar of taxes is raised on any kind of property there. It is therefore necessary to raise revenue of some kind, and in the judgment of the Committee on Territories, after consultation with prominent citizens of the Territory of Alaska, including the governor and several other officers, this code or list of licenses was prepared by the committee. It was prepared largely upon their suggestions and upon the information of the committee derived from conversing with them.

Mr. CHANDLER. Then I understand that the commercial and business conditions in Alaska being peculiar, a special code of license taxes has been devised?

Mr. SHOUP. That is correct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HEITFIELD in the chair). The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of line 13, section 459, page 230.

Mr. CHANDLER. I call the attention of the Senator from Montana to lines 11, 12, and 13 of the proposed amendment on page 230:

Provided, That each day business is done or attempted to be done in violation of the preceding section shall constitute a separate and distinct offense.

Manifestly there should be some change in the language there, because a day can not constitute an offense. Will the Senator make a memorandum and later prepare an amendment?

Mr. CARTER. I rather incline to the opinion that when that language is carefully scrutinized it will be found that it applies especially to the conducting of a business. Whether sales are made or not is a question of little moment. The number of days on which a business is conducted will be the number of offenses committed. It would be difficult to prove in a given case that certain liquors, for instance, had been sold upon Monday or Tuesday or Wednesday or Thursday of a given week, but it would be an easy matter to show that a saloon had been open and that liquors were offered for sale, general business conducted, the liquor traffic engaged in on certain definite distinct days to be alleged in the information or indictment. However, I shall be glad to hear from the Senator on that subject at the time the matter is taken up for consideration in the Senate, unhampered by any unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. CHANDLER. My criticism is a verbal criticism; but this is a crime statute, and the offense must be carefully set forth. The Senator will see what I mean. A day can not constitute a separate and distinct offense. If the Senator means that the proviso should read like this:

Provided, That for each day on which business is done or attempted to be done in violation of the preceding section the party shall be deemed guilty of a separate and distinct offense—

Then the language should be explicitly framed to define such an offense; but a day can not be an offense.

Mr. CARTER. I observe that the Senator's criticism is purely verbal.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of page 241.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will state to the Senator from Montana that the clerks call his attention to a matter in section 477, the words, "That no license shall," etc. It should be "licensee." Will the Senator from Montana take note of that?

Mr. CARTER. That will be a proper subject to consider when amendments are in order.

Mr. CHANDLER. Has the appendix been read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Not yet.

Mr. CARTER. The appendix constitutes a part of the proposed act, and it must be read.

The Secretary read the appendix beginning on page 243 and ending on page 248.

Mr. CARTER. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. President—

Mr. CARTER. I withdraw the motion temporarily.

Mr. CHANDLER. It is understood that we meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so understands.

Mr. CARTER. A motion was made to that effect by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], and it was carried. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate (at 7 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 24, 1899, at 11 o'clock a. m.

ELECTION CASE OF BROWN vs. SWANSON.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up for consideration the contested-election case of Brown against Swanson. The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That Claude A. Swanson was not elected a Representative in the Fifty-fifth Congress from the Fifth Congressional district of the State of Virginia, and is not entitled to a seat therein.

Resolved, That John K. Brown was duly elected a Representative in the fifty-fifth Congress from the Fifth Congressional district of the State of Virginia, and is entitled to a seat therein.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, we raise the question of consideration, and I desire at the proper time to insist that this is not the majority report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana raises the question of consideration.

Mr. CRUMPACKER. Upon that I demand the yeas and nays. The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 101, nays 133, answered "present" 6, not voting 111; as follows:

So the House decided not to consider the election case.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I find that I am paired with the gentleman from Arkansas, Mr. BRUNDIDGE. I desire, therefore, to withdraw my vote and be marked "present;" otherwise I should allow my vote in the affirmative to remain.

The following pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. FOWLER of New Jersey with Mr. CATCHINGS

Mr. HENRY of Indiana with Mr. GRIFFITH.

Mr. McEWAN with Mr. VEHSAGE.

Mr. CLARKE of New Hampshire with Mr. KING.

For this day:

Mr. BEACH with Mr. NEWLANDS.

Mr. PEARSON with Mr. OGDEN.

Mr. FOSS with Mr. FOWLER of North Carolina.

Mr. BARTHOLDT with Mr. CRANFORD.

Mr. WANGER with Mr. LEWIS of Washington.

Mr. SOUTHARD with Mr. LATIMER.

Mr. COUSINS with Mr. LITTLE.

Mr. CHICKERING with Mr. HOWARD of Georgia.

Mr. LORIMER with Mr. MARTIN.

Mr. RUSSELL with Mr. JONES of Virginia.

Mr. ARNOLD with Mr. CLAYTON.

Mr. JOY with Mr. DE GRAFFENREID.

Mr. HARMER with Mr. BLAND.

Mr. WHITE of Illinois with Mr. BRADLEY.

Mr. SHOWALTER with Mr. BENNER of Pennsylvania.

Mr. STONE with Mr. HARTMAN.

Mr. BINGHAM with Mr. DRIGGS.

On this question:

Mr. STEWART of New Jersey with Mr. KETCHAM.

Mr. HITT with Mr. TERRY.

Mr. STURTEVANT with Mr. POWERS.

Mr. OVERSTREET with Mr. ZENOR.

Mr. MITCHELL with Mr. CLARK of Missouri.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK with Mr. BRUNDIDGE.

Mr. WM. ALDEN SMITH with Mr. TATE.

Mr. HAMILTON with Mr. ERMENTROUT.

Mr. MAHON with Mr. OTEY.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I desire to say that my colleague, Mr. ZENOR, is detained at home this morning by reason of sickness.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

CORRECTION.

Mr. TODD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan rises to a question of personal privilege. The House will be in order.

Mr. TODD. Mr. Speaker, yesterday when the naval appropriation bill was reported for consideration, some gentleman on this side proposed that the Government build a factory for the manufacture of armor for our battle ships. The gentleman from California [Mr. HILBORN] then asked a question which I understood, as it is reported in the Washington Post of this morning, as follows:

If the private armor-plate concerns own the Krupp patents and refuse to sell them to the Government, what can we do about it?

To which I replied, as reported in the Post:

Blow them to pieces with our cannon.

Now, the RECORD of this morning omits the language of Mr. HILBORN as I have just quoted it, and it reads as follows:

Mr. HILBORN. I did not hear your answer to the question that was propounded by the gentleman a moment ago. Supposing that the two great armor plate manufacturers of the country have purchased of the Krupps the exclusive right to make this plate, what would the United States do if we put up a plant of our own?

Then follows my answer:

Mr. TODD. Blow those factories to pieces with our cannon.

I rose, Mr. Speaker, to say that the language of the gentleman from California, as printed in the RECORD, places an entirely different construction upon the language which I used. I am sure I would not wish to destroy the property of any person doing a legitimate business in this country, or even a person doing an illegitimate business, because the regulation of such matters rests with the Government. But if any corporation should prove disloyal to this country after it has been patronized by the Government, as the steel trust has been, and would refuse in time of war to sell to our Government at a fair price the right to use armor-plate patents for our battle ships, then, considering them a greater enemy than ever Spain or England has been (because I despise a domestic more than a foreign foe), I would not care to retract the language I used.

The SPEAKER. What is the question of privilege raised by the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. TODD. I simply request, Mr. Speaker, in view of what appears in the RECORD, that the gentleman from California would be kind enough, of his own volition, to correct his remarks.

I also, while on the floor, desire to raise another question of privilege—

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the gentleman had better have one disposed of at a time. It will facilitate the business to proceed in that manner.

Mr. TODD. I beg pardon, of course, if I am out of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair only suggests to the gentleman that it would be better to dispose of one question of order at a time.

Mr. TODD. If there is no objection—and I hope there will be no objection—I ask the gentleman from California to make a correction which I think is due to myself.

Mr. PAYNE. I understand the gentleman from California has not heard what has been stated by the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HILBORN. I am here now, and hear what the gentleman says.

Mr. TODD. Then will the gentleman kindly state the fact in connection with our controversy on yesterday?

Mr. PERKINS. I hardly think the gentleman from Michigan should make this point of order, because, if the facts are as stated, the gentleman from California appears to have been simply following the example that was set by the gentleman from Michigan himself. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Why convict the gentleman from California without a hearing? [Laughter.]

Mr. HILBORN. Does the gentleman from Michigan say that I am incorrectly reported?

Mr. TODD. I think so.

Mr. HILBORN. In what respect?

Mr. TODD. I will explain to the gentleman from California—

The SPEAKER. The Chair hopes the gentleman will take the Chair into his confidence also. [Laughter.]

Mr. TODD. I was endeavoring to show to the gentleman from California what I think is an error in the report of his remarks on yesterday.

Mr. HILBORN. In what respect?

Mr. TODD. Simply that the RECORD does not show what I understood to be the question of the gentleman from California as to "what I would do if a private factory of any kind failed or refused to sell their products to the Government."

The question as it appears in the RECORD says, "What will you do if the Government builds its own factory?" And I am made to say, "We will blow those factories to pieces with our cannon."

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands that the report as it appears in the RECORD is the verbatim report of the proceedings of the House.

Mr. TODD. Then, Mr. Speaker, as that does not agree with what the Washington Post of to-day says took place on yesterday, I desire to say in my own behalf that I misunderstood the question of the gentleman from California and answered his inquiry under a misapprehension.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman has already stated that fact.

Mr. TODD. And, Mr. Speaker, there is another question of privilege to which I wish to rise at this time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TODD. On the day before yesterday, when I had asked unanimous consent that the report of the committee upon the proposed monument to Capt. Charles Vernon Gridley should be printed in the RECORD, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHATTUC] objected, and the RECORD makes him say that he objected "because the gentleman from Michigan had put in 20 pages the other day of matter which had not been spoken on the floor of the House and which was subsequently expunged."

Now, I desire to call attention to the fact that all that I added in the case in question there was just one-third of a column, which will be found on pages 948 and 949 of the RECORD; and I presume that the gentleman did not intend to make a false statement regarding me. He probably got the information from the subsidized press that the gentleman doubtless reads; and I should be glad if he is given an opportunity to correct the misstatement. There has never been a time when a page, or a half a page, inserted by me in the RECORD has been stricken out or objected to. The remarks which the House decided should not remain in the RECORD were in opposition to a subsidy which was proposed in one of the pending bills; and the statement of the gentleman that there were 20 pages stricken out is absolutely without foundation. If he is present, I hope he will make the necessary correction himself. I should have called his attention to the error at the time, but there was some confusion in the House and I did not hear his remark.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Ohio does not seem to be present.

Mr. Speaker. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen will please be seated, and the House will be in order.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. HILBORN. Before the gentleman from Iowa proceeds, I would like, myself, to rise to a question of privilege.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HILBORN. I have for the first time, this moment, read in the RECORD the report of my remarks made in the House on yesterday, to which the gentleman from Michigan has referred. The report in the RECORD is absolutely correct. If the gentleman from Michigan misunderstood my remarks, that is his fault and not my own. That is all I desire to say.

Mr. PAYNE. Now, Mr. Speaker, let us have the regular order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 4870. An act for the relief of George W. Weston.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolutions:

Resolved, That it is with deep regret and profound sorrow that the Senate hears the announcement of the death of Hon. JUSTIN SMITH MORRILL, late a Senator from the State of Vermont.

Resolved, That the Senate extends to his family and to the people of the State of Vermont sincere condolence in their bereavement.

Resolved, That, as a mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, the business of the Senate be now suspended to enable his associates to pay fitting tribute to his high character and distinguished services.

Resolved, That the Secretary transmit to the family of the deceased and to the governor of the State of Vermont a copy of these resolutions, with the action of the Senate thereon.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That, as an additional mark of respect, at the conclusion of these exercises the Senate do adjourn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,500 copies of the report entitled "The Colonial Systems of the World," prepared by the Bureau of Statistics, Treasury Department, 5,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, 3,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate, and 2,500 copies for the use of the Bureau of Statistics, Treasury Department.

SENATE BILL AND RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill and resolution of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 4870. An act for the relief of George W. Weston—to the Committee on Claims.

Concurrent resolution No. 59:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed 10,500 copies of the report entitled "The Colonial Systems of the World," prepared by the Bureau of Statistics, Treasury Department, 5,000 copies for the use of members of the House of Representatives, 3,000 copies for the use of members of the Senate, and 2,500 copies for the use of the Bureau of Statistics, Treasury Department—

To the Committee on Printing.

WAR EXPENDITURES.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the joint resolution (H. Res. 358) to amend section 25 of the act passed June 13, 1898, entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes," with a Senate amendment, and move to concur in the Senate amendment.

This is a resolution, I will state to the House, which was passed by this body, providing against double taxation on mortgages, which has been amended by the Senate.

The joint resolution of the House reads that "whenever any bond or note shall be secured by a mortgage," and so on, to which the Senate have added "or deed of trust." I move that the House concur in the Senate amendment; and on that I ask the previous question.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That I think is right. So far as we have had an opportunity to examine the matter, there is no objection to it.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the matter will be laid before the House for its present consideration.

There was no objection; and the amendment of the Senate was considered, and agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order. Under the special order of the House, to-day was set aside for the consideration of business reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Was there a special order for District of Columbia business?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. HULL. I understand that order was not to interfere with appropriation bills. There is an appropriation bill pending, and another one ready to follow.

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Speaker, the regular order is the naval appropriation bill, and I call for the regular order.

Mr. DOCKERY. I suggest to the gentleman that he move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HILBORN. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. BABCOCK. Pending that motion, I ask the gentleman from California to concede to the Committee on the District of Columbia one hour, which will enable the committee to dispose of important matters.

Mr. DOCKERY. Take it after the naval bill is disposed of.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask unanimous consent—

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks for the use of an hour's time for the business of the District of Columbia. Is there objection?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The gentleman from California moves that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. The objection is withdrawn, and an hour is granted to the Committee on the District of Columbia, if there be no further objection.

There was no objection.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS ON SUNDAY IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11773) to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any maker, brewer, or distiller of intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia, or the agent or servant of such maker, brewer, or distiller, or the agent or servant of any maker, brewer, or distiller of intoxicating liquors outside of said District, to sell or deliver any intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia on the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday.

SEC. 2. That any person violating the provisions of this act shall on conviction thereof in the police court on a prosecution in the name of the District of Columbia be punished by a fine of not less than $250 nor more than $500 for each and every offense.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on the District of Columbia, were read:

Line 4, after the word "of," insert the words "beer or other."

Line 6, after the word "of," where it follows "distiller," insert the words "beer or other."

Line 7, after the word "any," insert the words "beer or other."

Line 9, after the word "Sunday," insert the words "unless its sale be for shipment for some point, on that day, outside of the District of Columbia."

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the committee amendments.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman does that—

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Alabama?

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield for a question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have just heard the bill read, and do not know that I fully understand it. Is it the object of this bill to prevent the introduction into the District of Columbia of liquors or beer from other States?

Mr. BABCOCK. No; this bill is for the purpose of prohibiting outside brewers sending beer into the District in kegs on Sunday, which has caused a great deal of disturbance and drunkenness in the city. There is no authority in the Commissioners now to prevent it. This simply prevents the delivery on Sunday.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. But the law already prohibits the sale of liquor at all on Sunday in the District of Columbia.

Mr. BABCOCK. Exactly; but brewers outside of the District deliver it here on Sunday.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The law prevents the sale of it on Sunday, so it does not make any difference what day it is delivered.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, if the Clerk will kindly read the letter from the Commissioners of the District, it will explain the matter fully.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Washington, January 27, 1899.

DEAR SIR: The Commissioners have the honor to recommend favorable action upon House bill 11733 "to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday in the District of Columbia," which was referred to them at your instance for their examination and report, but suggest that it first be modified as follows:

In line 4, after the word "of," insert the words "beer or other;" after the word "of," in line 6, insert the same words; and also after the word "any," in line 7. Line 9, after the word "Sunday," insert "unless its sale be for shipment for some point, on that day, outside of the District of Columbia."

The Commissioners are heartily in favor of this bill and can not urge too strongly its passage. Reports from the police department regarding the disgraceful and outrageous conduct of persons made drunk by the use of beer sold them from some of the breweries in the city renders this a matter of very great importance, and the Commissioners venture to express the hope that the bill, with the few changes which are suggested, may be passed at this session of Congress.

A copy of the bill, amended as recommended, is herewith inclosed.

Very respectfully,

JOHN B. WIGHT,

President Board of Commissioners District of Columbia.

Hon. J. W. BABCOCK,

Chairman Committee on the District of Columbia,

House of Representatives.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, the letter seems to indicate that the relief the Commissioners want is from the brewers of this city. The objection I have to a bill of this kind is not prohibiting the sale of beer on Sunday. I think the Sunday law should be complied with, and not only that the outside brewers should not be allowed to sell beer, but that the brewers in the city should not be allowed to sell. But the objection that I have to this bill is that it is an attempt to regulate interstate commerce. In other words, it is an attempt to regulate the brewers outside of the District as to their commerce in the District. So far as I am concerned, although we may have tariff laws and other regulations as to foreign countries, I expect so long as I occupy a seat on the floor of Congress to bitterly fight any attempt to regulate commerce between the States. We certainly are entitled to have free and unrestricted commerce between the various States of this country. And although this may be a very slight infringement of that doctrine, I say no precedent whatever of that kind should be made by this Congress, and I shall therefore resist the passage of the bill.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to call the attention of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia to the minimum fine imposed in this case, and ask him whether, in his judgment, he does not think that fixing the minimum at $250 will often defeat justice. It has been the experience, it seems to me, of all people who have prosecuted that where you have a large minimum penalty, it is often used for getting the person out of being convicted at all; and it seems to me that where the minimum penalty is $250 and the maximum is $500, it would often work that effect. Now, I think a minimum of $50 and a maximum of $500 would produce better results on those who violate the law.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Speaker, this a very important matter, and we can not hear.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee makes the point that the House is not in order. The House will be in order.

Mr. BABCOCK. I will say to the gentleman from Colorado that I do not see any objection to an amendment of that kind. I think there is great force in what the gentleman said.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I think it has been the experience of those persons who have prosecuted that they can more certainly secure convictions where the penalty is not so high.

Mr. BABCOCK. The point is that those who are likely to violate the law are responsible parties, namely, brewers. That is the reason why the Commissioners suggested that amount to us. But I will accept your amendment.

Mr. SHAFROTH. A larger discretion in the court would produce better results. I move to strike out "two hundred and fifty" and insert "fifty."

Mr. BABCOCK. After the committee amendments have been disposed of.

Mr. SHAFROTH. After the committee amendments.

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to say to the gentleman from Alabama that it is not the intention of the bill at all to interfere with any of the States. This beer that is delivered on Sundays in the District of Columbia is beer sold from the breweries in the District and breweries across the river on Saturday. A great deal of drunkenness and disorder has been occasioned by wagon loads of beer being delivered on Sunday in the city to private parties and not saloons and restaurants.

Mr. BRUCKER. Does not your Sunday law in the District of Columbia to-day prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday?

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRUCKER. Why, then—

Mr. BABCOCK. But this is sold on Saturday and delivered on Sunday.

Mr. BRUCKER. Would not the present law under which liquor can not be sold on Sunday meet cases where the sale was actually made on Saturday and the liquor not delivered until Sunday?

Mr. BABCOCK. The Commissioners say not.

Mr. BRUCKER. Have you experimented any under the law by prosecutions?

Mr. BABCOCK. They have, and they say they are powerless to do it.

Mr. BRUCKER. Have the courts held that your Sunday liquor law would not prevent the delivery on Sunday?

Mr. BABCOCK. The gentleman is well aware that groceries and bottled liquors in cases are delivered to private houses on Sunday and every day of the week, and there is no way in which that can be reached; and it is a matter that has been very sadly abused.

Mr. BRUCKER. I will ask the gentleman the further question, Does your law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday also apply to legal holidays in the District?

Mr. BABCOCK. I believe it does.

Mr. BRUCKER. If that be the fact, and I think it is, why not incorporate the same provision in this bill with reference to legal holidays that you do in reference to Sundays, if your general liquor laws apply to legal holidays now? Why discriminate? Why say that you can not stop—

Mr. BABCOCK. I do not think the law applies to legal holidays. I do not think any saloons were closed yesterday, and yesterday was the 22d of February.

Mr. BRUCKER. Is it the understanding of the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia that saloons are open and are permitted to sell liquor on legal holidays?

Mr. BABCOCK. I did not understand the gentleman.

Mr. BRUCKER. Under the general liquor law applying to the District of Columbia, can saloons sell liquor on legal holidays?

Mr. BABCOCK. I think so.

Mr. BRUCKER. Why do you discriminate in favor of the District of Columbia? Is it not a fact that the large cities prohibit the sale of liquor not only on Sundays, but on legal holidays? Is the committee discriminating in favor of the liquor dealers of the District of Columbia?

Mr. BABCOCK. If the gentleman thinks the law needs amending, we shall be very glad to consider any bill he may introduce.

Mr. BRUCKER. I am not asking these questions with reference to my own peculiar views on the sale of liquor on Sundays or on holidays. I am trying to get at the facts.

Mr. BABCOCK. We are legislating for the District of Columbia only.

Mr. BRUCKER. You are undertaking to provide absolutely against the sale or delivery of liquor on Sunday, but not on legal holidays.

Mr. BABCOCK. The sale on Sundays is already prohibited.

Mr. BRUCKER. Why do you not undertake to prohibit the sale of liquor on legal holidays?

Mr. BABCOCK. We have no authority to go outside of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRUCKER. I am speaking of the District of Columbia.

Mr. BABCOCK. Because it has not been thought to be necessary.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. And it is not in other large cities.

Mr. BRUCKER. What is the opinion of the gentleman, the chairman of the District Committee, on the matter as to the prohibition of the sale of liquor on holidays?

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on this amendment.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Speaker, I have not had a chance to examine into this bill, as this is the first time I have seen it, but it is clear, and I ask the attention of the House, that it invades an important principle. The bill provides that brewers outside of this District shall not be allowed to ship their beer or other liquor into this District on a certain day. It does not prevent in any way the brewers in the District from selling their liquor.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes, it makes the same provision for the brewers in the city as out of the city.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The bill does not read that way.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Those in the District do not have to ship it here, and they are already forbidden to sell it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I guarantee that gentlemen will find that under the law restricting the sale of liquor, the same law that prohibits the delivery of beer on Sunday by a local brewer, by the decisions of the court will limit the delivery by the foreign brewer; but we can not afford to go into these distinctions as to the sales by persons living in one State when you cross the District line.

The next proposition to come before us would be to regulate it when you cross a Territorial or State line. I know what these gentlemen are after. I have no doubt they brought the bill in for a wise purpose—for the purpose of regulating the liquor traffic—but I say this House can not afford at any time or under any circumstances to adopt a principle or make a precedent regulating interstate commerce. We must have the commerce between the various States of the country unrestricted if we want to hold the Union together. The strongest tie that binds the people of the United States together, outside of the question of loyalty to the Union, is the tie of our commercial relations which bind us together.

It is for the interest of the man who lives in New England to sell his goods to the man who lives in the South, and it is for the interest of the man who lives in the South to sell his goods to the man who lives in New England; and the rights of the people in that respect, which are guarded by the Constitution, should be guarded on the floor of this House, and I insist that under these circumstances we should defeat the passage of this bill.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the chairman of the committee a question. Why does this bill limit its provisions to the brewer or the distiller or the agent or servant? Why not say, if you want to prevent the sale of liquor on Sunday, "it shall be unlawful for any person?" From the present language of the bill it would appear that if a person is not any one of those described here, he would commit no crime by selling beer or other liquor on Sunday.

Mr. BABCOCK. The difficulty that this bill seeks to cure is one, and only one; that is, the delivery of beer in kegs to private parties in this city on Sunday—beer which has been sold or contracted for during the previous week by the brewer or the dealer, and which he undertakes to deliver on Sunday. This practice has been the cause of a great deal of drunkenness.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I have no doubt of it; and I am in favor of the purpose of the bill, but why not provide that it shall be unlawful for anybody to sell beer or liquor on Sunday?

Mr. BABCOCK. There is no objection to that.

Several MEMBERS. That is the law now.

Mr. BABCOCK. Yes; the present law makes it unlawful to sell liquor on Sunday.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Yes; but are you quite sure that the passage of this bill may not repeal the existing law on the subject?

Mr. BABCOCK. The draft of this bill comes from the attorney of the District.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I can not help that; I must be allowed to be my own judge in a matter of this kind. As Congress has already legislated on this particular subject and imposed limitations upon the parties against whom this bill is directed, may we not in the passage of this bill repeal by implication the other law? If we simply say that it is unlawful for any person or corporation to do so and so, we accomplish the whole object, and there will be no difficulty.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I suggest that the words "or other person or corporation" might be inserted.

Mr. GROSVENOR. That will be all-right.

Now, I have one other suggestion: Are the committee quite sure that in making the penalty $250 they will strengthen the law? Will that penalty make the law more effective or less effective?

Mr. MANN. I wish to call the attention of the chairman of the District Committee to the last of the committee amendments in the first section. That amendment proposes to insert after the word "Sunday" the words "unless its sale be for shipment for some point on that day outside of the District of Columbia." Under this provision, it appears to me, any person who might come to a brewery on Sunday and say that he wanted to buy beer for the purpose of shipping it outside would be authorized to make such purchase without any penalty on the seller; and then after procuring the beer he could do what he pleased with it.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What amendment would the gentleman suggest?

Mr. COOPER of Wisconsin. That language might be stricken out entirely.

Mr. BABCOCK. The language referred to was intended to cover the point made by the gentleman from Alabama (Mr. UNDERWOOD), so as not to interfere at all with territory outside the District—so that the passage of beer through the District in the regular way on Sunday might not be interfered with.

Mr. MANN. That may have been the purpose, but the effect of the language would seem to be to authorize a brewer in the District to sell and deliver beer on Sunday to anybody who might say that he intended to take it outside of the District.

Mr. RICHARDSON. The law already forbids that.

Mr. MANN. But if we pass a new law on the subject it may, by implication, repeal the present law forbidding the sale of liquor on Sunday.

Mr. RICHARDSON. This was not so intended.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt of that. I am only calling the attention of the committee to a difficulty which will inevitably arise under the language proposed to be used, because under it a brewer in this city could sell a keg of beer to any person who might take a wagon to the brewery and say that he intended to cart it across the river.

Mr. BABCOCK. Would it be satisfactory to the gentleman if we strike out that provision? If there is any doubt about the effect, it can be stricken out.

Mr. MANN. It seems to me it ought to be.

Mr. BABCOCK. Well, Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the committee amendments in lines 4, 6, and 7 of the first section, omitting the amendment just referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. TODD. One question before the vote is taken. I wish to inquire whether the liquors sold on Sunday are different from those sold on the other days of the week. I notice in the report of the committee, which is unanimous, the following language:

The Commissioners are heartily in favor of this bill, and can not urge too strongly its passage. Reports from the police department regarding the disgraceful and outrageous conduct of persons made drunk by the use of beer sold them from some of the breweries in the city renders this a matter of very great importance, and the Commissioners venture to express the hope that the bill, with the few changes which are suggested, may be passed at this session of Congress.

Now, if it is a good thing to stop these "disgraceful" scenes on Sunday, why is it not a good thing to have an orderly day every day in the week?

Mr. BABCOCK. Because this thing is not practiced on week days, but on Sundays only.

The amendment of the committee was agreed to.

Mr. BABCOCK. I withdraw the other amendment, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I desire to offer an amendment, to insert after the word "Columbia," in line 5, the words "or other person or corporation;" and after the word "District," in line 7, insert also the words "and other person or corporation."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I move an amendment to the bill, to strike out the words "two hundred and," in the third line of page 2 of the bill, which would leave the minimum fine $50 instead of $250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed; there being on a division (demanded by Mr. UNDERWOOD)—ayes 71, noes 18.

CITY AND SUBURBAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask consideration of joint resolution No. 189, to promote the relocation of certain tracks of the City and Suburban Railway Company of the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, etc., That the City and Suburban Railway Company of Washington be, and it is hereby authorized and directed to abandon its single track passing around the south side of Stanton Square, and in lieu thereof construct an additional single track on the north side of Stanton Square from the intersection of Fourth and C streets NE. to Sixth and C streets NE.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I desire to offer an amendment at this point, Mr. Speaker.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Insert at the end of line 8:

"That the City and Suburban Railway of Washington be, and it is hereby authorized and required, within six months after the passage of this act, to equip with the same underground system of electrical propulsion as is now being installed on its suburban lines the following portion of its suburban route, to wit:

"Beginning at the intersection of Florida avenue and Eckington place and running thence north through Eckington place to north R street; thence east on north R street to east Third street; thence by single track north on east Third street to north T street; thence, still by single track, west on north T street to east Second street, thence south on east Second street to north R street; thence on north R street to Eckington place, and thence to the beginning."

"Providing, upon completion by said City and Suburban Railway of the underground construction hereinbefore provided for, the obligation of the said City and Suburban Railway imposed by section 3 of the act approved June 27, 1898, in respect of North Capitol street shall cease, and in lieu of that provision said City and Suburban Railway is required, within six months after North Capitol street shall have been graded, to construct and operate a double-track railway on North Capitol street from R street to Michigan avenue; thence on Michigan avenue east, to connect with its present tracks on Bunker Hill road."

"Said railway on North Capitol street north of Florida avenue and on Michigan avenue is to be operated by the overhead-trolley system."

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I had the honor to report this resolution now pending from the District Committee. The amendment just offered by my colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee, I think is satisfactory to the committee, so far as we have been able to examine it. It has been submitted, I understand, to the Commissioners, and meets their approval, as well as that of the citizens living along this route, and I feel that I am authorized to say that there is no objection on the part of the committee.

Mr. HEPBURN. Permit me a moment. I see you provide in this bill for the use of an overhead trolley. I have not had time to examine the question and do not know exactly in what portion of the city the road is located or how far this privilege may extend—

Mr. RICHARDSON. If the gentleman will permit me, I will state the facts. The Eckington road uses the overhead trolley at the present time through the suburban town of Eckington. The act in question requires the company to take down the overhead trolley in Eckington and substitute the underground electric system for the reason that that suburb is well built up. But on North Capitol street, beyond that point, from R street, it permits the use of the overhead trolley, this district being practically outside of the city. It only permits the use of the trolley, therefore, on the unused portion of their lines—the unbuilt-up portion—and requires them to put in underground wires where the city has been built up.

Mr. HEPBURN. You refer now to the use of the overhead trolley north of the boundary line.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Yes. It compels them to build the same system—an underground trolley—in the built-up portions of the city. The city is built up to Eckington, while, as I have said, on North Capitol street there is not a single house.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to ask if there is such a regulation in the bill as that the city can change, when Congress chooses to do so, the system that they are now allowed to use?

Mr. RICHARDSON. It does not expressly say so. But there is no objection to substituting it. I will say to the gentleman, however, that it was in the charter, and it would be simply multiplying the matter to state it again here.

The question being taken on the amendment proposed by Mr. RICHARDSON, it was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MATERIAL AND LABOR UNDER CONTRACT WITH THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the consideration of the bill (S. 4159) relative to the payment of claims for material and labor furnished for District of Columbia buildings.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That hereafter any person or persons entering into a formal contract with the District of Columbia for the construction of any public building, or the prosecution and completion of any public work, or for repairs upon any public building or public work, shall be required before commencing such work to execute the usual penal bond, with good and sufficient sureties, with the additional obligations that such contractor or contractors shall promptly make payments to all persons supplying him or them labor and materials in the prosecution of the work provided for in such contract; and any person or persons making application therefor and furnishing affidavit to the department under the direction of which said work is being or has been prosecuted that labor or materials for the prosecution of such work has been supplied by him or them, and payment for which has not been made, shall be furnished with a certified copy of said contract and bond, upon which said person or persons supplying such labor and materials shall have a right of action, and shall be authorized to bring suit in the name of the District of Columbia or the United States for his or their use and benefit against said contractor and sureties and to prosecute the same to final judgment and execution: Provided, That such action and its prosecution shall not involve the District of Columbia or the United States in any expense: Provided, That in such case the court in which such action is brought is authorized to require proper security for costs in case judgment is for the defendant.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote on the bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. BRUCKER. I should like to ask the gentleman in charge of this bill a question. The only security that this bill furnishes to material men or employees is the additional right to sue on this bond which shall be furnished by the contractor to the District of Columbia. Is that right?

Mr. BABCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. COWHERD] who reported the bill, and who, I am sure, can reply to the gentleman's question.

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman will remember, of course, that parties engaged under contract with the Government for public works have no mechanic's lien. This is a reenactment of the general statutes of the United States, simply making them applicable to work done under contract with the District of Columbia.

Mr. BRUCKER. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri that I never understood, until I heard his statement to that effect, that material men and laborers had no mechanic's lien in the District of Columbia, and I should like to ask him why it is so?

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman has misunderstood me. I say that laborers and material men engaged in public work under contract with the United States have no mechanic's lien. You can not have a mechanic's lien, of course, against a public building.

Mr. BRUCKER. I misunderstood the gentleman. I supposed his statement applied to all laborers and material men in the District.

Mr. COWHERD. Oh, no; but you can not have a mechanic's lien, of course, against a public building. You can not have a mechanic's lien against a schoolhouse built under a contract with the directors of a school district in the States.

Mr. GAINES. Is there not a recent law, passed several years back, that does give a lien in some way? They ought to have it.

Mr. COWHERD. I know of no such law.

Mr. GAINES. I mean works put up by the Government, where private parties erect the buildings?

Mr. COWHERD. No; there is a general statute that any contractor engaged in public work for the United States shall make a bond for the proper completion of the work and for the payment of such claims as the gentleman refers to, and there is a provision that the party aggrieved may sue upon that bond in the name of the United States.

Mr. GAINES. I knew there was some such provision as that.

Mr. COWHERD. And this simply makes that law applicable to parties engaged under contracts with the District of Columbia in the erection of public buildings or the prosecution of public work.

Mr. BRUCKER. In addition to this security which you afford the laboring men and material men would it not be possible, also, to frame a bill or to amend this bill so as to give the department in charge of public works the right to adjust these matters without compelling the laboring man or the material man to go into court to sue upon this bond?

Mr. COWHERD. The gentleman can answer that question as well as I can as to whether it would be possible to frame a bill in that way. It hardly seems to me it would be a very proper thing to make the department a court of justice to settle these claims.

Mr. BRUCKER. If it could be so framed, it would be an additional security for the laboring man and an additional way of collecting his debt.

Mr. COWHERD. Yes; but you would hardly want to put the question of settling disputed claims into the hands of a department.

Mr. BRUCKER. Not finally, but simply place it there for the purpose of allowing the department having control of the work to exert a certain amount of influence over the party employing the laborers and not paying them; compelling the party in that way, by a sort of mild coercion, rather than forcing the employee to sue upon the bond.

Mr. COWHERD. I hardly think we can take that course.

Mr. GAINES. Can the gentleman tell me how far down the line of workmen this lien extends—to the wage earners?

Mr. COWHERD. "Any person or persons." The gentleman will see it applies to all; "to all persons supplying him or them."

Mr. GAINES. "Him; who is he?"

Mr. COWHERD. The contractor or contractors. It provides that the contractors shall give a bond.

Mr. GAINES. And under the law the wage earner is as well secured as the material man.

Mr. COWHERD. The wage earner, the subcontractor, and the material man.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

WASHINGTON AND UNIVERSITY RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill (H. E. 11799) to amend the act of Congress approved July 8, 1898, entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and University Railroad Company of the District of Columbia."

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 of the act of Congress approved July 8, 1898, entitled "An act to incorporate the Washington and University Railroad Company of the District of Columbia," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read and be as follows:

"SEC. 2. That the company is authorized to construct and operate a street railway for carrying passengers along the following-named route: Beginning at or near the intersection of Connecticut avenue extended and Philadelphia street, thence westerly on Philadelphia street to its intersection with Tennallytown road; thence northwesterly along Tennallytown road to its intersection with Trenton street; thence westerly on Trenton street to Forty-fourth street; thence northerly on Forty-fourth street to Vallejo street; thence westerly on Vallejo street to Forty-seventh street; thence northerly on Forty-seventh street to Flint street; thence west on Flint street to Boundary avenue; thence southerly on Boundary avenue to Forty-eighth street; thence southerly on Forty-eighth street to Brandywine street; thence easterly on Brandywine street to Forty-seventh street, as shown upon the plans of the third section of highway extensions: Provided, That where this route lies within the lines of a proposed highway the company shall acquire a right of way not less than 30 feet wide in the center thereof, and all rights of way acquired within the lines of proposed highways shall be dedicated to the use of the public before a permit is issued for the construction of a railroad therein."

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I ask for a vote, Mr. Speaker.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

CELEBRATION OF THE ESTABLISHMENT OF THE SEAT OF GOVERNMENT IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5391) to provide for an appropriate national celebration of the establishment of the seat of government in the District of Columbia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., The President is authorized to appoint a committee from the country at large, of such number as he shall think proper, to act with any committees that may be appointed by the two Houses of Congress, or either of them, and with any committee that may be appointed from the citizens of the District of Columbia, who may prepare plans for an appropriate national celebration, in the year 1900, of the first session of Congress in the District and the establishment of the seat of Government therein. Said committee shall report their proceedings to the President, to be by him communicated to Congress.

SEC. 2. The actual expenses of the members of said committee so appointed by the President shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury on vouchers to be approved by the Secretary of the Interior.

SEC. 3. The sum of $10,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated from any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry into effect the second section of this act.

The report (by Mr. CURTIS of Iowa) is as follows:

The Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 5391) to provide for an appropriate national celebration of the establishment of the seat of government in the District of Columbia, report the same back with the recommendation that it do pass.

The purpose of this bill is to authorize the appointment of committees to prepare plans for an appropriate national celebration, in the year 1900, of the first session of Congress in the District and the establishment of the seat of government therein.

At a public meeting of citizens, held the 24th of October, the chairman was authorized to appoint a committee of nine citizens, who should consider plans for the proper celebration of this centennial and report their recommendations at a meeting to be called for that purpose.

The following memorial was presented by the above-mentioned committee to the President:

"The citizens of the national capital appreciate the fact that the year 1900 will be the centennial of events in the nation's history which, while they are general in character, are directly related to our city and the District of Columbia.

"The one hundredth anniversary of the laying of the corner stone of the Capitol was properly commemorated by our citizens September 18, 1893, but the approaching events to which we refer are of larger importance and demand more general notice.

"In May, 1800, the archives and general offices of the Federal Government were removed to this place. On the 17th of November, 1800, the National Congress met here for the first time and assumed exclusive control of the Federal District and city.

"This may be said to have been the establishment of the city of Washington as the permanent capital of the United States, the legal requirements being fully complied with when Congress met in regular session on the first Monday in December, 1800, in accordance with the act of July 16, 1790, which reads as follows:

"And be it further enacted, That on the first Monday in December, in the year 1800, the seat of government of the United States shall, by virtue of this act, be transferred to the District and place aforesaid."

"It is the opinion of this committee that the national character of this event and the peculiar conditions which do now and doubtless will surround our national history make it desirable to elevate the celebration beyond purely local aspects. It marks the creation and growth of the capital of a great country; it indicates the rapidly opening possibilities of our future. The country has apparently completed one phase of its development. The coming century opens for it a world-wide field which it has not hitherto sought to enter. Within our borders we have a united and prosperous people.

"In order that this subject may be brought to the attention of Congress in a manner suited to the dignity and importance of the occasion, we have the honor to request that you will suggest in your annual message to Congress such legislation as will provide for the appointment of a national committee, consisting of five Senators and five Representatives, to be appointed by the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House, respectively, who shall act with the committee appointed by the citizens of the District of Columbia, and that you be empowered to further increase this committee by the addition of citizens at large.

"It is also suggested that you invite the governors of the several States and Territories to act as members of this committee, which, when finally constituted, shall be authorized to report to Congress a suitable plan for the celebration of the event.

"It might be added that the committee already appointed are unanimously of the opinion that so important an event could well be marked by the erection of a type of architecture which will in itself inspire patriotism and a broader love of country, such as a memorial hall, a bridge connecting the District of Columbia with the sacred ground of Arlington, or some other permanent structure which would commemorate not only the occasion, but also the exceptionally happy condition of our people at this time, when to so marked a degree there is noticed the absence of all sectional feeling, and the prevalence of good will throughout the land."

The following is taken from the recent message of President McKinley, and is incorporated as a part of this report:

"In the year 1900 will occur the centennial anniversary of the founding of the city of Washington for the permanent capital of the Government of the United States, by authority of an act of Congress approved July 16, 1790. In May, 1800, the archives and general offices of the Federal Government were removed to this place. On the 17th of November, 1800, the National Congress met here for the first time and assumed exclusive control of the Federal District and city. This interesting event assumes all the more significance when we recall the circumstances attending the choosing of the site, the naming of the capital in honor of the Father of his Country, and the interest taken by him in the adoption of plans for its future development on a magnificent scale.

"These original plans have been wrought out with a constant progress and a signal success even beyond anything their framers could have foreseen. The people of the country are justly proud of the distinctive beauty and government of the capital, and of the rare instruments of science and education which here find their natural home.

"A movement lately inaugurated by the citizens to have the anniversary celebrated with fitting ceremonies, including perhaps the establishment of a handsome permanent memorial to mark so historical an occasion, and to give it more than local recognition, has met with general favor on the part of the public.

"I recommend to the Congress the granting of an appropriation for this purpose and the appointment of a committee from its respective bodies. It might also be advisable to authorize the President to appoint a committee from the country at large, which, acting with the Congressional and District of Columbia committees, can complete the plans for an appropriate national celebration."

The attached letter from Commissioner Wight explains the desirability of this bill, and is made a part of this report:

OFFICE COMMISSIONERS OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA. Washington, February 3, 1899.

DEAR SIR: In connection with Senate bill No. 5391, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, to provide for a proper national celebration of the establishment of the seat of government in the District of Columbia, I have the honor to submit the following statement:

At a meeting of the citizens of the District of Columbia, held in October last, to consider plans for the celebration of this important event, I was elected chairman of the meeting, and was authorized to appoint a committee of nine to make arrangements for the same. This committee was appointed, and consists of prominent citizens of the District of Columbia who have had large experience in the matter of inaugural ceremonies, etc.

At the first meeting of the committee it was unanimously decided that the celebration should be national in its character, and not purely local, inasmuch as it celebrates the establishment of the national capital.

The committee then waited upon the President of the United States, who favored such a form of celebration, and has so expressed himself in his last annual message to Congress.

This bill provides for the appointment by the President of a committee from the country at large, of such a number as he shall think proper. If he is allowed to do this, the committee will be appointed, consisting probably of the governors of the various States and other prominent citizens, who will confer with the committees appointed by Congress and the citizens' committee of the District of Columbia, and arrange for the proper celebration of the event referred to.

This is a matter, certainly, in which the whole country must take an interest, and it is believed that the formation of such a committee of arrangements will insure the wise and beneficial use that may be made of such a celebration, and add largely to the welfare and growth of the national capital.

I am directed by the committee of which I am chairman to present you these facts, and to say that the committee very earnestly desires the passage of the bill, so that steps may be taken as soon as possible in the direction indicated.

If any further information is desired I shall be very happy to confer with you or to send it to you upon your request.

Very respectfully,

JOHN B. WIGHT,
Chairman.

Hon. GEORGE M. CURTIS,
Acting Chairman District Committee,
House of Representatives.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a vote.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ORDINANCES RELATING TO THE PUBLIC HEALTH.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask present consideration of Senate joint resolution (S. R. 34) authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to alter, amend, or repeal certain health ordinances.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia be, and they are hereby, authorized and empowered, in making regulations under the authority conferred by Congress, to alter, amend, or repeal any of the ordinances of the late board of health of said District which were legalized by joint resolution approved April 24, 1880, whenever in their judgment the public interest requires it.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

MRS. HARRIET A. FERGUSON.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the bill S. 3009.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 3009) for the relief of Mrs. Harriet A. Ferguson.

Be it enacted, etc., That all real estate lying in the District of Columbia heretofore purchased by and conveyed to Harriet A. Maxwell, now Harriet A. Ferguson, of Winchester, Frederick County, Va., prior to the passage of this act, be relieved and exempted from the operation of an act entitled "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens," approved March 3, 1887; and all forfeitures incurred by force of said act are, in respect of such real estate, hereby remitted.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire a moment to call attention to a bill which has just passed the House. I confess my surprise that so able and zealous a committee as the Committee on the District—

Mr. BABCOCK. I want to say to the gentleman that the Committee on the District of Columbia has only ten minutes of its time remaining.

Mr. DOCKERY (continuing). Should have imposed this bill on the House.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order. The gentleman is speaking about a bill already passed.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF THE METROPOLITAN RAILROAD ALONG ELEVENTH STREET SE.

Mr. BABCOCK. I ask present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11059) to provide for the extension of the Metropolitan Railroad along Eleventh street SE.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Metropolitan Railroad Company be, and it is hereby, authorized and required to extend, by double tracks, its underground electric system from its lines as at present constructed at the southwest corner of Lincoln Park at the intersection of North Carolina avenue and Eleventh street SE., south along said Eleventh street SE. to E street SE.; thence, by single track, along said Eleventh street SE. to a point 5 feet north of the tracks of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company; thence east along G street SE. to Twelfth street SE.; thence north on said Twelfth street SE. to E street SE.; thence west on said E to said Eleventh street SE., there to connect with the aforesaid double tracks. The extension hereby authorized shall be completed and cars operated thereon within one year from the passage of this act.

Sec. 2. That on the completion of the aforesaid extension the Metropolitan Railroad Company, the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company, and the Capital Railway Company shall severally issue, and are hereby required severally and respectively to issue, at the intersection of said G street and Eleventh street SE., to their passengers severally applying for the same, free reciprocal transfers, which shall be good for a continuous ride over the entire lines of the company to whom such transfers are respectively directed.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Add immediately after the enacting clause the words "That in case the Capital Railway Company fails to build that portion of its line on Eleventh street SE. in the time required by the act of June 15, 1898."

Page 1, line 3, strike out the word "That."

Page 2, lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "within one year from the passage of this act" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "on or before the 1st day of January, 1900."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment. In line 6, after the word "eight," insert "on or before September 1, 1899."

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out, in line 4, the words "in the time" and insert after the word "eight," in line 6, "on or before September 1, 1899."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Another amendment. Strike out, in line 10, page 2, the words "January, 1900," and insert in lieu thereof "March, 1900."

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 10, page 2, strike out "January" and insert "March."

The amendment was agreed to.

The amendment to the committee amendments was agreed to. The amendments recommended by the committee as amended were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and accordingly it was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURTIS of Iowa, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move to reconsider the action of the House in passing Senate bill 5391.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, there was a motion to reconsider, and that motion was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. DALZELL). The Chair is informed that a motion was made to reconsider and that motion was laid on the table.

Mr. CANNON. I understood from the Journal Clerk that it was not made.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I have consulted with the stenographer who took the notes, and he says that his notes show that a motion to reconsider was made and laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk so reports to the Chair.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I made the motion myself to reconsider, and it was laid on the table.

Mr. DOCKERY. Well, then, I ask unanimous consent that the House reconsider the action whereby the bill was passed.

Mr. RICHARDSON. What is the object?

Mr. DOCKERY. I want to amend the bill because it imposes the whole liability on the Treasury of the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the action of the House in passing the Senate bill be reconsidered.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the time is so limited that we have for these District of Columbia matters that I can not consent.

Mr. BABCOCK. What is the object of this?

Mr. DOCKERY. It imposes all the liability on the National Treasury.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Well, it is a national celebration. I will consider the matter with the gentleman from Missouri later.

Mr. DOCKERY. But the time is nearly up.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. BABCOCK and Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. It only spends $10,000, and you have not got done yet.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I am perfectly willing myself to agree to amend it to make it half and half.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. I am willing to take it up later.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is passed, and you can not take it up.

Mr. RICHARDSON. We can take it up by unanimous consent.

DISTRIBUTION OF COMPILED STATUTES OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. BABCOCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the joint resolution S. R. 231, providing for the further distribution of the compiled statutes of the District of Columbia.

The joint resolution was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to distribute copies of the Compiled Statutes of the District of Columbia now in his charge, as follows: To each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in the Fifty-fifth and Fifty-sixth Congresses not already supplied with the work, one copy; to each of three public, university, or college libraries not depositories of public documents, to be named by each Senator of each State, the Representative of each Congressional district, and the Delegate of each Territory in the Fifty-fifth or Fifty-sixth Congresses, one copy; and to such executive and judicial officers of the Government not already supplied as may require this work in the discharge of their official duties, one copy each: Provided, That the libraries supplied in compliance with the provisions of this resolution shall each be notified as to the Senator, Representative, or Delegate upon whose order the work is furnished.

Mr. DOCKERY. Let us have the report read, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. RICHARDSON), as follows:

The committee have considered Senate joint resolution 231, providing for the further distribution of the Compiled Statutes of the District of Columbia, and direct me to report same with recommendation that it do pass.

The reasons for the passage of said resolution appear in the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Interior addressed to Hon. H. C. LODGE, chairman of Senate Committee on Printing, of date January 24, 1899, herewith submitted as a part of this report.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, January 24, 1899.

SIR: I inclose herewith draft of a joint resolution providing for the further distribution of the Compiled Statutes of the District of Columbia, which I shall be glad to have you introduce in the Senate, to be referred to the Committee on Printing for consideration. In connection with this request the following statement is submitted:

By the provisions of an act of Congress approved March 2, 1895 (28 Stat. L., page 759), 5,000 copies of the Compiled Statutes of the District of Columbia were delivered to the Department of the Interior for distribution to certain departments and officers of the Government and for sale at $3.75 per copy. Subsequently the price was reduced to $2.50 per copy, and a further distribution was made by order of Congress to Senators and Representatives and to depositories of public documents. The entire distribution, however, to date has amounted to only 1,469 copies, leaving 3,531 still undistributed.

At present there is no demand whatever for the work in the way of sale, nor in my judgment is there any probability that more than a few additional copies will find purchasers, so that unless some provision is made for the further gratuitous distribution of the volume those now on hand will remain permanently undistributed. Under these circumstances it is suggested that the distribution proposed in the accompanying joint resolution be made as the best disposition practicable of the work.

Very respectfully,

THOS. RYAN,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. H. C. LODGE,
Chairman of Committee on Printing, United States Senate.

The joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. SHERMAN in the chair, for the further consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. A point of order is pending, and the gentleman from Maine must be recognized.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, the question under consideration is a paragraph in the bill providing for the purchase of armor plate for the new vessels authorized in the pending bill. We have had a great deal of oratory on the subject and very few facts. I propose, in what I may say, to try to throw a little light on the relation of this proposition to the rule and to the interests of the Government, and to be as brief as possible. It is impossible for gentlemen to form a wise judgment without having given some study and attention to the subject, and therefore I deem it advisable to call the attention of the committee to the situation and its requirements as succinctly as possible, in the language addressed to the committee by the authorized professional experts and officers of the Government. There is no use, in my judgment, of going over the history of legislation for the past three or four years and thrashing over the old straw that filled the air with dust and led to confusion of counsel rather than to intelligent judgment and, in my opinion, desirable action.

We are proposing in this bill to authorize the President of the United States to construct three new battle ships and three armored cruisers, for which it will be necessary to supply a certain amount of heavy armor. Prior to the reporting of this bill my attention was called to the situation in regard to armor by the Navy Department. The Secretary of the Navy sent to us a carefully prepared statement from the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, that department of the Government which deals directly with matters of the quality and the purchase of armor plate, and upon whose judgment we are obliged to rely for the defense of the interests of the Government, unless we constitute an expert commission on armor from the gentlemen of the House of Representatives, or elsewhere, who know nothing about the subject.

The Committee on Naval Affairs assumed—and perhaps some gentlemen here would think this an erratic view of the situation—that we could rely more surely and safely upon men who have not only given this matter the study of their lives, but who on their official and personal responsibility are charged with making recommendation wisely and for the interests of the Government in regard to these matters.

We were proceeding at the time this Congress assembled, under a law which limited the Secretary of the Navy in his discretion to the payment of $400 per ton of 2,240 pounds of armor, with a royalty in addition amounting to $11.20, for armor that was then considered the best armor obtainable in the world, namely, the harveyized armor, heavy steel plate treated by a process under the patent of Mr. Harvey, by which the carbonization or hardening of the face of the plate by reason of certain heating in connection with the use of certain chemicals, was carried inward about an inch in depth, the effect of that process being to cause a sheet of armor of considerable less thickness than the former steel and nickel armor to resist an equal amount of assault from the heavy guns that might be brought against it.

Up to a short time ago it was our boast and our satisfaction that we had, under designs and improvements made by American citizens, steel armor so much more effective in the resistance of attack than that manufactured anywhere else in the world that it was adopted and purchased in large quantities by some of the foreign governments. Within a short time, however, the development under constant experiment in this and other countries of the resistance of a plate of steel has culminated, so far as the present situation is concerned, in enabling the Krupp works in Essen, by the use of other materials and by some improved systems of heating and rolling, to produce a plate of armor which, with 25 per cent less of weight and thickness, will resist an equal amount of force from projectiles than that which we now manufacture.

The advantage of this is, of course, obvious to every gentleman who has given even a moment's thought to the subject. The prime factors in placing afloat a heavily armed and heavily armored battle ship are the questions of size and depth, and power of machinery. It will be obvious to everybody that a ship of a given size and given displacement can only be burdened with a certain amount of armor if she is to carry machinery and guns, and therefore given a ship designed to be of a certain size, to carry a certain battery, to carry machinery of a certain weight—to give her a certain speed, it is of the most vital importance that in putting armor on her sides to resist the attack of an enemy armor of minimum thickness should be made to reach the maximum of resistance of attack. Hence, the armor that is the thinnest and therefore of the least weight, which will possess the power of resisting an attack by the shot of the enemy is a prime consideration.

Now we are brought face to face with the proposition of armor-ing these three new battle ships and the three cruisers that we propose to construct; and it is the consensus of the judgment not only of all the experts of our Navy Department, but of the governments of the world to-day, that the armor manufactured under the Krupp process will furnish to a vessel the given amount of protection with a weight about 25 per cent less than any other armor now manufactured.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a question at this point?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the armor he is speaking about—that now made at Essen—weighs 25 per cent less than the armor we have heretofore been using and is equally effective—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is the proposition.

Mr. CANNON. And that for this reason the increase in price from $400 to $550 a ton is asked?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is exactly the fact.

Mr. CANNON. Now, if my friend will allow me one question further. Can that armor be made in this country?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It can be made in this country.

Mr. HILBORN. And is being made.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, if, for the time I occupy the floor, my friends will permit me to answer, even in my imperfect and feeble way, the questions propounded to me, it will facilitate our getting forward; and if any gentleman on the floor, on either side, desires to discuss this matter in any way, I will see to it that he shall have time to do so. But this sort of discussion in which a man has an answer substituted for his own is ineffective, and we have seen already that it has wasted two or three days without very greatly enlightening the people.

Mr. HILBORN. I ask the gentleman's pardon.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am not criticising my friend, but was addressing myself to several gentlemen. Now, if the gentleman from Illinois wishes to ask a further question—

Mr. CANNON. My question was whether the armor referred to could be or was being made in this country?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. In answer to that question, I will state it can be; that our manufacturers are fully prepared to manufacture it; but it involves the purchase from the Krupp people of the right to use their process. A gentleman here yesterday said something about these patents. Well, his remarks only illustrated the facility with which gentlemen discuss matters with which they are not familiar. Of course, Mr. Krupp, or his concern, has any quantity of patents, and some of those the gentleman produced yesterday may possibly be used; but the Krupp process of to-day is based upon what they claim to be the method of handling the steel ingot and of using chemicals in such a way as is known only to themselves and their skilled employees. They hold the right to use this process, and they sell it only to certain parties.

The Russian Government has bought the secret of this process or the right to use it, I am informed to-day.

In this country two, at least, of the great manufacturing concerns which possess the plant, as has been shown in the discussion of this matter, and are able to manufacture this armor, have purchased the right to do so, and have made propositions to the Government. In addition to the purchase price let me say they have also been compelled to pay a royalty to the Krupp people for every ton of armor which is produced by them under this process.

Now, the question before the Navy Department in the consideration of the matter was a very simple one; and I will read shortly a letter from the Bureau of Ordnance, which states the case so clearly and so exactly that it will enlighten the House and enable us, without question, to judge what is best to be done in the premises.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Will the gentleman allow a single interruption?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Under the provision of the bill as we are now considering it, if this armor could be purchased at a lower rate in any other country would the Government be authorized under this provision to do so?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The bill has unquestionably provided for that contingency. There is no doubt about it. We do not bind the Government to purchase the armor from any establishment at all. We leave the whole question open. That is precisely what we want to do. I am only speaking of the Krupp armor, or process of preparing it, as it appeals to us to-day, being, as naval experts think, the best in use at the present time, just as we favored the "harveyized" process a few years ago.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. Then why put a limit upon the price?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It is simply a provision that the Secretary shall obtain armor of the very best possible quality at not exceeding the price named.

Mr. COOPER of Texas. At a certain price.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. At a certain price; but that it shall not exceed the sum of $545 a ton.

Now, this armor having been tested on our testing grounds at Indian Head, down the Potomac River, we do not need to take any foreign statement as to the value of the improvement, because we have the assurance of our own experts that this armor is at least 25 per cent more advantageous to us; that it is stronger armor than that we have been using heretofore, and we are also informed that it will cost $545 a ton. We have therefore put that amount or limitation in the bill instead of $400 a ton; that was the limit put on armor heretofore. Of course we assume that if the Secretary can provide the armor at a cheaper rate he will do so.

Mr. GAINES. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Now, Mr. Chairman, I beg to be allowed to complete a technical statement without interruption. It will be some advance in the proceedings if we can do so. I do not desire to be interrupted in the midst of a mathematical statement of costs and figures.

Mr. GAINES. Of course I do not desire to interrupt the gentleman's remarks unless he is willing and consents—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I beg to be excused. I do not desire it at present.

I say $545 a ton is authorized by the present bill, as against $400 a ton heretofore.

Now, when we are purchasing armor plate, under any circumstances, the contracts are always made. The Government has been paying heretofore $400 a ton for armor plate on the average, and in addition to that $11.20, making $411.20 in all—

Mr. HOPKINS. Will the gentleman allow me just there?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I beg not to be interrupted now.

Mr. HOPKINS. I only want the gentleman to state—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I insist I will not consent to be interrupted. I protest against it.

Mr. HOPKINS. I only want the gentleman to correct a misstatement of facts.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I protest against this interruption. If the gentleman has anything to say he can take his own time for it.

Now, I say that the Government for the harveyized armor paid $400 a ton—

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HANDY. I make the point of order that the gentleman from Maine is not discussing the question before the committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I desire to say that I am presenting the facts on which alone the Chair can rule on the pending question. I am referring solely to the question as to the relation of the proposition in the bill itself to that which is offered in the shape of an amendment—

Mr. STURTEVANT. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. My only object, I will state, is to continue the work on this bill and to secure its enactment. The object, apparently, of the opposition which has been presented is to protract the debate until after the 4th of March, when it is true the gentlemen making the opposition will not have an opportunity to be heard upon it.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Maine may be permitted to occupy the time he chooses, according to his own judgment. And if chooses to present such matters to the House as he is now discussing, that he be allowed to do so.

Mr. HANDY. I object, Mr. Chairman, to anything but to the orderly proceedings of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made; and the gentleman from Maine will proceed in order.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I desire to do so, Mr. Chairman, and will not discuss questions outside of the pending proposition. I will confine myself to the question before the House, believing that the proposition in the bill will meet the approval, substantially, of the entire House.

The armor we are purchasing to-day costs, I have said, $411.20 a ton—

Mr. HANDY. I rise to a question of order. The gentleman is not discussing the question before the committee, which is a point of order against the amendment suggested by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. It is perfectly manifest that the cost of armor plate has nothing to do with the question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine will confine himself to the discussion of the point of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Now, Mr. Chairman, we might as well settle right here what kind of argument is in order in discussing this question. The proposition is made here—

The CHAIRMAN. The question before the Chair is—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I beg to state the case to the Chair as I understand it, before the Chair rules. The pending question is upon obtaining some additional armor for the Government. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has proposed to substitute for the proposition of the committee, to enable the Navy Department to purchase armor, a proposition to build an armor plant in this country, in which the Government itself may manufacture its armor.

The CHAIRMAN. And against that amendment—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. And in order to determine whether that is germane to this bill it is absolutely essential that the Chair shall be informed as to the relations that this proposition to purchase an armor plant bear to this measure. The gentleman undertakes to raise a point of order on the ground—

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman can not discuss the merits of the proposition on the point of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, the question whether—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware [Mr. HANDY] makes the point of order—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I understand the point he makes. I understand the point perfectly. I am addressing myself to it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks, with the gentleman from Delaware, that the discussion of the point of order does not involve the merits of the proposition.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Well, that was learned by some people long before he came here.

Mr. GAINES. But they do not recollect it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine (continuing). And will be remembered, thank God, long after he leaves here.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine will please discuss the point of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, the point of order, if I know anything about it, is whether that proposition to furnish money to build an armor plant is germane to the appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. It is more than that. The gentleman from Maine raised the point of order against the amendment that it was obnoxious to Rule XXI, which is more than the fact whether it is germane. It covers also the point whether it is legislation.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Exactly; and if the Chair please, that point involves the direct question whether it is new legislation. If it is germane and appropriate and regular and a part of the natural legislation that should come into this bill at this point, then it may not be a change of existing law or it may be; but I am trying to lay before the House a basis to enable it to form an opinion, and to enable the Chair to judge as to how far this motion of the gentleman from Alabama is germane to this bill.

In his statement he undertook to invoke some precedents in regard to rulings of former chairmen as to what would be held in order on a naval appropriation bill; and I intend, before I get through, to show the Chair, if I may or can, the entire distinction between the relations of this proposition to the naval appropriation bill and the relations of those other propositions which were held to be germane and admissible and in order. And in order to do that I am obliged to show the distinction between the legislation that we propose, which we hold to be absolutely germane, and which the Chair has held to be germane, and this proposition, which is entirely different and involves different relations with the bill and with the points of order that may be raised in this House. And in doing that I hold, Mr. Chairman, entirely aside from every question of the courtesy and propriety which suggests that after gentlemen on the other side stood here by the hour yesterday taunting this committee, that they have failed to state the facts of this matter to the House—

Mr. HANDY. Mr. Chairman, I raise the point of order that the member from Maine is not in order—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine (continuing). It is in poor taste for gentlemen to get up here and now prevent the giving of facts for which they have been clamoring.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Delaware raises a point of order. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HANDY. My point of order is that no discussion by the gentleman from Maine as to how gentlemen on this side of the Chamber taunted him and his committee yesterday can be in order now in discussing the point of order which is before the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The gentleman from Maine will continue and discuss the point of order.

Mr. HANDY. I ask the Chair to insist that the gentleman from Maine address himself pertinently to the question before the committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I submit the point of order to the Chair, in order to relieve the House from the impertinent motions that have been made to prevent the facts in this matter being considered. I ask the Chair to rule.

The CHAIRMAN. It is so clear to the Chair that this proposed amendment is obnoxious to Rule XXI the Chair thinks it unnecessary to make any statement. Therefore the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. HOPKINS. I have an amendment pending.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, from which he moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. HOPKINS. One moment, if the Chair pleases. The parliamentary situation is this: The gentleman from Maine offered an amendment to the pending bill, and to that amendment I offered an amendment yesterday to strike out—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is not correct in his statement. The gentleman from Illinois has not yet offered an amendment. The gentleman rose for that purpose and was not recognized, and the Chair stated that later on, when other gentlemen who had been recognized had concluded, the Chair would recognize the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOPKINS. I move to strike out the word "five" and insert "four."

The CHAIRMAN. In fact, that amendment has not been offered; but the Chair understood the gentleman from Illinois intended, when he obtained the floor, to offer it.

Mr. HOPKINS. That is satisfactory.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Will the Chair inform me whether the gentleman from Illinois has the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine is recognized for five minutes on a motion to strike out the last word.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Am I entitled to speak without interruption for five minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can not be interrupted without his consent.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Now I will go back to the point I had reached when the gentleman from Delaware so politely interposed to prevent me from answering the question which has been propounded to me by so many gentlemen on that side and to which I supposed they really desired an answer. The harveyized plates which we are now using cost $411.28 a ton. The armor it is proposed to purchase at the price, or at which it is proposed to permit the Secretary of the Navy to purchase if the Department can find no other armor that is better, is to cost not to exceed $545 a ton. That armor is 25 per cent more powerful in resistance, as I have said, than that we are using to-day; and, therefore, if we shall only put upon the battle ships that are authorized armor covering the same superficial area as on the ships that were authorized last year, it will involve the purchase of 25 per cent less armor in tons than by using the armor we are using to-day.

I trust that is easily perceptible to every member, that if it be true, as the Ordnance Bureau states, that experimentation has shown that armor 25 per cent more powerful in resistance than that which we are using to-day can be put upon the ships under this process, therefore the amount that we will have to purchase in tons will be so much less; and subtracting that from the $545 would leave the result that the armor to cover the same superficial area that would be covered under the old designs under the harveyized process would cost really $409 a ton, as against $411 a ton with the present armor.

Now, I do not want the House to think I am juggling with figures. I will say to you frankly that we do not intend to make that reduction in the cost for these ships. Why? Because instead of using that amount of armor on these vessels and stopping there, it is proposed, in view of the fact that the armor to cover the same amount of surface weighs so much less, to cover other portions of the ship with armor and to extend the defended surface of the vessels to a considerable degree, bringing the cost for armor for the entire ship up to about the same that we would pay under our contracts to-day. The ships that have this new armor on, and over which they extend the area of armoring to cover places that are undefended now in some of our battle ships, will make them very much more powerful ships and very much more invulnerable ships than those we are building to-day.

Now, we know of no other way but this to get this armor except we build an armor plant; and that question has been discussed here to exhaustion, and the committees of the House and the Senate have rejected it on many grounds. We have to-day communications from the bureaus of the Navy Department very properly putting this upon Congress. They are authorized to-day to go ahead and contract for and purchase armor for these new ships at the rate of $400 a ton, which will restrict them in the purchase of armor to the harveyized process, which is admitted to be 25 per cent less valuable and powerful than that which is proposed, and 25 per cent less powerful than that which every other nation that is making contracts to-day is insisting upon putting upon their ships. As my friend from California stated yesterday in his citation, every civilized government in the world that is constructing battle ships or armored cruisers to-day intended to carry heavy armor are unwilling to use anything else than the best and most powerful.

And it is inconceivable that the people of the United States will contemplate for a moment or that this House will for a moment entertain any idea that involves the use on our battle ships of armor that will make them 25 per cent less powerful to resist an attack than those of ships built abroad.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Maine has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask for five minutes more.

Mr. GAINES. I object to that unless the gentleman from Maine will permit interruptions that call for facts which we are entitled to have and which as chairman he should give voluntarily.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that I may be permitted to read the statement forwarded to the Naval Committee of this House by the Secretary of the Navy, inclosing this statement from the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, addressed to the American Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. GAINES. I object.

Mr. HANDY. I hope there will be no objection.

Mr. GAINES. I object.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like—

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be recognized in opposition to the motion to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maine? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I objected.

Mr. SHATTUC. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GAINES] did not object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee says he did object, and the Chair accepts his statement.

Mr. SHATTUC. I do not think the gentleman from Tennessee was on his feet.

Mr. GAINES. I objected, Mr. Chairman, when I was on my feet and when I was in my chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair accepts the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate be closed—

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine has not the floor; his time has expired.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the amendment of the gentleman from Maine by striking out the word "five" and inserting the word "four," so that the amount allowed for armor plate will be limited to $445 per ton.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois withdraw his formal amendment?

Mr. HOPKINS. Yes. The reason for making the amendment is this: The House on a previous occasion, on a full and fair discussion of armor plate, limited the amount to be paid to the manufacturers for armor plate to $400 per ton. The gentleman in charge of this bill stated to the committee on yesterday that the royalty to be paid for the secret process will be $45 per ton.

There is no evidence before this committee, and I have searched the records of the Naval Committee in vain to find any, showing that the new process for the construction of armor plate is any more expensive to the manufacturers than the harveyized plate, that is now manufactured for $400 a ton; so that if we allow them $45 a ton royalty, that is contended for by the gentleman from Maine, we shall be giving them as much as they are receiving under the present contract, and all the world admits that that is sufficient.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Maine in charge of this bill has stated among other reasons why it should be $545 a ton, that experiments have been tried showing that this new armor plate has a greater resisting power than the harveyized plate. Where is the evidence, other than the statement of the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. In the document which the House has refused to have read.

Mr. HOPKINS. I do not want to be interrupted and I do not want these interruptions taken out of my time. This is nothing but a letter from a subordinate in the Navy Department, without any independent examination on the part of the Naval Committee.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is not so.

Mr. HOPKINS. I trust the gentleman from Maine will not interrupt me and take up my time. I repeat, that the Naval Committee have made no independent investigation upon this, and have brought no independent evidence to this House showing that there should be any change in the resolution that was made that $400 a ton is a sufficient amount. I deny that a letter from a subordinate in the Navy Department is sufficient to change a deliberate judgment of this House upon so important a question.

We know as practical business men that improvement in armor plate is going on precisely as it does in the manufacture of railroad iron of all kinds, and that the cost of production has decreased in value as rapidly as it has in other branches of the great iron industry in this country. I hazard nothing in making the statement that this armor plate that is proposed by the gentleman from Maine can be manufactured by either of the great concerns in Pennsylvania to-day as cheaply as could the armor plate be manufactured under the harveyized system at the time that they made the contract to furnish it to the Government at $400 a ton. He says that experiments have been made showing the resisting power is much larger or greater than plate under the other process. We want more than the unsupported statement of the gentleman from Maine upon this matter.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Thank you.

Mr. HOPKINS (continuing). And more than the unsupported statement of a subordinate of the Navy Department. We want the test brought here in some tangible form; we want it shown to us that it was a test which was fair, thorough, and legitimate—a test that can be relied upon. I have heard it intimated that this test was made not for the purpose of bringing out the resisting power of this new armor plate so much as to enable these concerns over here in the State of Pennsylvania to make a more advantageous contract with the United States Government.

I insist, Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as we have now had discussion running over a period of four years on this question, and have taken a mass of evidence here showing the character of the armor plate that has been manufactured by those great manufacturing plants, if we are to change the deliberate judgment of this House, it should be upon original investigation made by this Naval Committee, and the evidence should be printed and placed in the hands of every member of this House.

I am as anxious as the gentleman from Maine to procure the best quality of armor plate under the most favorable conditions, but I am not willing to take the statement of these gentlemen when members of the Naval Committee of the Senate tell me there is no warrant in fact for the change that is proposed by the gentleman from Maine. I am not prepared to change my vote, that has been recorded in this House on three different occasions when this bill has been up, on his statement, when gentlemen of as large experience, of as much patriotism, and as much knowledge on this subject tell me that the Government of the United States is being imposed upon by this proposition that is inserted in this naval bill.

Mr. DALZELL. Will the gentleman give us the names of his informants—those who say the Government is being imposed upon?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. No; he will not.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RIXEY obtained the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am aware of that. I am addressing the gentleman from Virginia and asking him to yield to me to reply to the statements that have been made here—

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Virginia yield?

Mr. RIXEY. I will if I can be recognized—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have not the slightest doubt that he will do so. The gentleman from Virginia is a gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Virginia. Does he yield to the gentleman from Maine?

Mr. RIXEY. I am willing to yield to the gentleman from Maine if I understand the Chair will recognize me after the gentleman from Maine—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will do so, provided the gentleman from Maine does not occupy the whole five minutes.

Mr. RIXEY. I would like to ask this question—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Is not my friend willing to yield me five minutes now, when he can immediately follow?

Mr. RIXEY. I merely wish to understand this matter. I am perfectly willing to yield the five minutes to the gentleman from Maine, provided I can be subsequently recognized by the Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. At some subsequent period, but not immediately.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Does my friend from Virginia desire to go on and answer for me?

Mr. RIXEY. I do not desire to go on and answer for the gentleman.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I want to speak on the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Virginia has the floor, and the Chair is endeavoring to ascertain whether he desires to yield to the gentleman from Maine.

[Mr. RIXEY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RIXEY. I ask, Mr. Chairman, five minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I must object. We want to get on with the bill. I think, as chairman of the committee, I should have the right to speak for the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. Objection is made.

[Mr. KIRKPATRICK addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection.

Mr. HILBORN. Mr. Chairman, I desire to occupy a few moments of the time of the committee to answer a question that was propounded by the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. GREENE] to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KIRKPATRICK]. It was this: What evidence have we that the armor plate made by the Krupp process costs more than that made by the Harvey process? Now, in the first place, the Krupp armor is a different metallic compound; it contains all of the ingredients of the Harvey armor; that is, the steel treated by the open-hearth furnaces, the 3 per cent of nickel, and then there is another metal, probably chromium. But the compound is a very much superior compound to that of the Harvey-plate compound. Then, it takes longer to make a plate. The process extends over a longer time, a very much longer period. When these processes are all through with, the product is 25 per cent lighter than the plate made by the Harvey process.

Now, it takes a longer time to make the carbon penetrate 4 or 6 inches into a plate than it does to penetrate a half an inch, and that is the difference between the two processes.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. HILBORN. Certainly.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Now, this is the first information that we have had directly on that question. Is there any evidence before the committee that $545 is probably the best bargain, the cheapest price at which this armor plate can be purchased.

Mr. HILBORN. The fact of it is that we are in the hands of the armor-plate makers.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Have you no testimony from the armor-plate makers themselves that $545 is the best price at which we can purchase it?

Mr. HILBORN. We are informed by Commodore O'Neil, the Chief of the Bureau of Ordnance, that $545 a ton is the best price that these armor-plate makers will give.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. I think every member of the House is in favor of building the best ships and protecting them with the best armor that can be procured.

Mr. HILBORN. Certainly, I hope so.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. We have got to have that armor, and now the only question is to get it at the best price possible. If $545 is the best price at which it can be obtained—

Mr. HILBORN. Let me say this in answer to that suggestion: In the first place, the price of this Krupp armor is fixed now all over the world. All the nations of the earth are sheathing their vessels with the Krupp armor, and so far as we can find out, either in Europe or the United States, they are charging about $545 a ton.

Mr. DAYTON. England is paying $645 a ton.

Mr. HILBORN. Yes; England is paying a little more.

Mr. GAINES. The gentleman from California undertook a few moments ago to give us that Krupp process in detail.

Mr. HILBORN. It is a secret process. I was simply stating what I understood about it.

Mr. GAINES. That is the point I wanted to get at. This being a secret process, how are you informed about it?

Mr. HILBORN. Well, I know they are making this armor of steel; I know that they are making it of steel which has been treated in the open-hearth furnace, because I have been in their establishments and have seen it run off.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. What, if any, evidence had the committee before it that England or other countries are paying $565 a ton for this armor?

Mr. HILBORN. The Navy Department has taken pains to get that information and reports it to our committee.

Mr. GAINES. Where is that testimony?

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Let me ask the gentleman one further question. I am not going to be captious; I simply want to get at the facts. Why is it that all this evidence that the committee has taken was not submitted to this House in their report, so that members could see it?

Mr. HILBORN. Our chairman can answer that. He tried to get it in here this morning, but was shut out.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. Why was it not printed with the report accompanying this bill, so that the House could be in possession of the facts?

Mr. HILBORN. The chairman of the committee will answer that question.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. He has not answered it, and it has been propounded to him.

Mr. GAINES. Now, the gentleman has stated, and it is officially stated here in the document which I hold in my hand—the report of the Committee on Naval Affairs, printed in 1898—that this Krupp process is a trade secret.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. GAINES. I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from California be extended for five minutes. He can give us a great deal of valuable information, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to extending the gentleman's time five minutes? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GAINES. Now, will the gentleman tell us how he knows what this process is?

Mr. HILBORN. I do not know it. I have simply been telling those things which I have seen myself.

Mr. GAINES. How do you know that the Krupp process is better than the Harvey process?

Mr. HILBORN. The evidence of that fact is that all the nations of the earth are abandoning the Harvey process and using the Krupp process. And another fact is that these armor-plate manufacturers in the United States have made specimen plates which have been turned over to naval experts and subjected, at Indian Head, to the severest tests; and these experts report that the plates manufactured by the Krupp process are at least 25 per cent better than those made by the Harvey process.

Mr. GAINES. In what respect are they better?

Mr. HILBORN. The ballistic resistance is greater, and the Krupp process makes a tougher plate—less liable to crack. There can be no doubt about the superiority of this plate.

Mr. GAINES. The gentleman said a few moments ago that Captain O'Neil had said that the Krupp process was better than the Harvey process.

Mr. HILBORN. Oh, yes; and he recommends it.

Mr. GAINES. Now, I wish to read his opinion from this same official document—

Mr. HILBORN. That is his opinion as expressed a year ago.

Mr. GAINES. Just a year ago.

Mr. HILBORN. The fact is that Captain O'Neil has been slow to recognize the superiority of the Krupp process; but in his last letter to the Committee on Naval Affairs of the House he said he was wrong in what he before said.

Mr. GAINES. Do you report that to the House?

Mr. HILBORN. The chairman of our committee will in a few minutes read a letter from Captain O'Neil to that effect.

Mr. GAINES. On page 56 of this report of the hearing before the committee I read this:

The CHAIRMAN. Have you any doubt that the armor we have been putting upon ships of our own for the last three or four years is fully equal to that which the European governments are putting on their ships?

Captain O'NEIL. If I am not mistaken it is not only equal to, but it is safe to say that it is better.

That is, Mr. Chairman, better than any process—better than Krupp's.

Mr. HILBORN. There is no doubt—

Mr. GAINES (interrupting). If you will allow me now, a little further, I want to read a little more from this testimony. The chairman further asks Captain O'Neil:

There is no doubt about that?

Captain O'NEIL. None, in my mind. The method we have for testing armor is better than theirs.

Captain O'Neil says the same thing at page 16 of this report. He refers there to the tests in European governments; and on another page of this report (page 11) the Secretary of the Navy corroborates Captain O'Neil.

We are informed, also, that the difference between the two kinds of plates—harveyized and Krupp's—was not of sufficient value to justify us in waiting to get the new process. This is on pages 8, 14, and 18, and throughout this report.

Mr. HILBORN. Well, the gentleman will find that he has changed his mind since that time.

Mr. GAINES. We have no evidence of that fact.

Mr. HILBORN. The experience of the last few months and the tests made have shown the value of the new process. If we are to go on building up our battle ships we want the latest improvements, of course. We do not want to go back to the old and obsolete processes.

Mr. GAINES. Nobody wants that. We are only trying now to get at the evidence as to which is the very best. But I want to call the attention of the committee, if I can have a moment, to page 13 of this testimony—

Mr. HILBORN. I would like very much, Mr. Chairman, to be permitted to proceed with my own remarks.

Mr. GAINES. Of course the gentleman wants to get at the facts. The committee wants to be set right in this matter—

Mr. HILBORN. Undoubtedly. Let the gentleman go on.

Mr. GAINES. On page 13 I find that some tests were made of these different armor plates.

Mr. HILBORN. Where?

Mr. GAINES. These, I think, were English tests made in 1895. You will find the record of the tests on page 13 of this report. The figures are given in connection with the tests then made, and are in favor of the plates made by the Vickers & Co. process.

Mr. LANDIS. And Captain O'Neil, who gives that testimony, takes it all back and admits that he was mistaken.

Mr. GAINES (continuing). Where is the proof of this change? Why is it not submitted with the report, so we can read it? The test was in substance this: The Krupp plate was not penetrated, but did "crack" and bulge out 3 inches in the back. The Vickers plate was penetrated 2½ inches and did not crack. Captain O'Neil says the Vickers "plate successfully withstood the attack without cracking and made a record about equal to the Krupp plate. By calculation it should have been perforated by a velocity of 1,814 foot-seconds, whereas it was not with a velocity of 51 foot-seconds greater." This is on page 13.

Mr. FISCHER. It is impossible, Mr. Chairman, to hear what is going on. If the gentleman from California has the floor, we can not hear him.

Mr. HILBORN. I will make myself heard when the gentleman from Tennessee gets through.

Mr. GAINES. There are many other items given in the report and hearings regarding this armor plate which I will not have time to read in the short time at my disposal, but I commend them to the attention of the committee.

Mr. HILBORN. The particular point that the gentleman has been making was relevant a year ago—

Mr. GAINES. And the Krupp process itself seems to be an old one.

Now, for the benefit of the committee, it seems to me that the experiments which have been made in this direction should be submitted or stated fully, so that we may realize their value, if they have any.

Mr. HILBORN. If the gentleman will permit me, I think I can settle the matter in a word. The armor made by the Krupp process was experimental solely until quite recently. Since the experiments referred to by Commodore O'Neil a year ago were made the armor has been perfected, and it has been adopted by all of the nations of the earth which have been building first-class vessels for their navies.

The armor that we have been using has been found undesirable, and has been abandoned by most of the nations of the world. The new process which has been recently developed is adopted by all of the foremost nations of the earth. This process now in contention here has been adopted by all of the other nations of the world.

Mr. GAINES. But at the time the gentleman refers to it seems that only one nation—Denmark—had agreed to use it, as this report says.

Mr. HILBORN. I think that is true; but tests were being made by other nations, and the best authority in the world on the subject has given testimony in favor of the new process.

Mr. GAINES. Did I understand the gentleman from California to state a few moments ago that some one had purchased the rights of this process? Why can not the Government purchase it and manufacture for ourselves?

Mr. HILBORN. I do not see why we could not do so, unless the right has been sold. If it has been sold, of course the parties who own the process now would be entitled to the exclusive right under our law.

Mr. GAINES. But can we not condemn the right and take possession of it?

Mr. HILBORN. Oh, I suppose we could. But that is not the question now presented. The armor-plate manufacturers do not want the change to be made, of course. They have their plants and appliances already made for the construction of armor under the old plan. Naturally, they do not want to tear down the old plants and construct new ones.

It is claimed, and the experts so testify, that the new armor will be 25 per cent lighter than the old. This is a very important provision. In other words, we have less weight with equal resisting properties—

Mr. GAINES. Who owns the process at present?

Mr. HILBORN. I understand that it is owned by the Carnegie Company, of Pittsburg, and the Bethlehem Iron Company.

Mr. TODD. I should like to ask the gentleman if he still insists that this is a secret instead of a patent?

Mr. HILBORN. I do insist that it is a secret.

Mr. TODD. Does not the gentleman know that I produced to him yesterday all these patents?

Mr. HILBORN. There may have been some patent, but you can not make this armor plate with that patent.

Mr. TODD. Certainly you can make it with that patent.

Mr. BURKE. If the gentleman will allow me, I was struck by a remark which the gentleman made a moment ago, in which he asserted—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. GREENE of Nebraska. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended ten minutes. He has been interrupted a great deal.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

Several MEMBERS. Ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will please be in order before the gentleman proceeds.

Mr. BURKE. I was struck by the suggestion of the gentleman from California a moment ago, when he stated to the House that the truth was that the Government was entirely at the mercy of these armor-plate corporations. I should like to ask the gentleman from California if he does not think this is a most humiliating confession to make in the presence of this House and the Congress of the United States, that this great Government to-day is absolutely powerless to help itself against corporations created by this Government—that the creature is greater than the creator?

Mr. GAINES. And in a war fixture at that.

Mr. BURKE. It is a humiliating statement and a humiliating condition.

Mr. DAYTON. Is not that true in the case of every patented article which the Government finds it necessary to use?

Mr. TODD. I should like to ask the gentleman who is responsible for that condition?

Mr. DAYTON. Is not the same thing true in regard to other patents on armor plate?

Mr. HILBORN. Yes.

Mr. TODD. They are all in one universal armor-plate trust.

Mr. RIDGELY. I should like to ask the gentleman if the committee have investigated so as to have something like an accurate judgment as to the actual cost of producing this plate?

Mr. HILBORN. We can not figure it out mathematically. It is a secret process, and we can not figure out the price that it costs to make a ton of armor plate. We never could find out what it cost to make a ton of harveyized armor plate. All that I said was that a ton of this armor plate must cost more than a ton of harveyized armor, because it contains all the metallic ingredients of the old armor with at least one metal added, and goes through all of the processes used in the manufacture of the old armor, and these processes extend over a great deal longer time. It takes longer to make this new armor than it did to make the old; and when the product is turned out, there is a less number of tons of armor to sell to the Government.

Mr. LOW. It takes a longer time under this process to do the same work.

Mr. HILBORN. Yes.

Mr. RIDGELY. I believe we had information before Congress at one time—sworn testimony, if my memory serves me right—that the old armor plate which we have been using cost less than $200 a ton to make it.

Mr. TODD. If the gentleman will allow me, here is the evidence right here in a Senate report, showing that it is $210 a ton.

Mr. HILBORN. They did not take into account the three or four million dollars that the company had invested.

Mr. TODD. It added $30 a ton for maintenance of plant and interest. The actual cost is $180, and that adds $30 for maintenance of plants and interest, making the total cost $210. Then the Secretary of the Navy, in his generosity, adds 33½ per cent profit, making $280 a ton.

Mr. HILBORN. I do not understand what that has to do with this contention.

Mr. TODD. This is in Senate Document 1453 of the Fifty-fourth Congress.

Mr. HILBORN. That related to another kind of armor plate.

Mr. TODD. Harveyized armor plate, the best we have in the Navy to-day.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the gentleman—

Mr. RIDGELY. Will the gentleman allow me to finish my question?

Mr. GAINES. I beg pardon. I supposed the gentleman had concluded.

Mr. RIDGELY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit me to ask this question, which I think the Committee on Naval Affairs ought to be able to answer? My question is whether, in their judgment, from the investigation they have made, it would be better for us to continue to purchase this armor by contract at $545 a ton, when the statement has been made that forty-five or fifty dollars per ton is the royalty paid for the use of this new process? Would it not be cheaper for the Government to construct its own plant and make its own armor, in view of the fact that we contemplate using such a large amount?

Mr. HILBORN. History repeats itself. It is only a couple of years since I heard that same question asked here, and we took steps to have an investigation made to see what it would cost the Government to build an armor plant. The Secretary of the Navy had made an estimate that it would cost about a million and a half dollars to duplicate any of these vast armor-plate establishments, and we authorized the Secretary of the Navy to investigate the matter, and he appointed a board of naval officers to look into it, and they reported that it would cost $3,700,000.

Mr. GAINES. That was with full equipments.

Mr. HILBORN. And then it is evident that an establishment like that should be in connection with a large steel establishment, and with the few months in the year that the United States would want to run this establishment it hardly seemed to them proper that the United States should go into the manufacture of armor plate and to put three or four million dollars into it and allow it to lie idle for a large part of the year.

Mr. RIDGELY. I understand—

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Was not the factory that the Government proposed to build a 6,000-ton factory?

Mr. HILBORN. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And with the ships in sight would not it have work for over one year or two years, so that it would not have to lie idle if the armor was manufactured at the Government armory plant?

Mr. HILBORN. Our armor-plate factories have been running about eight years, and their experience is that they have been run but a few months in a year. Right now there may be a glut of work, so that for a year or two they may be occupied all the time; but this factory the gentleman suggests could not get to work turning out armor plate for two years.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. You do not want armor for two years.

Mr. HILBORN. Oh, yes, you do. You have seven vessels—three battle ships and four coast-defense vessels—contracted for, and you have not provided for their armor yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has again expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, the gentlemen who are insisting upon the provision in this bill now under debate sometimes vacillate in their opinion as to the number of ships that are to be built, as to the character of ships that we are to build, but they never vacillate in their expressed opinion that the Government of the United States should be annually held up by the manufacturers of armor plate and be compelled to pay a most extravagant price for that commodity. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

They always tell us when a discussion is indulged in that this is one of those profound questions so momentous in its nature that nobody can have any knowledge about it except those gentlemen who are within the secrets of the Committee on Naval Affairs. No other opinion is of value, and anyone who assails the declarations that they express necessarily does so without knowledge. I have no doubt, Mr. Chairman, that every ton of armor bought from the two companies that make armor in the United States has paid to them hundreds of dollars over and above a legitimate profit. I would not make a statement of that kind if I did not have some warrant for it.

This is not a new question. There are those outside of the Committee on Naval Affairs who have investigated it. The attention of the Secretary of the Navy years ago was called to it, especially by the astounding fact that these companies were selling to a foreign government the same kind of armor they were selling to the United States at less than half the price that they were demanding from the United States. [Applause on the Democratic side.] He then instituted a careful inquiry. He appointed three commissions or boards to investigate, and one of them, the Rohrer board, in its report stated that the total cost, giving all the elements of cost, seven in number, was $167.30—

Mr. HOPKINS. Per ton?

Mr. HEPBURN (continuing). Per ton; and we were at that time paying $550 a ton. These gentlemen went further, because the committee has always been unwilling, always have resisted every effort that has been made for the Government to get from under the power and domination and rapacity of these companies; and when it has been proposed to make armor plate for itself, all of these gentlemen have urged that the expenditure would be so vast, the doubts would be so great, that losses would be most probable. But on investigating that branch of the question—

Mr. GRAHAM and Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine rose.

Mr. GRAHAM. I wish to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. HEPBURN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GRAHAM. Just a moment. Is the gentleman aware of the fact that while that firm sent a small amount of plate into Europe at a less price—

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not care whether it was a large or a small amount; but I know it was at a price less than half what they were demanding from their own Government.

Mr. GRAHAM (continuing). As a consequence they have received more orders at $545 a ton?

Mr. HEPBURN. That may be true; but I do not know what influences were brought upon the purchaser there, nor do I care.

Mr. Chairman, the question of the cost of a plant was investigated, and I have here the report of the Secretary of the Navy, after careful investigation, and he tells us "that the English estimate we have seen, as amended by Captain Sampson, amounts to $1,590,000, which would pay the duties and freight and erect here a plant equal to those in question." With that in view, with that knowledge of cost, a few years ago Congress refused to pay more than $300 a ton. There was extensive debate. I remember the honorable chairman of the committee then, as I remember his performances now—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Thank you.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired.

Mr. HEPBURN. I ask for five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. I remember it very well, not because they were to be commended, but because they were unique. [Laughter.] I remember when the House refused to follow him, when it insisted that it would not pay by nearly one-half the extravagant price that was fixed in the bill. The gentleman at first abandoned his bill, threw his papers on his desk, and left the body of the House, but was afterwards by a guardian angel brought back to a sense of duty. [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I believe that it is wrong for us to submit to this exaction, but we have got beyond the old point, we have determined that we can have the harveyized steel for $400 a ton. Now, it has been discovered, the gentleman tells us, that there is something infinitely superior to that, something with a ballistic resistance vastly superior to the harveyized steel, but they do not know what it is. There is a mystery surrounding it. One gentleman tells us that the processes are protected by patents, and another gentleman tells us that the processes are secret. I have thought there was some incongruity between these two statements. I supposed that if a man secured advantages under the patent laws of the United States he had to develop his process, but it seems not to be necessary in this case. At one moment it is a patent and the next moment it is a secret, but all the time it is against the interests of the United States to the tune of $145 a ton. [Laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I believe in the plan of the gentleman from Alabama. I believe it ought to be adopted. I believe that the United States should get from under the control and dominion of these men, who hold it up annually in this matter. [Applause.] Here is a proposition to pay them nearly one million and a half dollars upon the amount supposed to be necessary during the next fiscal year above the present price of $400 per ton. A million and five hundred thousand dollars over and above the sum that they are receiving now, which is believed by many people to be full a million and a half dollars in excess of the sum they ought to receive or that the Government could produce it for.

I think a million and a half dollars would be well expended in this plant. Interest is not so excessive, $60,000 a year. I believe that ought to be undertaken; and then if we can not purchase, if we can not purchase at a reasonable price, we then ought to make it ourselves. But the assertion of our independence and provision in the statute authorizing the Government of the United States to make this armor plate, although I would deprecate the Government becoming a rival in the business, will let the gentlemen who now have a monopoly see that they must be animated in their contracts and dealings with the Government by a fairness that will commend itself to the public sense as right.

One hundred and sixty-seven dollars was the Rohrer estimate of the cost of armor plate properly harveyized four or five years ago. I have no doubt but that any gentleman who will look over the elements of cost, as reported in that estimate, will come to the conclusion that in all of the estimates there was something of exaggeration. For instance, materials in ingots, $30.18 a ton. Why, Mr. Chairman, they have been selling steel rails, made from the same class of ingots, out of the same material, in the United States, since then, costing something in dollars above the raw material, at $17 a ton. I have no doubt but that the ingots to-day could be bought for one-half the sum called for in this estimate. But here is the whole list: "Materials consumed in the manufacture, labor, keeping plant ready for use, shipping expenses, office expenses, contingencies, administration, superintendence, engineering," and everything save the interest on the plant.

Now, this bill proposes to purchase 10,000 tons, and it is probable that for many years this country will consume 10,000 tons of armor plate. Is it not wisdom for us to expend a million and a half dollars or to authorize its expenditure in order to relieve ourselves from the burdens that are to be placed on the country? Is it not better that we should at least put the Navy Department into a position where it may relieve itself if it is found to be necessary? In my judgment whenever the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, whenever it is known that he has the power himself to become a manufacturer, then these corporations will no longer be insisting upon exorbitant prices, but that reasonable prices may then be had. [Applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman—

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this amendment is exhausted, and the gentleman from Maine moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is precisely what I was about to do, Mr. Chairman. [Laughter.] Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Naval Affairs, I have no doubt, collectively and individually, feel that they are perfectly able to stand the kind of criticism that has been indulged in here to-day by several gentlemen, including the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN]. If we could have had any valuable information brought to us by that gentleman on this subject, we should have been very glad.

Now, our withers are entirely unwrung by all this fulmination. A speech just concluded, in which almost every sentence closed with imputing some part of dereliction to the Committee on Naval Affairs, has been fired off entirely at the reporting to this body of the best information which the Government of the United States has been able to obtain upon a very important subject. There is no recommendation in regard to this armor purchase that is anything else than a recommendation of the executive administration of the United States—the result of the most careful scrutiny of the situation, and (the gentleman from Iowa to the contrary notwithstanding) of a patriotic desire to promote the interests of this Government. Any gentleman who occupies this floor to undertake to cast aspersions either upon the integrity or the patriotism of the men who have handled our Ordnance Department for the last twenty-five years will find himself engaged in a very profitless undertaking.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. HEPBURN. I was about to ask the gentleman from Maine to state upon the authority of what officer of the United States, after the making of experiments, the committee recommends this new armor.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman from Iowa knows perfectly well that I have been struggling here for two days or more in the endeavor to put before this body the exact answer to that question in official form. The Secretary of the Navy of the United States, John D. Long—

Mr. HEPBURN. I am asking the name of the officer who made the experiment. I am told—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I do not want you to make my speech for me. You made a very good one from your standpoint and your light. I think I can make a better one from mine. [Laughter.]

Mr. TODD. Will the gentleman from Maine—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I hope the gentleman from—somewhere—will permit me to go on. [Laughter.] I ask the Chair to make the announcement that I shall decline to be interrupted during the remainder of my five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will come to order. The gentleman from Maine declines to be interrupted.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Some members may have heard the inquiry of the gentleman from Iowa, which was on the authority of what officer of the United States the Committee on Naval Affairs made this proposition. I answer the question by saying, first, upon the authority of that officer of the United States who, under the Constitution and the laws, is charged with the duty of making recommendations to the Congress of the United States. In that part of the President's message which under our Constitution was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs is found this recommendation, sent to the Congress of the United States by the Secretary of the Navy as the result of careful investigations of his Department.

I want to say, also, that in the discharge of my duty I had personal conversations with the Secretary of the Navy; and I regretted to find that we were obliged to reopen this armor question again. I told him that an attempt to get the best armor in the world for our battle ships would involve struggles with "the beasts at Ephesus" [laughter], and I dreaded it, as any man would who knows what it means—the cry of demagogism, because it requires a great deal of money to build a plant to manufacture this armor; and it enables the changes to be rung upon the "bloated monopolists."

Ah, my friends, the "bloated monopoly" with which we are dealing to-day in this matter of increased cost of armor plate is the "bloated monopoly" of inventive genius. It is because after we had maintained supremacy in the excellency of our armor for a long period of years, to the extreme chagrin of the great manufacturing plants of Europe, it was discovered that during the last year over there in Germany they had "gone us better" on our Harvey process and were making an armor—possibly the gentleman from Iowa might not think it so good as ours, might not be willing to acknowledge that it was better, but an armor that every intelligent, scientific authority in the world believes to be 25 per cent better than ours and which is being used to-day by every great civilized government in the world.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we can sit up here and indulge in "spread-eagle" oratory and tell what a great big country we have, what our population is, what our resources amount to, and so on; but I have not yet been able to discover a method by which the United States can purchase anything from anybody anywhere in the world for less than other people would have to pay for it.

Now, if we want the very best armor in the world, and I think gentlemen will not question the fact that we do want it—if we want the best armor in the world we have got to pay something for it; and if that is true, as I think it is, then the question comes up, What is the best armor to be had at the present time, and can this armor be bought for less than the price we have put in the bill? That is a matter which we have carefully investigated.

We have information, which we believe to be true, that the British Government has made a contract for armor of the same character at £117 per ton, which amounts to $585 a ton in our currency.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I should like to proceed for a few moments longer to explain this matter.

Mr. TODD. I object.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Of course the gentleman has that right.

Mr. TODD. I object, unless the gentleman answers some legitimate questions which were propounded to him.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I move that I may be permitted to proceed for five minutes longer; and if that consent is given, I hope no gentleman will ask a question of me which will involve any portion of the time. It is necessary that the committee shall be placed in possession of certain facts bearing upon this question.

Mr. TODD. I asked the gentleman a simple question, and was received with ridicule in his response. I withdraw, however, the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is recognized.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, for three months the Committee on Naval Affairs of the Fifty-third Congress were looking into the question of armor plate for battle ships. The committee visited both Bethlehem and Homestead. Their report was unanimously adopted by the House. I had the honor of being the chairman of that committee. When the subject came up before the next Congress, a limit of $300 per ton was placed upon the price of armor plate. What was the result of that limitation? For nearly two years two of your great battle ships lay on the stocks because it was impossible to procure the necessary armor at that rate.

The next year this restriction was removed, and the limit was fixed at $400 a ton. Since that time, under the Harvey process, the armor has been furnished at that price. It is true, as my friend from Iowa said a few moments ago, that one of the companies—the Bethlehem Company—was at one time furnishing armor for a Russian battle ship at $249 a ton. But that was explained by the company when its representatives appeared before the Naval Committee. When the Government work was completed, their plants were idle. They tried to secure some work abroad.

The Russians have a way of advertising for bids that resembles an auction sale. The bids are practically put up at auction, each bidder bidding in competition until the lowest price is reached. The Bethlehem Company asked the privilege of entering into competition. It was granted; and the Carnegie Company asked the same privilege. Foreign companies dropped out before the $500 limit was reached. The American companies continued bidding against each other until the bids ran down to $249 a ton. Finally the Carnegie Company abandoned the field and left the privilege of accepting the work on the terms proposed to their competitor.

Mr. FLEMING. Let me ask the gentleman a question just there.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I prefer to proceed with my statement first.

Mr. FLEMING. I wish to ask a question just in this connection. I ask if the gentleman does not think it might be a good plan for the American Government to adopt the Russian system of taking these bids?

Mr. CUMMINGS. I do not know but what it would.

Now, sir, what was the result? The Bethlehem Company got a new market for its armor, but lost money in making it. One of its employees, if I remember rightly, testified that they lost over $40,000 on this Russian contract. But they got the work and gave satisfaction. When bids were next proposed by the Russian Government, the Creuzot people, the Krupp firm, and English manufacturers competed, but quickly dropped out. The Bethlehem Company got a contract to furnish the same class of armor to the Russian Government at $327 a ton. And that armor was being made for the Russian Government at the very time that this Congress limited the cost to the Government of the United States to $300 a ton. It was precisely the same armor the firm had been making for $249 per ton.

There is no man except the manufacturer who can tell the exact cost of a ton of armor plate. Experts are at sea over the proposition. We have had various boards since the Rohrer board, and all disagree as to the rate. One board went so far as to say that it regarded $420 a ton as a fair price. It reckoned that this would afford the manufacturer less than 20 per cent profit.

No two of these boards have ever agreed with regard to the cost of production, and all were composed of experts—Navy officers who had acted as Government inspectors at Bethlehem and Homestead. There is no human being who can ascertain to a huckleberry or anywhere near a huckleberry what it costs to make a ton of armor. And the reason is obvious, as tons of plate are rejected on tests after its manufacture.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I should like to have two minutes longer.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask unanimous consent that the time of my colleague be extended five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maine asks unanimous consent that the time of his colleague on the committee [Mr. CUMMINGS] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman from New York allow me to interrupt him for a moment, right there?

Mr. CUMMINGS. Not until I get through with my statement. Then you can interrupt and be hornswoggled. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York declines to yield.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Now, Mr. Chairman, the proposition here as it stands to-day is this: It is the duty of the Secretary of the Navy, under the amendment offered by my friend the chairman of the committee [Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine], to get the best armor manufactured for just as much below $545 a ton as he can get it. If the proposition of my friend from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] takes its place, it is the duty of the Secretary of the Navy to get the best possible armor plate at a limit of $400 a ton.

Mr. HOPKINS. Four hundred and forty-five dollars.

Mr. CUMMINGS. At $445 a ton. Very well; there you are. Under that provision the Secretary will get no armor whatever, and these ships will stand on the stocks, just as they did not long ago, for two years. The country may again drift into a war, as we did last year, and the vessels be utterly useless for lack of armor.

Mr. Chairman, as the proposition stands, it is left with the Secretary of the Navy to get the best armor plate made at as low a price as it can be got, with a limit of $545 a ton. That limit was made because it was understood that the Russian Government, under its contract with the Cramps, was getting this armor at $545 a ton.

I do not see what else the committee could have done. If they had wiped out the limit, the Secretary might pay a thousand dollars a ton. There must be a limit somewhere, and the limit was made at the rate that the Russian Government is paying for the armor.

That the Krupp armor must be secured is proved by the fact that there is not a battle ship upon the stocks to-day owned by any foreign government where the contract does not call for the Krupp armor. It seems to me that the United States Navy, in view of the experience it has had with the Spanish fleets at Santiago and at Manila, ought to have just as good armor placed upon its vessels as has any navy in the world, and I believe that this proposition, if carried, will result in securing it.

Now I will answer the question of my friend from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not care to ask it with the condition which the gentleman imposed. [Laughter.]

Mr. OGDEN. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. OGDEN. What was the number of tons furnished by this company to the Russian Government? Was it for a single battle ship?

Mr. CUMMINGS. The first contract, I think, was for 3,000 tons, and the second contract for more than that. In other words, they were to furnish 3,000 tons at $249 per ton, and afterwards as much more of the same armor at $527 a ton.

Mr. OGDEN. Now, right there, I understood you to say that they testified before the committee that on the first contract they lost $40,000.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Yes; in that vicinity, I think.

Mr. OGDEN. Now, assuming that they furnished 3,000 tons, the contract would amount to $747,000. Then, if we add $40,000 more for the loss, that would make $787,000 as the cost price; and dividing that amongst the 3,000 tons, I should like to ask the gentleman whether we can not mathematically arrive at the cost of a ton of armor as being $13 a ton plus $249 a ton, making $262 a ton?

Mr. CUMMINGS. We had no authoritative statement from the manufacturers. It was given by an employee, and the record may change the figures.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired. Debate on this amendment is exhausted, and amendments are exhausted. The question is on agreeing to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. I move to strike out the last three words.

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments are exhausted. The question is on agreeing to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. How does the Chair hold that amendments are exhausted? The practice has always been that pro forma amendments might be withdrawn.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment may be withdrawn by unanimous consent. The Chair is aware of what the practice has been.

Mr. DOCKERY. I withdraw my amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. The practice has been that a member could always withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands what the practice has been; but nobody has asked to withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I ask to withdraw the pro forma amendment. Have I the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. Nobody has the floor. It is so long since the amendment was offered, the Chair does not know who offered the pro forma amendment.

Mr. SIMPSON. I think the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] made the pro forma amendment.

Mr. HOPKINS. I move to strike out the words "forty-five."

The CHAIRMAN. No other amendment can be offered. Amendments are exhausted. Is there objection to the withdrawal of the pro forma amendment? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. Now the gentleman from Massachusetts is recognized.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, and I ask that it be read.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. A parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington rises to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Will the amendment designated by the gentleman from Massachusetts permit an amendment to the amendment, or does the ruling of the Chair, indicating that amendments are exhausted, prevent it?

The CHAIRMAN. If it is an amendment to the amendment, a second amendment can not be offered except by way of substitute. The Clerk will report the amendment, so that the committee may know what it is.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add at the end of line 17, on page 61, the words "and in no case in excess of the price paid to any manufacturer in this country for such armor by any other government."

The CHAIRMAN. There is no line 17.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's amendment does not fit, because line 17 has gone out on a point of order. The gentleman's amendment must follow immediately after the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Certainly; I will offer it at the end of that.

The CHAIRMAN. As an amendment to the amendment. And now the gentleman from Maine raises the point of order that it is obnoxious to Rule XXI.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Now, I would like to know whether I am to speak upon the point of order or on the amendment? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts desires to discuss the point of order.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. It is inconceivable to me how this amendment can be out of order. Here is a section in the bill which fixes the price of armor plate:

In all future contracts for armor for any of the vessels above mentioned the Secretary of the Navy is hereby authorized and directed to procure armor of the best obtainable quality at an average cost not exceeding $54 a ton of 2,240 pounds, including all royalties.

I propose to add the words "and in no case shall a price be paid in excess of the price paid to any manufacturer in this country for such armor by any other government." Now, if ever there was an amendment proposed that was germane to the text of the bill, it seems to me that amendment is such a one.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I accept a ruling now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order. The Chair thinks the amendment is a limitation to the amendment.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. That gives me five minutes, and it is all I want.

Mr. Chairman, I remember two or three customers of mine that used to come into my office and sit down with a pencil and undertake to go through the items of the cost of my goods, and if they were fresh customers I would let them do it, and then I would say: "What does that amount to? If you like the goods at the price, you can take them; if not, you can buy my neighbor's."

That is all there is in it; and you can not figure out costs and do business as is attempted to be done on this floor. If these companies have a price on their goods, they will just say to us, "This is our price; you take them or leave them." That is all there is in it. If we say to these parties, "We will pay no more than the very lowest price you sell for to any other government on the earth," that is as far as we can go. We can not control their prices; we ought not to control their prices; we ought not to attempt to control their prices; and, furthermore—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. How are you going to ascertain it?

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Ascertain it? There is no trouble about that. It is all an open secret about the prices. No man can even conceal freight rates on railroads where they are attempting to secretly cut the rates.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Because their prices are regulated by law.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. Not by any means. Regulated by law! The prices that railroads charge! That has been what we have been trying to do for twenty years, and have not succeeded in a single instance. If we pass the amendment I propose, it is as far as we can go. We ought to be proud if other governments come to this country and buy goods of the manufacturers of this country, and especially armor. Again, if the profits on this armor plate are excessive, we are sure to have a third factory built, and then we are better off with a third factory than we are with two.

The gentleman from Indiana and other men who are exceedingly economical, and do not mean to have anything taken out of the Treasury that can possibly be avoided, talk about combinations and trusts. What are you going to do? Two vessels stood on the stocks two years waiting for armor plate. When we have fixed a limit on the price, when we have said that they shall not under any circumstances pay any more than other governments pay, we have gone as far as we can go. Now, if these parties do demand more, do deceive the Government and take more than the law gives them, they are liable to prosecution and a recovery of any sums paid beyond the limit, until the statute of limitations is exhausted. Why not act like plain, square, honest business men in transacting this business, and have done with nonsense? [Applause.]

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, this amendment ought to commend itself to the most careful investigation of every zealous member on the floor. The statements of the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] have not been proven in the past to have been inaccurate; they must be taken at this time to be equally accurate, and his record bears him out. We have from him the statement that the ships of this nation—two battle ships rested upon the stocks here without being plated with armor and at a critical time in the hour of the Government, and that this concern, who apparently seemed to have held the Government up and held their hands figuratively about its throat, insisted and compelled the United States not only to pay the price that had been legislated upon in this Hall, but to pay an increase upon it, because, as the gentleman well puts the proposition, we were perfectly at their mercy.

What I wish to denounce is the fact, which is indisputable, that we are so contentedly here at the mercy of certain unscrupulous concerns in this country who have the power when we are in distress to press us the farthest in order that they may gain the greatest.

My distinguished friend, the chairman of the committee, said that this provision gave the opportunity to gentlemen to rise up and expand upon the "bloated monopoly," and followed his remark with an encomium upon those interests which he describes as "bloated monopolies."

But all in this House remember that on May 24, thirty-five days after the war practically was declared, after the resolution passed this House that made war inevitable, these gentlemen met in the outer room of the Secretary of the Navy—the Bethlehem Iron Works, the Pittsburgh Iron Works—and although this House had passed the bill limiting the price to $300 a ton, they declined to furnish it or to obey the law, and demanded $100 a ton more, and would not yield a jot or tittle, notwithstanding the country at the time stood facing the guns of the enemy advancing across the ocean for the avowed purpose of bombarding the cities of the United States. Yet these gentlemen insisted upon their demands and refused to furnish the plate at $300 a ton, but held out to secure $400 a ton, $100 more than the law required or justified.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Will my friend allow me? That was long before the war.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. My distinguished friend from New York says this incident was long before the war. I read from the only reliable strictly Administration paper in the United States, the New York Sun. [Laughter.]

Mr. CUMMINGS. I say it was long before the war that Congress fixed the price.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Oh, I accept the suggestion; but May 24, 1898, was the time at which these gentlemen refused to obey the law and perpetrated the only real anarchy that was ever committed by men in this country. They were willing to destroy the nation for $100 a ton; and there is not a gentleman on this floor that will deny it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I will deny it; the gentleman from Washington is not stating a fact.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Oh, the gentleman from Maine would never know a fact in an armor scheme if it carried electric lights and announced itself with an alarm bell. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I ask five minutes more.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I ask the gentleman when it was?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. This was after the war had begun. I read from the New York Sun.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I do not want to hear from the New York Sun.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. That is your usual source of party information—your personal advocate. It is ingratitude now to repudiate so distinguished a guide. I will read from the New York Sun of May 24—its telegraphic column:

[New York Sun.]

THREE MILLION DOLLARS' WORTH OF ARMOR—THE CARNEGIE AND BETHLEHEM COMPANIES DIVIDE BIDS FOR THREE BATTLE SHIPS.

WASHINGTON, May 21.

Bids for supplying 7,700 tons of armor for the battle ships Illinois, Alabama, and Wisconsin were opened at the Navy Department to-day. It marked the ending of the controversy between the Government and the armor companies over the prices of armor plate. Congress fixed the limit of price at $300 a ton, and the companies declined to furnish armor at that rate. In the last naval appropriation bill the limit was raised to $400 a ton.

There were only two bidders to-day. They are the Carnegie Steel Company, of Pittsburgh, and the Bethlehem Steel Works, of Bethlehem, Pa. Neither company bid against the other. The Bethlehem Company submitted a proposal for furnishing all the armor for the Alabama, under construction at Cramps' shipyards, and the Carnegie Company for furnishing all the armor for the Wisconsin, being built at San Francisco. On the third ship, the Illinois, at Newport News, Va., the companies divided on the bids, each taking two of the four groups of armor. The companies did not go below the limit of $400 a ton for every ton wanted, making the contract price $3,080,000.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is exactly what Congress had provided the Secretary should pay.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Congress fixed the limit of price at $300 a ton, and the companies declined to furnish it at that price.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Your very reliable authority did not know what it was talking about.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Then this paper which the gentleman has accepted as authority was mistaken.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have stated the facts.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I will accept the gentleman's statement for the purposes of argument. The gentleman informs us that Congress has fixed the price at $400 a ton.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Four hundred dollars a ton. That was the price fixed by law when those bids were opened.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Then we have the confession that these gentlemen in the hour of the Government's trial—at a time when the same class of gentlemen as these, such as had abused the trust placed in them by the Navy Department by selling their family junks, called yachts, to the Government for fabulous prices as "cruisers"—it was that these companies refused to bid against each other, and when by competitive bidding the price of armor plate might have been brought down to two or three hundred dollars a ton, as it was not worth any more, they insisted upon the very letter of the law—availed themselves of every cent that they could get out of the Government, notwithstanding it was a time when if there had been any gratitude or appreciation on their part of the bounties heaped upon them by this Congress or those permitted to them by this nation—if there had been any zealous feelings of honor at the time when the nation needed every service they could render—they might well have declined to stick to the letter of the law and have given some liberal latitude by which the Government, then in such dire distress as to be compelled to mortgage the labor of her children, might have gotten the advantage of the lowest price instead of having, by an outrage, to pay the highest. [Applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman's time having been extended, I simply want to ask him what the original charge was that he made against these companies when he rose? What did he charge?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. It was, that while the law required that there should be competitive bidding, just as is proposed in the amendment offered here, these companies, notwithstanding competitive bidding was the proper and lawful thing, declined to bid against each other. They ought to have been required to bid competitively by the law.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Did I not understand the gentleman to say that the law fixed the price at $300 a ton, and these companies would not furnish a ton until they got $400?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I have accepted the gentleman's proposition, as I said, for the purpose of argument.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I want the gentleman to accept the text of the law of last year.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I accepted the gentleman's proposition, and upon his own statement. I still bring to the attention of the House the fact that these companies declined to bid against each other; that they insisted that they should have the very last cent that the letter of the law allowed them—

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Then the gentleman was incorrect in his first statement, was he not?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I read from what the gentleman has recognized as the source of political truth. If the gentleman from Maine insists that the statement of this paper was incorrect, then, recognizing the profundity of his knowledge on this subject, which for some length of time he has been giving us by degrees and in small installments [laughter], I, of course, accede to his views.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Now, after that rapid and terrific flow of language, let me say that as the gentleman concedes his statement was wrong he ought to retract it.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I will make my speech in my own way. I decline to follow the example of the gentleman from Maine—an example which has been so unfortunate in its results. [Laughter.] I insist upon my statement. I will prove it by the RECORD.

I therefore repeat and insist that there is an hour in the history of this Government when it is its duty to announce to these people that have been preying upon it that it will no longer subject this nation to the control and influence of the disloyal and illegal trusts. [Applause.]

Mr. DALZELL. Mr. Chairman, as my colleague from Pennsylvania remarked a few moments ago, the question before the House is purely a business question, and yet there is no subject brought before this House for discussion that gives rise to as much heat and passion as does the subject of armor plate. Instead of treating the question as a business question, instead of discussing figures and facts, gentlemen indulge in diatribes against corporations and monopolies, and imagine all sorts of things that they clothe with the most lurid rhetoric.

Now, Mr. Chairman, abuse is not argument, and to my mind there is no more splendid exhibition of American enterprise, American genius, and the honesty and skill of American workmen than is to be found in the the history of the armor-plate industry in this country.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. And patriotism as well.

Mr. DALZELL. In 1884, when the Government had almost finished the construction of a turreted war vessel, the Miantonomoh, we were compelled to buy from England the commonest kind of armor plate at a cost of $550 a ton. That was common wrought-iron armor plate faced with steel. There was not a place in our broad territory, in all our manufacturing districts, amongst all our industrial enterprises, where the Government of the United States could appeal to American enterprise to furnish the sheathing for an American war vessel, the result of American labor and American capital.

Within three years patriotic capitalists in the State of Pennsylvania put their money into an armor plant, investing between three million and four million dollars. They scoured all the armor-plate factories of Europe, learning here and there how to make armor plate, so that when the time came that an American war vessel was ready to be sheathed with armor, she was sheathed with American armor, made by American capital and the skill and brawn and honesty of American workingmen.

It was at the instance of the United States Government that the Bethlehem Iron Company invested in an armor-plate plant. It was upon the faith that the United States Government would deal fairly and honestly with that corporation that they invested their money in that plant.

Not satisfied with that, the Secretary of the Navy applied to Carnegie, Phipps & Co., the largest steel manufacturing concern in the United States, and asked them to invest their capital in an armor-plate factory. Many times they declined. They could not foresee any profit in it. But finally, at the urgent solicitation of the Secretary of the Navy, they yielded, and a new armor-plate factory was erected, at an immense cost, so that two American armor-plate factories have ever since been furnishing armor for American war vessels.

Upon what terms? The first contract was at $536 a ton, a less price than the armor could be secured for at any armor-plate factory in the civilized world, a price agreed upon as a reasonable price between the Secretary of the Navy and these corporations.

Then my friend from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] came into this House and pledged himself that a concern in his State would furnish armor at $300 a ton. Few, if any, of us believed that he could redeem his pledge. I have no doubt he made it sincerely. I have no fault to find with him; but it turned out that when his constituents were called upon to make good the pledge made upon the floor of this House they would agree to do so only if the Government of the United States would agree to give them a contract for 6,000 tons of armor a year for twenty years at $300 a ton for certain ships, and $240 a ton thereafter, and $100 a ton for every ton less than 6,000 tons failed to be ordered in any one year.

Now, the fact is that in no year up to that time had more than 2,000 tons of armor ever been authorized to be made, and the proposition of the Illinois Steel Company, if it had been accepted, would have been sufficient to have furnished armor for 60 battle ships, a contingency not by any possibility to have been anticipated. Furthermore—

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. DAYTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the time of the gentleman be extended ten minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman's time be extended for ten minutes?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I shall object, unless five minutes are given to this side.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. I was about to request the gentleman from Mississippi—

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again put the request. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I move to amend the request by asking unanimous consent that ten minutes be given to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and five minutes to this side.

Mr. DALZELL. I do not know that I shall want ten minutes.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I hope that proposition will be agreed to by everybody.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request that the gentleman from Pennsylvania have ten minutes, and that some gentleman on the Democratic side may be recognized for five minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania yield to the gentleman from Washington?

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. My friend yields to me for a question. My attention having been called by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] to the fact that there was a law raising the price of armor from $300 to $400 a ton, I ask the gentleman to state to the House if that latter law was not put into the House on May 12 and did not receive the signature of the President until June 19, and was passed because of the fact that the armor-plate companies would not accept the provisions of the law at $300 a ton, and that that was done during a time of war?

Mr. DALZELL. No; it was not during a time of war; it was done years ago; as every old member on the floor knows. But I decline to yield further.

Now, it is perfectly apparent that if the United States Government had accepted the terms of the Illinois Steel Company and given them, as it was giving to others, 2,000 tons of armor plate per year, and paid them $100 a ton on the difference between 2,000 and 6,000 tons, the armor would have cost over $500 a ton, and, furthermore, the twenty-year contract which the Illinois Steel Company demanded would have foreclosed the Government of the United States within that twenty-year limit from taking advantage of these new inventions and this improved armor plate. So that it may be clearly inferred from the proposition of the Illinois Steel Company, as well as from the answer of these two companies declining to make armor at $300 per ton, that it was not possible to make such armor in this country without a loss to the manufacturers.

Well, now, gentlemen say there have been three boards who have investigated the question as to the cost of making armor plate, and my friend from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] speaks of $167 as the price of a ton of armor plate, but that is only contended to be the cost of the labor and material, and nothing else.

Why, the very fact that no two of these boards agree with each other as to the elements of cost in making a ton of armor plate simply demonstrates the truth of what the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] said a few moments ago, that it is absolutely impossible to tell accurately in the abstract how much it costs to make a ton of armor.

Why, for instance, Mr. Chairman, the Carnegie Company may turn out an armor plate worth a quarter of a million of dollars which, after it is tested at Indian Head and fails to pass the test, may represent simply so much metal, and therefore so much dead loss. It is absolutely impossible, I say, to calculate what the exact cost of a ton of armor plate will be or what the profit of a company may be.

So that I am justified in saying that during all the history of armor-plate manufacture in this country, without respect to conjectures as to cost and profit, these two corporations, denounced here to-day, have furnished armor to the Government at a less cost than it could have been procured at any other place in the civilized world.

Mr. CUMMINGS. That is true.

Mr. DALZELL. Furthermore, the gentleman from Iowa says that this Bethlehem Company furnished armor cheaper to Russia than it did to us. I will not stop to dwell on that. That matter has been explained by the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS]. The Bethlehem Company went into that foreign field to secure that field, and they did secure it. And other American manufacturers have done the same thing.

To-day in my own city the Carnegie Company are making armor plate for Russian war ships at $550 a ton or over, and the Russian Government is glad to get it at that.

Now, Mr. Chairman, throwing aside all these matters that have nothing to do with the question before us, the business question before us, I say to you that you can still get the harveyized armor for $400 a ton. But in the progress of inventions a new armor has been discovered much more efficient. Who says so? The experts of the Navy Department; the experts of every navy department of every state in Europe that is to-day building ships and clothing them with armor.

Now, shall we have that armor or shall we not? Upon this House depends the responsibility of the answer. This House may say that we will still take the harveyized armor at $400 a ton. It is its right to so say. It is its right to say that we shall have not the best, but an inferior armor. But if we want this other armor, the best armor, we must pay the price for it.

Now, upon whom shall we rely for the facts in such a case? Individually we cannot examine the question. We must rely solely upon the Navy Department, the proper executive department of the Government to deal with that question, and the Naval Committee of this House. They are our agents in the premises. Shall it be said that the Navy Department and the committee of this House are in a combination with these great manufacturing establishments to secure for them what they ought not to have? There is no gentleman on this floor that believes that they are in any such combination, or in any combination.

I am here to-day pleading for our own people for American opportunity to do American work upon American vessels. I believe that if we could procure armor in Europe for $100 a ton less than we can procure it at home it would be our duty still to buy it at home.

Gentlemen say these corporations have held the Government by the throat. Not so. The Government is more independent than the corporations. They have $8,000,000 invested upon which they are losing every day the interest on their investments while the works are not in operation. More than that, their force is disorganized. More than that, except for a chance that they may have of receiving orders from European countries to make armor plate, they are absolutely dependent for their existence and for their prosperity upon the Congress of the United States.

Gentlemen of the House, set to work these our own factories! Thousands of men are unemployed to-day that will be employed, prosperous, and happy when we settle down to doing what we ought to do—encourage our own manufacturers, treating them honestly, as they expected and deserve to be treated when the Government persuaded them to go into this enterprise. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Under the agreement, the Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Now, Mr. Chairman, I shall ask the attention of the House for a moment to a question of pure mathematics. I shall take the facts from the statement of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] and of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE], members of the Naval Committee. I shall make the calculation from that basis, and I am going to prove mathematically in this five minutes, if the statements made by the members of the Naval Committee are trustworthy, that this armor can be gotten for less than the amount of money named in the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. It would be well for my colleague to hear the gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. My time is going on, and mathematics never criticise anybody.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I beg the gentleman's pardon. My colleague is present.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. The gentleman from New York stated that the Bethlehem Company had sold the Russian Government 3,000 tons of armor plate at $249 a ton. That would make $747,000. He stated that the company's agent swore before the committee—this is from sworn testimony, remember—that they lost $40,000 upon the contract. Add the $40,000 to the amount which they received and it makes $787,000; divide it by 3,000 tons, and you get $262.33 as the actual cost per ton. Two hundred and sixty-two dollars and thirty-three and a third cents, without any profit, without any allowance for interest, wear and tear, profit, or anything else.

Now, let us go a step further. Add to that $262 (I will use round numbers) 20 per cent to cover wear and tear of the plant and interest upon the plant, and add to it another 20 per cent for profit, and you get $104.80, which, added to the original, makes $366 per ton for the armor with 40 per cent for interest, wear and tear, and profit added over and above the actual cost. Add another 10 per cent for fear that less than 50 per cent will not be enough for general profits and to cover interest, wear and tear, and you then get $402 as the price of the armor plate with 50 per cent added to the original cost. Then add $40 a ton to that amount, which is what the gentleman from Maine, the chairman of the Naval Committee, said was the royalty to be paid per ton for Krupp armor, and you get $442 as the fair price of Krupp armor a ton, which is $3 a ton less than the amount fixed upon in the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS].

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. The gentleman is talking about an entirely different kind of armor.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, my time has not expired and I want to answer the gentleman from Maine. I am not talking about a different kind of armor. The only difference of cost in the product from the Krupp process proposed to be bought and that of the harveyized armor which we have been buying is in the royalty. All the testimony shows that without the royalty the Krupp armor costs less per ton than the harveyized, and the gentleman from California [Mr. BARLOW] proved it this morning from a recitation of the patent processes. The only additional cost in the Krupp process is the royalty, and the gentleman from Maine stated that to be $40 per ton.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I said $40 to $50 per ton.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted upon these amendments. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask to withdraw the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. No, sir; not much. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOPKINS. Well, then, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word as a formal amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not recognize the gentleman for that purpose; debate is exhausted and the amendments are exhausted.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the last amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not entertain that motion.

Mr. CUMMINGS. I rise to a question of personal privilege, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. To what does the question of personal privilege relate?

Mr. CUMMINGS. It relates to what the gentleman said that I said.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not think that is a question of personal privilege.

Mr. LEWIS of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move that the gentleman from New York have five minutes.

Mr. DOCKERY. I ask that the amendments be reported and the parliamentary situation be stated.

The CHAIRMAN. The parliamentary situation is this: The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] offered an amendment which has been reported. To that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS] offered an amendment changing the amount. Without understanding that that amendment was pending, the Chair recognized the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER] to offer another amendment, which the Chair ought not to have done; but he did it, and the amendment is here. Now, the question is first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER], which will be read.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will the Chair have all the amendments read?

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read first the amendment offered by the gentleman from Maine, next that offered by the gentleman from Illinois, and then the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The amendments were severally read.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALKER].

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 112, noes 48.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOPKINS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. There are two more amendments now pending. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HOPKINS], which the Clerk will again report.

The amendment was again read.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. PAYNE and others) there were—ayes 102, noes 78.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I demand tellers, Mr. Chairman. On second thought I will withdraw that. Mr. Chairman, and I give notice that I shall ask for the yeas and nays in the House.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk, proceeding with the reading of the bill, read as follows:

And the Secretary of the Navy shall pay out of the foregoing appropriation to the Union Iron Works, of San Francisco, $3,690.31, the amount expended by said company over and above the sum received by it for certain armor furnished by said company for the U. S. S. Wisconsin, said armor having been so furnished to prevent delay in the construction of said vessel.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I raise a question of order against that paragraph, under clause 2, Rule XXI. It is an appropriation reported without the authority of law—there is no law authorizing the appropriation.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. DOCKERY. No; this is only a claim.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Maine desire to discuss the point of order?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I have not indicated any such desire. The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk, as a new paragraph.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What is this?

The CHAIRMAN. A new provision to follow the paragraph which has been read.

Mr. MOODY. It is a new paragraph.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I should like to know whether an amendment is now germane or applicable—whether we have not gone beyond the point where an amendment can be offered?

Mr. MOODY. This does not concern the question of armor plate or anything of that kind.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Then I do not see how it can come in.

Mr. MOODY. I think it can.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. What does it propose?

Mr. MOODY. Let it be read.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I am willing to have it read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. It is in order to offer an amendment, to come in as a new section, if its provisions are such as to make it otherwise in order; and that the Chair can not ascertain until it has been read.

The Clerk read the amendment of Mr. MOODY, as follows:

Insert as a new section the following:

"That the President is hereby authorized to appoint, by selection and promotion, an admiral of the Navy, who shall not be placed upon the retired list except upon his own application; and whenever such office shall be vacated, by death or otherwise, the office shall cease to exist."

[Applause.]

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Reserving a point of order, I want to say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that while he knows as well as I that this is not a proper bill on which to offer that amendment, yet if he will agree to let us vote on it immediately, as this House probably wants to do, I shall raise no point against it.

Mr. MOODY. I am willing it shall be voted on without a word. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken, the amendment was agreed to. The Clerk read as follows:

Equipment: Toward the completion of the equipment outfit of the new vessels heretofore and herein authorized, $200,000.

Mr. CUMMINGS. Mr. Chairman, I always try to be correct in my figures; but as we grow old memory becomes treacherous. I have ascertained that I was mistaken in my statement to the gentleman from Louisiana that 3,000 tons of armor plate were to be made by the Bethlehem Company at $249 a ton for the Russian Government. The contract originally made was for 1,264 tons, with the proviso that the amount might be increased by 300 tons, at the option of the Russian Government. The order was so increased, and the total amount furnished at that low price was 1,564 tons.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, we have reached the close of this bill, under some difficulties and with a great deal of delay. I congratulate the committee that we have at last concluded the careful consideration of this great appropriation bill and have at last gotten it in such form that it may go to the Senate and be acted on there.

I shall not attempt at this time to reply to a great deal that has been said on this floor. So far as it has been the disposition of anyone on my own side of the House—I expect the criticism of my political opponents and have never flinched from it—but so far as any expressions and imputations have been indulged in by members of my own party upon the Committee on Naval Affairs, excluding myself, I regard them as beneath contempt, and point with some pride to a record showing that the magnificent service that our Navy rendered during the late war with Spain was rendered possible by means of the painstaking, laborious, and patriotic labors of the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs of this House—part of the time under the chairmanship of my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. CUMMINGS] and part of the time under the chairmanship of a gentleman who afterwards became Secretary of the Navy—Hon. Hilary A. Herbert—during all which period there never has been a recommendation made to the House of Representatives by the Committee on Naval Affairs in regard to the arming of our ships that has not expressed identically and specifically all the ripened judgment and earnest desires of the Government of the United States, speaking through its accredited representatives and spokesmen, the Secretary of the Navy and the Bureau of Ordnance.

For myself, Mr. Chairman, I want to say that one of the proudest recollections which I shall take from Congress whenever I may be called on to vacate my seat here will be the recollection that it was due to my efforts and on my motion that the materials for the construction of our ships of war were required to be of domestic production and manufacture.

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to a question of order. I should like to know what is the question before the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House. The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SHERMAN reported that the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the naval appropriation bill, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, and with the recommendation that the bill be passed as amended.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendments to their passage.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a separate vote upon the amendment in regard to the Naval Academy and on the amendment in regard to the armor plate.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn. We can not have two roll calls here, at this hour.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Oh, yes, we can; we are all here.

Mr. GROSVENOR. It will take an hour and a half.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. You will imperil this bill if you insist on that.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I think the bill is in no peril. It can stand that after what it has gone through. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio moves that the House do now adjourn.

The question being taken, on a division there were—ayes 89, noes 105.

Accordingly the House refused to adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks a separate vote on two of the amendments. Is a separate vote demanded on any other amendment? The Chair hears none. The question is on the remaining amendments.

The remaining amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the first amendment upon which a separate vote is asked.

Insert after line 18, page 31, the following:

"For completion of buildings and other works authorized under the act making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899, under such plans as may be adopted by the Secretary of the Navy, not to exceed in cost $1,230,000, $720,000."

The SPEAKER. On this question the gentleman from Maine demands the yeas and nays.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Let us have a rising vote first.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment. The question being taken, on a division there were—ayes 89, noes 70.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I call for the yeas and nays.

Several MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. In response to quite a general expression, I withdraw the request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the request for the yeas and nays. The yeas have it, and the amendment is agreed to.

The Clerk will report the next amendment on which a separate vote is demanded.

Insert in line 12, page 61, after the word "dollars," the following:

"Provided, That no part of said fund shall be expended except in procuring armor of the best obtainable quality at an average cost not exceeding $445 per ton of 2,240 pounds, including royalties, and in no case a price in excess of the price paid to any manufacturer in this country for such armor by any other government."

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker—

Mr. CANNON. I ask what the amendment means? Is not the amendment simply striking down the price $100 a ton?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I demand the regular order.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Is not the regular order—

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Clerk has made an error in reporting the amendment.

The SPEAKER. If an error has been made, that will be corrected.

Mr. SHERMAN. The amendment is to strike out "five" and insert "four," making the price $445 a ton instead of $545. The amendment is not the entire proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will again report the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, before the Clerk reports the amendment, I wish to say that I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. SHERMAN] is mistaken. Inadvertently an amendment was offered, which became an amendment to an amendment then pending, and both having been adopted, the Clerk was right in reading the two as embodied together.

Mr. HOPKINS. It all becomes one amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Yes, the whole becomes one amendment.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry. The House having ordered the previous question on the bill and amendments, would it not now be in order to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered, so that an amendment could be offered to this amendment?

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, as the record stands—

The SPEAKER. The order for the previous question has been partially executed.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Regular order.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, as the record stands, the only amendment—

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I think they understand it; but I desire to state that the only change is the substitution of the price. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert, in line 12, page 61, after the word "dollars," the following:

"Provided, That no part of said fund shall be expended except in procuring armor of the best obtainable quality at an average cost not exceeding $445 per ton of 2,240 pounds, including royalties, and in no case a price in excess of the price paid to any manufacturer in this country for such armor by any other government."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, the only change— [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 130, noes 58.

Accordingly the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time; and it was accordingly read a third time.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I now move to recommit the bill with instructions to report it back with that amendment so modified as will be accomplished by the striking out of the word "four" and reinserting the word "five," making it $545 instead of $445, that being the only change in the amendment that was considered.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I make the point of order that the House has just voted on that.

Mr. RICHARDSON. A point of order. That is exactly the amendment that was reversed in the committee. They struck out "five" and inserted "four," and this would be simply endeavoring to accomplish by a motion to recommit what the House had voted down—

Mr. DOCKERY. The House has voted on that proposition.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the motion to recommit, under the circumstances, is in order. The House can deal with it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I desire to state to the House in regard to my motion, and I believe it to be my privilege under the rules—

Mr. DOCKERY. No; the previous question has been ordered.

The SPEAKER. The motion to recommit is not debatable.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Then I move the previous question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Maine asks for the previous question. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] rises to a parliamentary inquiry. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Is the motion before the House amendable?

The SPEAKER. It is amendable if the previous question is refused.

The question being taken on ordering the previous question,

Mr. UNDERWOOD and others demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 127, noes none.

Accordingly the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Maine.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. I desire to state, under the previous question—

Mr. GROSVENOR. I object to any debate on that.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the gentleman from Maine.

The question being taken, the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine demanded a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 135.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the yeas and noes.

The yeas and noes were ordered.

Mr. OGDEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. OGDEN. If I understand it, this is a motion of the chairman of the committee to recommit his own bill. Is that the status of the parliamentary situation?

The SPEAKER. That is hardly a parliamentary inquiry. The Clerk will proceed.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Speaker, the confusion was so great in this part of the Hall a little while ago that we did not hear what the question was. Will the Chair kindly state the question on which we were about to vote?

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the Clerk will state the motion of the gentleman.

The Clerk stated the motion, as follows: To recommit the bill with instructions to strike out $445 and insert $545.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 80, noes 144, answered "present" 2, not voting 125; as follows:

Mr. SOUTHWICK with Mr. FITZPATRICK.

Mr. TONGUE with Mr. SULZER.

Mr. WARD with Mr. NORTON of Ohio.

On this vote:

Mr. KETCHAM with Mr. LAMB.

Mr. HARTMAN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to inquire if the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Mr. STONE, has voted?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is not recorded.

Mr. HARTMAN. I have a pair with him, and having voted "nay," I now desire to withdraw my vote.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I want to give notice to the House that immediately after the reading of the Journal to-morrow I shall call up the Army appropriation bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. PLATT, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 5561. An act establishing the boundaries of the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation, Mont., and making appropriations for purchasing improvements thereon and certain lands situated therein, for purchasing cattle, fencing the reservation, and for other purposes; and

S. 5533. An act to permit volunteer regiments to retain their colors.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill of the House of Representatives No. 4838, granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth V. Litzenberg.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved. That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 80) entitled "An act providing procedure in certain cases."

MILITARY ACADEMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up the Military Academy appropriation bill. It has come back from the Senate with sundry amendments. I move that the House agree to the amendments of the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11717) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to take up the bill.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves that the House concur in the Senate amendments.

Mr. COX. I would like to have an explanation.

Mr. HAY. I will state to my colleague that I have carefully gone over these amendments made by the Senate, and there is a decrease in the appropriations of about $19,000.

Mr. COX. With that view of the matter, I do not ask further explanation.

Mr. MARSH. The decrease is in the neighborhood of $26,000.

The amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

VOLUNTEER REGIMENTS TO RETAIN THEIR COLORS.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill H. R. 12041.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. OTJEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to take up the Senate bill, which is identical in terms.

The bill is as follows:

A bill (S. 5533) to permit volunteer regiments to retain their colors.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized to permit volunteer regiments, on being mustered out of the service of the United States, to retain all of their regimental colors; said colors shall be turned over to the State authorities to which said regiments belong, and the regimental quartermaster in making his returns may, in lieu of said colors and in full release therefor, file with the proper official of the War Department a receipt from the quartermaster-general of said State that said colors have been delivered to said State authorities.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I understand this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. OTJEN. It is a unanimous report from the Committee on Military Affairs and it is approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. HULL. It gives to the soldiers of the late war the same privilege that we did to the soldiers of the civil war.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. OTJEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. DOCKERY. It is half past 5 o'clock. I hope the gentleman will move to adjourn.

Mr. PAYNE. I move the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. There are some requests of the Senate.

Mr. PAYNE. I withdraw the motion for the present.

ELIZABETH V. LITZENBERG.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following concurrent resolution of the Senate:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring). That the President be requested to return to the Senate the bill of the House of Representatives No. 4838, granting an increase of pension to Elizabeth V. Litzenberg.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, there was an error in that bill in describing the service, and it is the object of the resolution to have it corrected.

The resolution was agreed to.

PROCEDURE IN CERTAIN PENSION CASES.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved. That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the bill (H. R. 80) entitled "An act providing procedure in certain pension cases."

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 33 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

Mr. STEWART presented a petition of the legislature of Nevada, praying for the construction of the Nicaragua Canal; which was ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Senate concurrent resolution No. 6.

Introduced by Mr. Comins February 6, 1899.

Read first time, rules suspended, read second time by title, and referred to the committee on Federal relations.

Senate concurrent resolution relative to construction of the Nicaragua Canal.

Whereas the construction of the Nicaragua Canal would be of great and infinite benefit to the United States of America and of especial help to the people of the Pacific States, as it would afford greater protection to this coast in time of war, open new lines of trade and commerce, and cheapen transportation to foreign and Atlantic seaboard markets, thereby enabling the people of this State to obtain mining and other supplies at greatly reduced rates; assist in building up new enterprises in our State; strengthen and maintain those now in existence; increase our population, thus enhance our wealth and multiply our resources; and

Whereas there is now pending in the Congress of the United States a bill providing for the use of the credit of the General Government in the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, and which bill prescribes, among other things, that the United States shall own absolutely 25 per cent of the stock of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua to be reorganized under the funding bill, and that the President of the United States shall appoint not less than 9 of the 11 directors of said company, and that the United States Engineers shall direct and control the work of construction of said canal, and after constructed that the United States, by reason of its ownership thereof, shall fix the tolls thereon: Therefore, be it

Resolved by the senate (the assembly concurring). That our Senators in Congress be instructed, and our member of the House of Representatives of the United States be requested, to earnestly support the passage of this measure.

Resolved, That his excellency the governor be requested to forward to each of our Senators and our Representative in Congress a copy of these resolutions.

STATE OF NEVADA, EXECUTIVE CHAMBER.
 Carson City, Nev., February 16, 1899.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith senate concurrent resolution

No. 6, relative to the construction of the Nicaragua Canal, the same having been adopted by the legislature of Nevada.

Very respectfully,
[SEAL.]

REINHOLD SADLER,
Governor.

Hon. WILLIAM M. STEWART, Senate Chamber.

Mr. BATE presented a memorial of sundry citizens of the Cherokee Nation, remonstrating against the ratification of the agreement between what is known as the Dawes commission and a like commission appointed by authority of the Cherokee national council, known as the Cherokee commission, and submitted to the people of the Cherokee Nation to be voted upon January 31, 1899; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas a certain agreement entered into on January 14, 1899, by and between what is known as the Dawes commission and a like commission appointed by authority of the Cherokee national council, known as the Cherokee commission, was, on January 31, 1899, submitted to the people of the Cherokee Nation to be voted upon; and

Whereas said agreement was obnoxious in many of its provisions and was strenuously opposed by a large class of Cherokee citizens, in that it deprived them of certain legal vested rights; and

Whereas the Cherokee people having always reposed confidence and trust in the United States Government in its guaranty to protect them in their personal and property rights: Therefore,

We, the undersigned citizens of the Cherokee Nation, take this means of entering our solemn protest against the ratification, in its present form, of said agreement by the Congress of the United States, for the reasons herein after set forth, namely:

1. We oppose the individualization of the title to lands, and would consent only to the apportionment of the same, allowing the title to remain, as at present, in the Cherokee Nation.

2. We protest to the allotment of a part of our lands to white adopted citizens, for the reason that they have never paid into our treasury any sum of money or other considerations to become the owners of any share in a common estate, as have the Delawares and Shawnees adopted into our tribe.

3. We oppose the surveying and sale of town lots as provided for in said agreement.

4. We are opposed to section 65 of said agreement, which provides for reference to a board of arbitrators of Congress the claim of the Cherokee Nation, as rendered by an accounting of the experts, James A. Blade and Joseph T. Bender.

5. We also protest against the provisions of section 81 of said agreement, which provides for the payment to one John C. Hemphill and one William T. Hutchings for an alleged claim for money amounting to more than $8,000. If these parties have a contract with the chief of the Cherokee Nation of this nature, the Cherokee Nation council is the proper place to make application for its payment.

6. We are opposed to section 44, for the reason that it does not revoke, in specific language, the claim of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway to every alternate section of land for a distance of 10 miles on each side of said road through the land of the Cherokee Nation, as per an act of Congress granting said claim in case the Cherokee title was extinguished.

7. The Cherokee national debt should not be paid out of the principal of our invested funds, but out of such increment as might be made to accrue thereon, leaving the principal to the credit of the Cherokee people.

8. The agreement fails to make an equal division of the Cherokee domain in that it ignores the coal and other minerals in the country. Said coal and other minerals should be reserved to the Cherokee people, as in the Choctaw and Chickasaw agreement.

9. In the process of allotment many of our citizens will have to give up portions of their improvements, and the treaty fails to provide any indemnity in the premises. We can not believe that Congress will allow such damage to fall upon our people without adequate remuneration.

10. It will not be best to allow the executive and legislative departments of the Cherokee Nation to appropriate and apply the moneys of the Cherokee people without the approval of the President of the United States, since it was on account of failure of the Cherokee government to safely administer its financial affairs that induced the United States to assume control thereof.

11. In the matter of disbursing public funds, it is known that many persons were fraudulently placed on the roll of Cherokee freedmen, while many others were placed on the Cherokee pay roll who were not citizens of the Cherokee Nation. All such persons were then allowed to vote on the ratification of the agreement, and that, too, while the Dawes Commission, under authority of the Curtis law, stands clothed with the authority and charged with the duty to investigate the Cherokee rolls and to omit therefrom all such names as have been placed thereon by fraud or "without authority of law." Before passing on the ratification of the agreement Congress should investigate the vote cast in the ratification aforesaid by the Cherokees.

12. We protest against the short time allowed between the signing of said treaty and the day set for its ratification by the vote of the Cherokee people, the treaty not having been published in the Cherokee language more than three days prior to the day of voting thereon. And, furthermore, the chief's proclamation calling the election was never published in the Cherokee language.

13. We protest against said ratification as aforesaid for the reason that it was done unlawfully. According to Section VI, article 10, of the constitution of the Cherokee Nation, no change can be made in said constitution except by vote of all the Cherokee citizens at a general election, after the change contemplated had been published and promulgated at least six months previous to such general election.

14. We protest against said ratification because the agreement between the two aforementioned commissions allots to each citizen of the Cherokee Nation a specific number of acres of land, to wit, 120 acres, when it is totally impossible to ascertain the exact number of acres of land to be assigned to each citizen until accurate rolls of said citizens have been made out as provided by law, and no such roll has been lawfully made.

WALTER A. DUNCAN,
(And 23 Other Citizens of the Cherokee Nation.)

A bill (S. 5122) to change the name of the Anacostia and Potomac River Railroad Company;

A bill (S. 5095) to provide for the opening of Fifth street NW.; and

A bill (S. 5081) authorizing the board of control of the Rock Creek Park to construct a roadway across said park.

Mr. McMILLAN, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 3343) for the relief of non-residents who have paid license taxes to the District of Columbia, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. CHANDLER, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 255) to authorize the appointment of Philip S. Brown a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7915) allowing Isaiah Mitchell, of Denver, Colo., seven years within which to make a final homestead entry upon certain lands, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 4989) for the payment to Joshua T. Roberts of balance due for surveying public lands, reported it with amendments, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WHITE, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the amendment submitted by Mr. PERKINS February 9, 1899, authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to adjust and pay the accounts of the Cape Smythe Whaling and Trading Company for supplies furnished and services rendered in rescuing, housing, feeding, clothing, and caring for shipwrecked whalers in the arctic seas in 1897 and 1898, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, reported it with an amendment, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed; which was agreed to.

Mr. CARTER, from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1800) to reimburse George W. McKinsey, postmaster at Kokomo, Ind., for money paid out by him as said postmaster, reported it without amendment.

Mr. FAULKNER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported an amendment providing that any jury summoned for service in any of the circuit or criminal courts, may, with the concurrence of the justice presiding in such court, be used for the trial of issues in the orphans' court, intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill, and moved that it be printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. HANSBROUGH, from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, to whom was referred the amendment proposing to appropriate $5,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to investigate and report upon the physiological action and nutritive value of alcohol and alcoholic beverages, submitted by Mr. GALLINGER on the 23d instant, reported favorably thereon, and moved that it be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

HEARINGS ON SHIPPING BILL.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to whom was referred the resolution submitted by Mr. FRYE on the 20th instant, reported it without amendment; and it was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the stenographer employed by the Committee on Commerce to report hearings on the bill to promote the commerce and increase the foreign trade of the United States be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

LANDS IN GREER COUNTY, OKLA.

Mr. ALLEN. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 11771) to amend section 1 of an act to provide for the entry of lands in Greer County, Okla., to give preference right to settlers, and for other purposes, to report it favorably and without amendment. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill, which, I am sure, will not lead to discussion.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to so amend section 1 of an act to give preference right to settlers in Greer County, Okla., as to allow parties who have had the benefit of the homestead laws of the United States, and who had purchased lands in Greer County from the State of Texas prior to March 16, 1896, to perfect titles to the lands according to the provisions of section 1 of the act, under such regulations as the Commissioner of the General Land Office may prescribe, and according to the legal subdivisions of the public surveys, if no adverse rights have attached; but no settler shall be permitted to acquire to exceed 320 acres under this provision.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF PENNSYLVANIA AVENUE.

Mr. McMILLAN. On February 6 I reported from the Committee on the District of Columbia House bill No. 11629, for the extension of Pennsylvania avenue SE. to the District line, being Order of Business 1665. I am now directed by the same committee to report the bill with an additional amendment, and to move that the bill be reprinted, retaining its place on the Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

JOHN L. SMITHMEYER AND PAUL J. PELZ.

Mr. STEWART. I move that the bill (S. 3901) for the relief of John L. Smithmeyer and Paul J. Pelz be recommitted to the Committee on Claims.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. STEWART subsequently, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was recommitted the bill (S. 3901) for the relief of John L. Smithmeyer and Paul J. Pelz, reported it with an amendment.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (S. 5573) granting an appropriation to the trustees of the Woman's National Industrial Exhibit of the city of Washington, D. C.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MALLORY introduced a bill (S. 5574) granting an increase of pension to Ella V. Coston; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TURLEY introduced a bill (S. 5575) to accept a site as a donation and erect thereon a custom-house and post-office building in the city of Bristol, State of Tennessee; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. BACON introduced a bill (S. 5576) for the erection of a public building at Atlanta, Ga.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. CLAY introduced a bill (S. 5577) for the erection of a custom-house and post-office building at Brunswick, Ga.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. NELSON introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 256) to authorize the appointment of George C. Thorpe a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. McLAURIN introduced a joint resolution (S. R. 257) to authorize the appointment of Harry Lee a second lieutenant in the Marine Corps; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. MASON submitted an amendment relative to the revival and extension for one year of the right of action in the Court of Claims under the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide for the collection of abandoned property and for the prevention of frauds in the insurrectionary districts within the United States," approved March 12, 1863, etc., intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. LINDSAY submitted an amendment authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to deliver to Gen. W. W. Duffield, recently superintendent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, the stereotyped plates of his work on logarithms and logarithmic tables to ten places of decimals, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CHANDLER submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $12,000 for grading and paving Nineteenth street extended between Florida avenue and Columbia road, intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill.

INDIAN LANDS IN NEVADA.

Mr. STEWART submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved by the Senate. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, directed to inform the Senate what Indian reservations exist in the State of Nevada and the date of their creation, whether by statute or departmental order, and to transmit to the Senate a list of the allotments of lands to Indians, together with a map showing the several locations and the Indian reservation in which they are contained, also the names of the inspectors or other officers of the United States who officiated in securing such allotments, with reasons therefor.

Resolved further. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, also requested to make no more allotments to Indians in Nevada until the next session of Congress.

MONUMENT TO SAMUEL HAHNEMANN.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved. That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate S. R. 48, being joint resolution granting permission for the erection of a monument in Washington, D. C., for the ornamentation of the national capital and in honor of Samuel Hahnemann.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 12122) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

The bill (H. R. 11059) to provide for the extension of the Metropolitan Railroad along Eleventh street SE. was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING INVESTIGATION.

Mr. LINDSAY. I desire to enter a motion to reconsider the vote by which a resolution was adopted to print 2,000 copies of the testimony of certain witnesses given before the Lyman investigation committee, investigating the Bureau of Engraving and Printing for the year 1897.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator desire to make the motion now?

Mr. LINDSAY. I desire to enter it now.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The motion will be entered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. W. J. BROWNING, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the following bills:

A bill (S. 1154) for the relief of George Hughes, of Portland, Oreg.; and

A bill (S. 1776) to increase the pension of Mrs. Letitia Tyler Semple.

The message also announced that the House insists upon its amendment to the bill (S. 1968) granting an increase of pension to George W. Nevins, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. RAY of New York, Mr. SULLOWAY, and Mr. CASTLE managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the bill (S. 2919) granting a pension to Olivia Worden, widow of the late John L. Worden, United States Navy, disagreed to by the Senate, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. RAY of New York, Mr. HENRY of Connecticut, and Mr. DRIGGS managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House further insists upon its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3589) to extend the powers and duties of the Commission of Fish and Fisheries to include game birds and other wild birds useful to man, asks a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. PERKINS, Mr. PAYNE, and Mr. TALBERT managers at the further conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution providing that during the last six days of the present session of Congress the engrossing and enrolling of bills and joint resolutions by printing, as provided by act of Congress, approved March 2, 1895, be suspended, and that they may be written by hand; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

THOMAS MULLEN.

Mr. BERRY. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1417) for the relief of Thomas Mullen.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to remove the charge of desertion now standing upon the records of the War Department against the name of Thomas Mullen, of Wallaceburg, Ark., late member of Company G, First New York Mounted Rifles Volunteers, and grant him an honorable discharge as of the 29th day of November, 1865. But no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARY E. TAYLOR.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 2258) granting a pension to Mary E. Taylor.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It proposes to place on the pension roll the name of Mary E. Taylor, dependent and permanently helpless daughter of John Taylor, late a private in Company F, Fifteenth Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and to pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE BILLS RELATING TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. McMILLAN. I am requested by the Committee on the District of Columbia to ask unanimous consent that to-morrow morning, after the close of the morning business, one hour be given to House District bills. There are a great many bills relating to the District of Columbia that are important and which have passed the House, and we are nearing the close of the session. It will take about an hour, possibly, to pass them all. If there is objection to any of the bills, they can go over. It is the object to have those that are unobjected to considered.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan, that to-morrow morning, after the routine business, one hour shall be devoted by the Senate to the consideration of House District bills that are unobjected to? The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

PENSACOLA AND NORTHWESTERN RAILROAD.

Mr. MALLORY. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 11737) granting the right of way to the Pensacola and Northwestern Railroad Company over and through the United States naval and military reservations near Pensacola, in the State of Florida.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TERRITORIAL CAPITOL OF NEW MEXICO.

Mr. SHOUP. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5163) authorizing the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico to create an additional indebtedness for the completion and furnishing of the Territorial capitol.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to hear the bill read. I reserve the right to object.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Territories with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico is hereby authorized to cause to be issued bonds of the Territory for the sum of $50,000 for the purpose of raising the necessary additional funds for the completion and furnishing of the Territorial capitol now in course of erection at Santa Fe: Provided. That the interest on such bonds shall be made payable in lawful money of the United States, the rate of interest not to exceed 5 per cent per annum: Provided further. That such bonds shall not be sold for less than par nor shall any part or portion of the proceeds thereof be used for any other purpose than that herein specified: And provided further. That nothing in this act shall be so construed as to make the Government of the United States liable or responsible for the payment of any of said debt by this act authorized to be contracted.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FORT SMITH AND WESTERN RAILROAD.

Mr. BAKER. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11916) to authorize the Fort Smith and Western Railroad Company to construct and operate a railway through the Choctaw and Creek Nations, in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT ELIZABETH CITY, N. C.

Mr. BUTLER. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5543) to provide for the erection of a public building at Elizabeth City, N. C.

Mr. ALLEN. I think all the public-building bills ought to go together. There are a number of them.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to the fact that a similar bill has already passed the House, and this bill is therefore not liable to the Senator's objection.

Mr. ALLEN. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. BUTLER. A bill providing for a public building at Elizabeth City, N. C., passed the House last night.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It provides that the Secretary of the Treasury shall purchase, or otherwise provide, a suitable site, and cause to be erected thereon a substantial and commodious building, with fireproof vaults, for the use and accommodation of the courts of the United States, post-office, and other offices of the Government at Elizabeth City, N. C. The site and building thereon, when completed upon plans and specifications to be previously made and approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, shall not exceed in cost the sum of $50,000.

Mr. PRITCHARD. Is this the bill that passed the House recently?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. BUTLER. It is identically the same with the House bill. The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

M. B. BUFORD.

Mr. McMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 5322) for the relief of M. B. Buford.

Mr. FRYE. I shall be obliged to try to interrupt this proceeding at half past 11.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Michigan?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the President, on account of meritorious conduct during the late war with Spain, to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appoint M. B. Buford an officer in the United States Navy with the rank of commander, restoring him thereby to the original place he held in the service; and in order that this action may not interfere with the grade of other meritorious officers the number of commanders on the active list is hereby increased by one.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HORACE G. REED.

Mr. PLATT of New York. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 4418) to remove the charge of desertion from the naval record of Horace G. Reed.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let the bill be read.

The Secretary read the bill; and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It proposes to amend the naval record of Horace G. Reed, deceased, late a first-class boy on board of the Grampus and Moose, in Admiral Porter's fleet, by removing from the record the charge of desertion, and to issue in this behalf a certificate of discharge from the said naval service of the United States. But no pay or allowances shall become due or payable by reason of the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIG. GEN. JOHN R. BROOKE.

Mr. TELLER. I ask leave to call up the bill (H. R. 7860) to amend an act entitled "An act for the relief of Brig. Gen. John R. Brooke, United States Army," approved March 30, 1894.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to have the bill read for information.

The Secretary read the bill.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not understand, if the Senator from Colorado will permit me, how the Government should assume responsibility for the unlawful acts of General Brooke.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator will allow me, I will state the case in just a word. There is quite a lengthy report here. This is a House bill.

General Brooke removed certain intruders from the post where he was in command. They were selling liquor in violation of law to the soldiers. He removed them from the reservation grounds. Thereupon these two people sued the General. The General employed an attorney. He was transferred to another post. The attorney died, and he had no notice of his death, and they took a judgment by default against him for $14,000. Subsequently Congress passed a law providing that if each of these persons would accept $1,000 in discharge of the whole claim, they should be paid. One of the parties accepted his $1,000. The other party in the meantime had died, and his heirs did not know about it, so that they did not accept it. The bill is to enable them to accept it and to relieve General Brooke of the debt of $14,000, which was no fault of his; it was by an inadvertence that the judgment was rendered against him.

Mr. ALLEN. It would seem at least that he was paying no attention to his case.

Mr. TELLER. I think the Senator did not hear my statement.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, I heard the Senator's statement.

Mr. TELLER. The General was transferred from the post, and his attorney died just before the court met; and the General had no notice of the death of the attorney until it was too late to do anything. It is a case which I have looked into carefully. I think it is a meritorious one, and the bill ought to be passed, carrying out the old law which was passed some years ago.

Mr. ALLEN. The fact that General Brooke was removed from one post and went to another post and that the attorney died is no evidence that he was diligent in the defense of his case. It would be very strange if a client did not know that his lawyer was dead until some time after judgment was rendered.

Mr. TELLER. The truth is that he did not know he was dead. The occurrences, I assure the Senator, are quite excusable, as showing why the General should not have known that the attorney was dead.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not want to contest this matter much. I have not a very high estimate of General Brooke, either of his qualities as a gentleman or a soldier. I prefer that the bill should go over until I can talk to the Senator.

Mr. CHANDLER. I hope the Senator from Nebraska will allow the bill to be passed.

Mr. TELLER. I will say this—

Mr. CHANDLER. I have known General Brooke for a long time—

Mr. TELLER. The bill has been reported from the Committee on Claims. If the Senator from Nebraska wants to object, of course it is his right. I shall not call up the bill again at this session.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not want to impede the legitimate progress of the bill, but I should like to have an opportunity to look into it and to confer with the Senator about the matter.

Mr. CHANDLER. I should like to say what I started to say. This matter has hung over General Brooke for a good many years. No one has investigated the subject who does not understand that General Brooke was blameless. This large judgment was obtained in this way, and it harasses him. Whenever it has been inquired into it has been thought that whatever took place the Government ought to have defended him and ought now to indemnify him. One thousand dollars has been paid. The other thousand dollars can now be paid to the heirs of this party. I hope the Senator will not allow any opinion he may have of General Brooke to lead him to oppose a matter so simple and plain. I ask the Senator to withdraw his objection and let the bill be passed.

Mr. ALLEN. The presumption is—and that presumption is conclusive until it is overcome by indubitable proof—that General Brooke was in error, or a judgment would not have been rendered against him. It is not to be supposed that a court would render a judgment against any man unless the evidence was such as to warrant that judgment. That certainly is an indisputable rule. The burden of proof is upon General Brooke, therefore, to show either that the court was without jurisdiction or that the judgment was obtained by fraud or was irregular in some form. The fact that he comes here and asks Congress to assume and discharge his liability is conclusive evidence that he was wrong. I certainly submit that it is not a good rule to lay down nor to follow. It is not a good precedent that whenever an Army officer or any other gentleman in the discharge of public duties exceeds his authority and becomes a trespasser the Government should assume responsibility for him and discharge the obligations arising from that trespass.

Mr. TELLER. I understand that the Senator has objected to this bill, and I do not see—

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator to withdraw his objection.

Mr. ALLEN. I simply object to it temporarily, until I can talk to the Senator from Colorado about it. I do not want to interpose a captious objection.

Mr. TELLER. I have given this matter attention. I do not suppose the Senator can get any information from me that he does not get out of the report which is on file.

Mr. ALLEN. I can read the report in the meantime.

Mr. TELLER. If the Senator is not satisfied with it, of course the bill has to go over.

Mr. ALLEN. I shall not undertake to defeat the bill during the session—that is, by any dilatory tactics—if I think it ought to be passed.

Mr. CHANDLER. I ask the Senator to let the bill go through and read the report later.

Mr. ALLEN. I prefer to read the report first.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Nebraska objects to the consideration of the bill at this time.

LANDS IN CHEYENNE COUNTY, NEBR.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 8739) to authorize a resurvey of certain lands in Cheyenne County, in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRYE. Is it a long bill?

Mr. PETTIGREW. No; it is a short bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, to strike out the preamble; which was agreed to.

PAYMENT TO CHEROKEES.

Mr. PETTIGREW obtained the floor.

Mr. PETTUS. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. PETTIGREW. After the bill that I desire to call up is passed I shall be glad to yield. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 5462) to authorize certain persons who have intermarried with Cherokees to sue for their interest in certain moneys of the tribe from which they were excluded.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. BAKER. I believe in the doctrine of reciprocity, and therefore I am compelled to object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I will state that a similar bill has heretofore passed the Senate, and I called it up at the request of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. I presume the Senator will wait and get even with me rather than with the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President—

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. BAKER. The bill I called up was also called up at the request of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES]. It was one reported by him, and it had already passed the House.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then it would be too bad to have the Senator from Arkansas suffer for both sides.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. PETTUS] is recognized.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I should like to have the request submitted once more. I think the Senator from Kansas will hardly object.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is there objection made to the present consideration of the bill indicated by the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BAKER. I shall have to insist on my objection.

HEIRS OF MINNIE FREDERICH.

Mr. PETTUS. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 8816) for the relief of the heirs of Minnie Frederich.

Mr. FRYE. I gave notice that at half past 11 I should ask that the river and harbor bill be proceeded with; and if I waive that notice there will be a dozen more requests for unanimous consent.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. Let this bill go through.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Alabama asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. PETTUS. It is simply to release a man in Washington from the forfeiture of property owned by a foreigner.

Mr. FRYE. I will let that come in, and then I will object to anything else.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that certain real estate, situated in the city of Washington, D. C., formerly owned and possessed by George Bogus, and also all the real estate formerly in the name of George Bogus, and all real estate lying in the District of Columbia heretofore devised and bequeathed by George Bogus, deceased, to Minnie Frederich, late of Baltimore, Md., in her lifetime; and also all real estate lying in the District of Columbia heretofore purchased by or conveyed to Minnie Frederich, shall be relieved and exempted from the operation of an act entitled "An act to restrict the ownership of real estate in the Territories to American citizens, etc.," approved March 3, 1887, and all the forfeitures incurred by force of the act are, in respect to all of said real estate, hereby forever remitted.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. FRYE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRYE. The Secretary will turn back to page 83, to the amendment that was passed over.

The SECRETARY. On page 83, after line 13, the Committee on Commerce reports to insert the following:

Reservoirs at the head waters of the Missouri River: For construction along Piney Creek, Wyoming, of three reservoirs, in accordance with the recommendations submitted in House Document No. 141, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, $50,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such work and materials as may be necessary for the completion of such reservoirs, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $165,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated: Provided further, That these reservoirs shall be emptied, as near as may be, each year between June 30 and September 30, the discharge of stored water to be under the direction of the State engineer or other State officer especially designated for the purpose by the State wherein such reservoirs are located.

Mr. RAWLINS. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Maine if the Committee on Commerce had under consideration generally the question of the construction of reservoirs and the impounding of water in the arid regions.

Mr. FRYE. They have; and in the next item of the bill they have authorized a general survey. Surveys were made only in the States of Wyoming and Colorado, of three points in Wyoming and one in Colorado. The paragraph which has been read provides for the construction of the dam in Wyoming, which had been surveyed. The next item is for the survey of all the arid States.

Mr. RAWLINS. I wish to ask the Senator further in regard to this question. Have the committee any plan as to the use of the reservoirs when completed? Will the waters stored for purposes of irrigation be open to the appropriation and use of the people in the respective States in accordance with the local laws and customs of the States or subject to the regulations of the Congress of the United States?

Mr. FRYE. They will come under the provisions of the States in this item. The chairman is not defending the item.

Mr. ALLEN. Perhaps the Senator will permit me to ask what provision is made for the restoration of these waters to their natural channels for use?

Mr. FRYE. The argument before the committee and the engineer's report was that naturally they would return to the waters where they belong.

Mr. ALLEN. They might be diverted into other channels by the States in which the reservoirs were located. It strikes me that there ought to be some safeguard in the bill.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the chairman of the committee will not be interrogated particularly as to this item, because he is not over and above favorably disposed to it.

Mr. ALLEN. I am deeply interested in the subject of irrigation.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, I think I can set him right on that question. This amendment provides for only one reservoir, and that is in a State where the laws of the State provide that the water can not be diverted from the channel and must naturally go back to the channel of the stream from which it is taken.

Mr. ALLEN. That hardly answers the question. There ought to be some ample safeguard for the return of the stored waters to their natural channel. Many of the streams of Wyoming and Colorado empty into streams running into my State. Many of them penetrate the State. We are as much in need of water in Nebraska as they are in Colorado or any of the mountain States. We have no objection whatever to the storage of waters in the mountain States and their use for irrigation purposes. In fact our people are heartily in favor of that system. But we think there ought to be some ample safeguards for the restoration to their natural channels of the stored waters after they have been used for irrigation purposes, so that they may flow into the State of Nebraska and what I might call other lowland States, and be there utilized by the people of those States.

I have not looked over the provisions of this bill very carefully because I have been before the Committee on Commerce but once, but I trust the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], who is fully familiar with this subject, will see that the bill contains these safeguards.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, this amendment involves very important considerations. In the arid States the right to the use of water is determined by priority of appropriation for useful purposes. The waters, subject to this law, are open to appropriation and use for those purposes without limitation or restriction. If the Federal Government enters upon the construction and maintenance of reservoirs—

Mr. STEWART. If the Senator will allow me, I think the amendment itself answers his objection. Commencing in line 25, at the bottom of page 83, he will find the following:

That these reservoirs shall be emptied, as near as may be, each year between June 30 and September 30, the discharge of stored water to be under the direction of the State engineer or other State officer especially designated for the purpose by the State wherein such reservoirs are located.

This leaves it to the State to make the direction. In this case, it being in the State of Wyoming, it is left to that State. My understanding has been all the while that the Committee on Irrigation indorsed this amendment. It was distinctly understood there that the State law under no circumstances was to be interfered with. If it were, it would be an impossibility to administer the law.

I think there is a sufficient reservation in the next subdivision of the amendment. It simply provides for a survey, and does not interfere with the State law. I think there is a sufficient reservation in that. If there is not, let it be put in, because the intention is that this is not to interfere with the State system. If it should, it would be utterly destructive.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, it is useless to authorize an expenditure of money for the purpose of surveying and locating reservoirs unless it is proposed to follow that by the expenditure of money for the construction and maintenance of reservoirs. It is useless to expend money for either of those purposes unless, when the reservoirs are constructed, they will be so regulated and controlled in their operation and use as to be beneficial to the public in the vicinity of their location, for in many places throughout the West, notably in my State, it would be almost impossible to survey, construct, and maintain a reservoir without interfering with vested rights to the use of water which have already accrued, and leading to complications, the nature of which can not now be fully anticipated.

I do not desire to interpose any objection to this amendment at this time, except to state that if these reservoirs are constructed by the expenditure of money from the Treasury of the United States, in all probability the Government will want to exercise control over the reservoirs which have been created by the money of the Government; and I want to give notice now that, in my opinion, the States in which these reservoirs are located and the people of those States will not permit or tolerate any such interference. If these moneys are expended by the Government, it must be with the distinct understanding that the reservoirs are to be created, first, subject to all the rights of the use of the water already accrued, and, secondly, to the control of the States themselves in respect to the management and disposition of the waters that may be thus impounded.

I shall not interpose or raise any other question to this amendment, except to say that, in my judgment, there would be serious complications grow out of this provision if it should be carried into effect.

Mr. CLARK. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. RAWLINS. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. Does not the organic act of the State which the Senator represents provide that the waters of the State become the property of the State?

Mr. RAWLINS. The waters of my State, almost without exception, belong to private individuals.

Mr. CLARK. But the State exercises control under the organic act, does it not?

Mr. RAWLINS. The State can exercise no control over these waters, except in harmony with the rights to the use of water which have accrued.

Mr. CLARK. But all those rights are taken from the State and not from the United States, are they not?

Mr. RAWLINS. They are not derived from the State.

Mr. ALLEN. I should like to ask the Senator if flowing waters in his State are regarded as private property?

Mr. RAWLINS. The title to the use of water for useful purposes goes by virtue of priority of possession.

Mr. CLARK. I asked the question I did because in most of the Western States by direct effect of the organic act or the act of admission the control and title to the water is granted to the States, and hence no Congressional interference will occur.

Mr. ALLEN. I ask the Senator if the common law is changed in Wyoming as to the use of flowing water?

Mr. CLARK. No; but it is all exercised under the authority of the State—a direct grant of the right to use the water by the State.

Mr. ALLEN. There can be only a usable title to flowing water. If water flows through my premises, I can not stop it at common law. Has that rule been changed in Utah?

Mr. CLARK. For what purpose could the Senator stop it?

Mr. ALLEN. I say I could not stop it except for temporary use. The water must flow on.

Mr. CLARK. That is right. I understood the Senator to say he could stop it.

Mr. ALLEN. Not at all. I was asking the Senator if that rule of the common law is changed in Utah.

Mr. CLARK. I asked for information the same as the Senator from Nebraska did.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, the common-law rule as to riparian rights to the use of water does not obtain in any of the States of the arid region. It was abrogated originally in California, and it has never been in force in Nevada, in Utah, in Colorado, or in Idaho. Nowhere throughout the arid region is that the case. That rule has been supplanted by another, namely, that the right to the use of water accrues by virtue of priority of possession to the extent of the quantity of water diverted and used and applied to useful purposes. The title to all the waters in my State is vested in private individuals in that way. It was incompetent for the constitution of the State to interfere with those rights, and the constitution of my State did not undertake to interfere with those rights.

I do not desire to interpose any objection to this appropriation in its present form. It can work no injury. But I want the Senate to understand that this is the dedication of this money to the creation of reservoirs for the benefit of private individuals, who already in many cases are in possession of the title to the use of the water.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I have very grave doubt whether these amendments ought to be in this bill. They are very carefully drawn, so drawn as to give some appearance that the primary object of the expenditure proposed is to facilitate navigation. I believe that the real object of this proposed expenditure is to secure the construction of reservoirs in the States for irrigation purposes; and it is a work, if that be the purpose, upon which the Congress of the United States ought not to engage. I think, at this time, if ever. If it is to be engaged in, it should be through a separate bill reported by the Irrigation Committee, involving that proposition and nothing else, which could be fully discussed and considered and acted upon with sole reference to that subject.

If the appropriations for a reservoir in Wyoming and the surveys provided for in this amendment were to be the beginning and the end of this expenditure, I should be disposed, for one, to let it go without any protest, and I should be willing to do that if it involved a very much larger expenditure; but this is the beginning of an elaborate system which, in my judgment, before it is ended will cost this Government hundreds of millions of dollars for the reclamation of what is known as the arid-land region.

This is not a new subject in Congress. I had occasion somewhat in a former term in the Senate to consider it. Congress in 1888 passed a provision of law—I think it was in an appropriation bill—as follows:

Irrigation survey: For the purpose of investigating the extent to which the arid region of the United States can be redeemed by irrigation and the segregation of irrigable lands in such arid region, and for the selection of sites for reservoirs and other hydraulic works necessary for the storage and utilization of water for irrigation and for ascertaining the cost thereof, and the prevention of floods and overflows—

The same proposition—

and to make the necessary maps, including the pay of employees in field and in office, the cost of all instruments, apparatus, and materials, and all other necessary expenses connected therewith, the work to be performed by the Geological Survey under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, $250,000, of which sum $50,000 shall be immediately available; and the Director of the Geological Survey, under the supervision of the Secretary of the Interior, shall make a report to Congress on the first Monday in December of each year, showing in detail how the said money has been expended, the amount used for actual survey and engineer work in the field in locating sites for reservoirs, and an itemized account of the expenditures under this and any future appropriation.

That was only for surveys and the location of reservoir sites. But when this appropriation came before Congress in 1890, it had grown to large proportions, and that law was repealed.

Mr. RAWLINS. If the Senator will permit me, in that connection, as the result of the action taken under that statute, the Government made surveys for reservoir sites throughout the West and located sites, and nothing further was done; but by reason of that the development of the irrigation interest of the West was greatly retarded and the most desirable sites for reservoirs were thus reserved for the United States, so that it was impossible in my State in many instances for private individuals and private enterprises to utilize those sites as they desired to do because of this obstruction put in the way by the Federal Government. The United States did nothing; it could not intelligently do anything. It is not a subject with which it ought to deal, and its interference in the matter will not tend to the development of that section of the country, but will in the end retard it.

Mr. SPOONER. I think so, too.

Mr. RAWLINS. And that very legislation had that effect. In my State I had a great deal of difficulty during the Fifty-third Congress in obtaining a remedy for that. Enterprises were retarded for years by reason of that legislation and what was done under it.

Mr. STEWART. Will the Senator from Wisconsin allow me a word there?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. The difficulty under that appropriation arose because it was not confined to the real purpose for which it was made; and if it had been, the difficulty would not have occurred. The Department construed the law to allow the reservation of lands for reservoir sites; and instead of surveying reservoir sites and setting them apart for this purpose, the General Land Office here in Washington reserved very many townships in the States. This closed many land offices and practically stopped the sale of public lands. Then all the land States came forward and insisted upon having the law repealed, so that the land offices might be reopened and the land be again open to settlement.

It was the extravagant use of the act in withdrawing from sale public lands for the purpose of reservoir sites which worked the injury. Sometimes the entire half of a State would be withdrawn for a reservoir site. The purpose of the act was a good one, and if it had been carried out and the money used according to the intention for which it was appropriated, it would have been of great use to the public; the land reserved would have been reserved for the public use, and it would not have interfered at all with the water rights.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. STEWART. Yes.

Mr. RAWLINS. Does the Senator not know it is always the case, where a question of that kind is brought within the jurisdiction of the Federal Government and turned over to the Departments at Washington, where the clerks know nothing about the conditions existing in the locality, that such abuses will always continue to be, as they have been?

Mr. STEWART. If you confer upon the officers here discretionary power to deal with the public land or with mines, they will run into all these difficulties. We had a great contest here in 1866 over the sale of mines. Finally I and a few others succeeded in inducing Congress to leave the matter to the local regulations of the miners and the courts to confirm their titles. That has worked well. Where the administration of the mining rights and the water rights has been left to the officers of the General Government, they have to a great extent nearly always gone wrong for the want of experience in administering such laws. They go wrong in administering the laws in regard to the Indians more frequently than they go right. I have just heard of a case of that kind in my State, having received a letter concerning it.

Mr. SPOONER. Is the Senator asking me a question?

Mr. STEWART. Just let me have a minute.

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. STEWART. To illustrate how the business is done here, I heard that the Department was allotting lands to Indians all over my State along the streams. That interferes with irrigation. I wrote to the Department and I found there were nearly 700 allotments. I have not yet ascertained where they are. So I offered a resolution in order to find out where they are. Nothing of that kind could have occurred if the people out there could have had anything to say about the question.

The administration of such matters here is always extravagant and embarrassing, particularly in Indian affairs. Indian reservations are made in the most reckless manner, taking in whole sections of country that ought not to be formed into reservations, and which ought to be kept for the use of the white man. They do the Indians no good. These things are badly executed. I agree with the Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS], and I should be opposed to any appropriation if it was contemplated thereby that the Government of the United States should exercise any jurisdiction over flowing waters in the arid region. That must be left exclusively to the State and to the local regulations. I think this provision is sufficiently guarded for the purposes of this reservation. If we allow to the General Government jurisdiction over these matters, we destroy private rights—we interfere with irrigation, and do more harm than good.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, if I may have a moment, I desire to say that the Government will put no money into Utah or any other State for the construction of a reservoir until the jurisdiction in a certain way is given the United States to build it. I do not imagine that a reservoir will be forced upon any State which does not desire it.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I remember very well the debate to which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. STEWART] has referred. There were withdrawn under that act of 1888—and I only mention it to show the gigantic proportions of this subject—853,000,000 acres of arid land, about two-fifths of the area of the United States. There was not an acre withdrawn, as I understood the law, which was not properly withdrawn, the theory being that the Government could not go on with the location of reservoir sites and with irrigation ditches and everything of that sort, leaving the lands open to seizure or settlement or preemption the moment the locations were made, and every acre of land, I think, which was withdrawn under that act of 1888, as I say, was properly withdrawn. But that is neither here nor there.

Nobody pretended in that debate, although several Senators justified the expenditure of the money by the United States in locating reservoir sites and in gathering information which would facilitate the reclamation of the arid region—nobody claimed or dared to claim in that debate that the Government of the United States should go by the expenditure of the people's money into the actual construction of irrigation works in the States and Territories, as is proposed by this bill.

Mr. ALLEN. Will the Senator permit me to ask him why the Government should not do so?

Mr. SPOONER. I will give the reason why I think the Government should not do so.

Mr. ALLEN. I shall be glad to hear it.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I myself can see no reason why the Government should expend large sums of money in locating reservoir sites for irrigation purposes any more than I can see a reason why the Government should spend a vast amount of money in locating mining sites, or mill sites, or water-power sites for lumbering purposes throughout the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. Why should the Government expend large sums of money for improving rivers and harbors?

Mr. SPOONER. Because Congress in expending money for the improvement of rivers and harbors is facilitating the transportation of commerce, not creating a subject of commerce.

Mr. ALLEN. No; but it is an aid of commerce, is it not?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly it is an aid of commerce. But, Mr. President, it is in removing obstructions in rivers, it is improving the navigability of rivers running from State to State and from the States to tide water in order to facilitate the transportation of commerce throughout the land.

Mr. ALLEN. What does the Senator say to the aid we have given heretofore in the construction of canals?

Mr. SPOONER. That is the same principle—from State to State.

Mr. ALLEN. That was in the origination and construction of the canals.

Mr. SPOONER. They are public ways.

Mr. ALLEN. And how is it as to railroads?

Mr. SPOONER. Congress has authorized the construction of railroads.

Mr. ALLEN. That was for the purpose of creating commerce, was it not?

Mr. SPOONER. No, sir; primarily it was for the purpose of creating an instrument of commerce, not of creating commerce itself.

Mr. ALLEN. Exactly. Now, if you establish reservoirs, must that not necessarily be in aid of commerce itself as much as the improvement of a river or harbor?

Mr. SPOONER. It is in aid of creating commerce; but it is not in aid of transporting commerce.

Mr. ALLEN. What does the Senator say to the appropriation of money to construct levees and revetments along the banks of rivers for the purpose of preventing the overflow of the cotton lands?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not suppose, Mr. President, that the primary object is to benefit the cotton lands; it is to keep the river, which is a great national highway, within certain limits.

Mr. ALLEN. And keep it off the adjacent farming lands?

Mr. SPOONER. Incidentally. If you keep it within certain limits, you keep it off the land.

Mr. ALLEN. That is right.

Mr. SPOONER. Of course, primarily, the object is the improvement of navigation.

Mr. ALLEN. Can the Senator see a distinction between that and the construction of reservoirs?

Mr. SPOONER. Incidentally it may benefit the cotton lands.

Mr. ALLEN. But can the Senator see a distinction in principle between that and the construction of water reservoirs for water supply?

Mr. SPOONER. I think I can.

Mr. ALLEN. I am glad to know it.

Mr. SPOONER. I am not certain that I can make the Senator see it, but I think I can see it.

Mr. ALLEN. I can not see it myself.

Mr. SPOONER. The selection or the discovery of a mine and the sinking by Government expenditure of a shaft in order to attract the investment of capital in the operation of a mine in order to facilitate the sale of the mining of the Government property is or in the same line as the erection of a reservoir to make cultivable lands which otherwise would not be cultivable; but who on earth would pretend it would do more than create commerce?

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask a question there.

Mr. SPOONER. In one moment. It would create commerce, but I think my friend will admit it would not be within the legitimate expenditure by Congress under the Constitution.

Mr. ALLEN. That is about as shadowy as it would be to say if a person throws a stone through the air across my premises because I own all above he is therefore guilty of trespass.

Mr. SPOONER. That is the Senator's view of it. I said I did not expect to convince him, and therefore I am not disappointed.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to ask the Senator this question: Suppose these reservoirs were constructed and the floods kept back so that they relieved the river, prevented overflows below, and accomplished a similar purpose to a levee along the river, would that not be on the principle of leveeing the river below? There are many of the opinion, and we have had reports to that effect, that the best way to regulate the floods in the Mississippi River would be to make reservoirs in the mountains, keep the waters from rushing down at flood tide, and then using the water for navigation. There have been several reports that it would have that effect.

Mr. SPOONER. There are reservoirs and there are reservoirs. In the clause before the one pending I make no objection to the provision "For reservoirs at the head waters of the Mississippi River: Continuing improvement, $210,000." I understand that is for the purpose, and the sole purpose, of regulating the flow of water in the Mississippi River, and that it has reference to the navigation of that river.

Mr. STEWART. The river in Wyoming is one of the head waters of the Missouri River, and does the fact that incidentally it benefits agriculture constitute any objection to it more than the appropriation for the leveeing of a river may benefit the lands adjacent?

Mr. SPOONER. I think the amendment is drawn with great dexterity. I may be wrong about it, but I regard the reference to the navigation of the Missouri River in the pending amendment as a mere cover, a mere pretext, substantially.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. WARREN. I wish—and I can not even let the matter pass until the Senator finishes—to say that he is absolutely mistaken. The fact that the reservoirs at the head of the Missouri River may be farther west, farther away from the State which the Senator so ably represents, than the Mississippi River does not carry with it sufficient ground for the imputation that we do not mean what we say.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, I meant to cast no imputation upon the Senator at all.

Mr. WARREN. I understand that.

Mr. SPOONER. Nor do I mean to cast any imputation upon his State or any of those States. I am not ungenerous to those States. I am in favor of dealing with those States as to arid lands just as the United States dealt with the States as to swamp and overflowed lands.

Mr. ALLEN. Boats do navigate the Missouri River from Sioux City 2,200 miles north every year.

Mr. SPOONER. I know that. I expect I traveled over that river before the Senator did.

Mr. ALLEN. That may be true. The Senator is older than I am. But I have been an inhabitant of that country for years.

Mr. SPOONER. That does not touch the point I make.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator said he thought the excuse of aiding the navigation of the river was somewhat shadowy. I want to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that steamboats every season of the year run 2,200 miles north of Sioux City carrying freight.

Mr. SPOONER. A great many years ago I went on a steamboat up the Missouri River to the head of navigation. I know all about that. This project did not come, as I understand, as an original proposition from the Committee on Commerce, which has in its charge appropriations to improve the navigability of our rivers and to aid in creating and improving instrumentalities of commerce. It came from the Irrigation Committee, did it not—a committee which does not originate ordinarily the items which find a proper place in the river and harbor bill?

But to go back where I was when the Senator from Nebraska interrupted me, I am in favor of a grant by the United States to the arid-land States of the arid lands within their boundaries. I believe that would be a wise policy, just as I believe it was a wise policy, all things considered, in 1850 for Congress to grant to the States the swamp and overflowed lands. Who at that day in either House of Congress would have been willing to vote for a proposition that Congress should undertake with the people's money to reclaim the swamp and overflowed lands of the United States; to go into the States, which Congress would have no power to do, in my judgment, to dig canals, to dig and maintain ditches, in order thereby to drain and reclaim swamp and overflowed lands? That was not the policy adopted by Congress as to lands unfit for cultivation because of too much water, nor is it, in my judgment, any wiser or sounder policy for Congress to go into the expenditure of unlimited money in order to render arable lands which are now not tillable because of too little water.

Mr. President, if we once enter upon this project, where will it end? Wyoming will have no exclusive right to appropriations for reservoir purposes. If it is a right thing for us to expend $165,000, if that be the amount provided, for the construction of irrigation reservoirs in Wyoming, it is a right thing for us, and we can not refuse to grant it, to expend the requisite money in the location and erection of reservoirs wherever in the arid-land region it is required in order to reclaim arid lands, or, as the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] says to me, out of the arid-land region either. But I confine it to the arid-land region. Where will you stop?

Mr. WARREN. Wherever Congress says you will stop.

Mr. SPOONER. Congress can not stop when Congress once begins. A Senator from another arid-land State will come in and will want an appropriation of $100,000 or $165,000 for the construction of a reservoir in his State, and he will tell us, "You did it last year for Wyoming; we pay our share of the public taxes; we bear our share of the public burden." If irrigation is a good national project in Wyoming, is it not in Montana; is it not in Washington; is it not in the State of Texas; is it not wherever there are arid lands which can only be reclaimed by irrigation?

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President—

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator from Maine wishes me to hurry, and I want to close.

Mr. ALLEN. I merely wish to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the people of the arid States pay their portion of the taxes that go into river and harbor improvements. There is no superiority upon the part of the State the Senator represents or any other State in that respect.

Mr. SPOONER. That is a fling which is not justified by anything I have said. The States, in my judgment, are equal. They are equal in their sovereignty, and they are equal in every sense so far as their rights under the Government are concerned. If there is a State within this Union which has within its borders streams which ought to be improved by Congress, that State has just as much right to participation in the Congressional appropriations for that purpose as any other State has.

I could not for one moment dispute that. But it does not follow that because there are a large number of States having such streams which, in the interest of the general commerce of the United States, the arid-land States as well as the rest, are improved, Congress shall go into those States which have no such streams and enter upon the paternalistic work of expenditures simply for the purpose of creating farms. This ought not simply to be considered a barrel of pork out of which each State and each community is to have, without regard to the merits of the proposition itself, its share. As I was arguing, and I repeat it, if we once embark upon this expenditure, there will be no limit to it in justice, no limit to it except a purely arbitrary one, until by the expenditure of vast sums of money the arid region of the United States is reclaimed.

I do not know what right Congress has to go into a State to construct reservoirs for irrigation. Under this bill when the reservoir is completed that point is attempted to be saved by putting the water and the control of it under the State engineer, and when you boil it down it is little more and little less than a proposition to turn the United States, so far as the arid-land region is concerned, into a great water company. To my mind it is not a proper purpose of Congressional expenditure, and I think Congress ought not to enter upon it in the last days of the session as an item or items in an appropriation bill. Let it come in here, as I said before, as a distinct proposition, coming where this came from and where such propositions ought to come from—from the Irrigation Committee—and then we can take it up and dispose of it.

I think there would be just as much sense in the Government spending vast sums of money to sink oil wells throughout the country on Government land. The proposition can not be maintained that we shall spend hundreds of millions of dollars in rendering arable the arid region in order to facilitate the sale of those lands. I read here in 1890 some statistics showing that during a period of thirty-nine years, ending in 1899, population, farms, and the production of the great and important staples increased as follows: Population, 175 per cent; farms, 260 per cent; cattle, 185 per cent; swine, 66 per cent; bales of cotton, 201 per cent; bushels of corn, 257 per cent; bushels of wheat, 389 per cent; bushels of oats, 411 per cent; showing an increase in farms and farm products so far outstripping the increase in population as to bring to the agriculture of the United States—I think that is partly the cause of it—depression and distress.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator believes in the doctrine of overproduction, I understand?

Mr. SPOONER. A man who does not understand that there can be such a thing as overproduction does not know much.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know much, but I know there is no such thing as overproduction.

Mr. SPOONER. I do not feel called upon to qualify my remarks, although I say it with perfect respect for my friend. This arid land reclaimed would make 625,000 farms of 160 acres each; it would make 1,250,000 farms of 80 acres each, and I doubt if the farmers of the United States will relish the proposition that they shall be taxed to render arable 1,250,000 farms not now arable, whose occupants will be exempt from the vicissitudes of weather, who can buy what water they need for their crops instead of waiting for the rainfall.

Mr. CLARK. May I ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. I am interested in this matter. I wish to ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he desires to commit himself by the remark he has just made to the doctrine that has gained some prevalence, that the development of the West should not be encouraged because it might tread upon the toes of some other parts or sections of the country?

Mr. SPOONER. Not at all, Mr. President.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator's remarks would indicate that.

Mr. SPOONER. No, sir. I want to see the prosperity of the West increase as rapidly as the Senator does, although he lives there. I want to see that country filled with farms and farmers. I want to see its utmost possible development; and time, in my judgment, will bring it. What I object to is an attempt, through the expenditure of public money, to force it. I believe if these arid lands are treated as the swamp and overflowed lands were treated, if they are granted by the United States to the States as the swamp and overflowed lands were granted to the States, that when the population demands it, as in the growth of the country it will be demanded, the States, handling those arid lands as will best subserve their interests, dealing with them through private corporations and otherwise, will as rapidly as it is needed bring about their reclamation.

Mr. CLARK. Will the Senator permit me to ask him another question in this connection?

Mr. SPOONER. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator, in referring to the swamp lands, indicated that they were handled with wisdom by the States. Does the Senator believe it to be true that the States handled the swamp-land grants with that wisdom with which the General Government might have handled the lands?

Mr. SPOONER. The only wisdom with which the General Government could have handled the lands would have been to sell them.

Mr. CLARK. Yes, sell the good land for good land, and the swamp land for swamp land. Various States—I suppose Wisconsin, among others—sold the good lands as swamp lands.

Mr. SPOONER. I think the grant of swamp lands to the States turned out, in the long run, notwithstanding a great deal of maladministration, to be a wise policy.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator is fully aware of the fact that they were a fertile source of corruption, both in State and private administration.

Mr. SPOONER. It may be; and it may be that if the arid lands were granted by Congress to the States that would be a fertile source of corruption; but if it were, it would be a fertile source of corruption in the State governments, and I am not here to legislate upon the theory that the people of the arid-land States can not and will not protect themselves and their interests against corruption.

Mr. CLARK. Does not the Senator know that the very thing he has suggested is an absolute impossibility—to grant the lands to the States?

Mr. SPOONER. Why?

Mr. CLARK. Does he not know that it has been attempted time and time again in Congress?

Mr. SPOONER. No, sir.

Mr. CLARK. Does he not know that committees of Congress for years have refused to make reports upon such bills? Does he not know that if a Western State comes before Congress with a plea for 160 acres to be devoted to a public purpose, for a military grant even, of this absolutely worthless land which the Senator described, it is impossible to get Congress to make the grant?

Mr. SPOONER. I do not know that.

Mr. CLARK. It is absolutely true, and it is to be found in the record time and time again.

Mr. SPOONER. Perhaps the record will show it.

Mr. CLARK. The record does show it.

Mr. SPOONER. Then what follows?

Mr. CLARK. It follows that if the Senator's course is now pursued there is absolutely no relief upon any line for any of those States.

Mr. SPOONER. Then it follows, stating it differently, not from the standpoint of relief, which perhaps is not needed to the extent that this whole project would carry, that we are to do one of two things. Either we are to reclaim, through the expenditure of the people's money and the legislation of Congress, all these lands, amounting to two-fifths of the area of the United States, or they are forever to remain arid.

Mr. CLARK. Not at all. The Senator's logic is not good any more than because you improve a river or a harbor in Wisconsin the Senate of the United States and the Congress of the United States are committed to the idea that you must take every one of your little streams up to the head and expend Government money on it. The logic is the same in both cases. The one thing that we want is relief, as the Senator says. The situation resolves itself into the question whether there should be justice or injustice dealt out to the arid States. That is the alternative which the Congress faces and not the alternative stated by the Senator.

Mr. SPOONER. I can not see that the arid States or any other States can characterize as a plea for justice the demand that the Government of the United States shall go into the work of constructing reservoirs within the States or making and maintaining irrigation ditches within the States, for a reason which I have stated, that, in my opinion, that is not one of the proper functions of the Government.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator desires to attribute ulterior motives to this project.

Mr. SPOONER. No.

Mr. CLARK. The Senator opposes the policy of appropriating public money in this immediate section of the country.

Mr. SPOONER. What immediate section of the country?

Mr. CLARK. The section here indicated in the bill; that is, the amendment now before the Senate, to which the Senator has directed his attention. He did not object to the provision by this Government to conserve the waters of that section of the country by taking 1,000,000 or 1,500,000 acres from the public domain and out of the control of the States and out of settlement for the very purpose which he says this can not accomplish.

Mr. SPOONER. What does the Senator mean?

Mr. CLARK. The forest reserve in the Big Horn Mountains, which lies in the immediate vicinity where these reservoirs are to be constructed, if constructed at all.

Mr. SPOONER. I think I voted with the Senator from Wyoming and the Senator from South Dakota to do away with that reservation which was made by Mr. Cleveland.

Mr. CLARK. That is true; upon the theory that it was not properly made; but the Senator will not say that he is not in favor of forest reservations in order to accomplish exactly what this amendment proposes, to wit, the conservation of the waters.

Mr. SPOONER. I think there is a very wide distinction between the Government reserving from sale its forests in order to conserve the water supply of the country and expending money out of its Treasury to construct reservoirs. If it is a proper thing to expend money in constructing reservoirs in the interest of irrigation, I do not know why it is not a proper thing to construct and maintain canals on Government land in the interest of irrigation. But I have said all I care to say.

I stated when I began that if this were the end of the proposition, even if it involved a vastly larger sum, I should not object to it, but I believe that it is only the beginning. I can see no reason why this appropriation should be made to construct a reservoir for irrigation purposes in one State and not made from time to time in all the States and in all the places in all the States where irrigation may require the construction of similar reservoirs. The Senator knows I have no prejudice against his State. I spend a part of every summer there, and it is the most fascinating spot on earth to me; but what I dread about this business is that it is the committal of the Government to a principle which I believe to be paternalistic and wrong, and which will involve the expenditure of countless millions of dollars before we are through with it. It is a bad time and a bad way to enter upon such an expenditure.

Mr. President, I have said all I care to say about it. I have taken too much time. I expect that this appropriation will pass. I can not vote for it feeling as I do, and in view of the action which I took in a former Congress, I simply wished to state briefly some of the reasons why I object.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I do not believe that the General Government has any right to go into a State and build a reservoir for any purpose without the consent of the State. The General Government did go into the State of Minnesota, I believe, and build a reservoir for the purpose of aiding commerce, and I suppose the Government might go in with the consent, of course, of the State of Minnesota. I am inclined to think that the reservoirs built in Minnesota were legitimately built under the power of the Government with reference to commerce; and if this reservoir is to be defended at all, I suppose it is to be defended on that ground. I do not see, however, that it is at all inconsistent with the retention of this water, so that it may not disturb the rivers and render commerce impossible because of the breaking of levees and all that, to use it for irrigating purposes after it has served its first purpose.

There is one principle that the arid States will never surrender; that is, that the water belongs to the State and that the General Government has no control over it. The nonnavigable waters of the State are the State's property, and it is so essential to us in the arid regions that the State shall control it that we would never consent, no matter how tempting the proposition might be by the General Government, to allow the Government to control those waters. For that reason the Senator drafting this proposition put into it a proviso that the water shall be released at a certain time of the year.

I do not know whether it is a wise thing to do or not. If the General Government should attempt at any time to assert control over the water, I should say it was an exceedingly unwise thing to allow it to be done. I am sure that the State which I in part represent, if called upon to grant to the Government the right to build a reservoir on its soil, would insist that the Government should not control the water in the slightest degree; that while it may impound the water for a time, it should certainly let the water loose when the time comes for irrigating use in the State.

It seems to me if the time ever comes when the General Government proposes to do anything for the States in that line the proper way will be to make appropriations to the State. Whether that will ever come or not I do not know. I do not believe there is any great danger from the amendment that the Government will be committed to any large expenditure of money. I am sure of one thing, that while I represent Colorado, in part, I shall never myself favor the Government taking any hand in building reservoirs in the States.

If the Government is willing to donate to the States money for that purpose and leave us untrammelled and unhindered in relation to the use of the water, we would accept it. If the people in Wyoming are willing to take the chances on this, I have no objection. I think it is perhaps sufficiently guarded by what the Senator has put in there, and made with the distinct understanding which the Senator announces that he expects the Government to get permission from the States to build it. I do not see that there is any great harm or any great danger.

I only want to say that we do not intend, under any circumstances, to let the Government of the United States assert any right to the nonnavigable waters in the arid States.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I have heard many times of very considerable fortunes being squandered after a man's death by the lawyers employed to administer the estate, but I have never before heard of a person's fortune being squandered by the lawyers before he was born. Very much of this debate, especially the legal part, it seems to me, is very premature. We have yet no reservoirs, and, indeed, we can have none until, first, Congress authorizes it, second, the States interested give consent, and third, the Government proceeds to build.

We have now before us two plain, clean-cut propositions, not subject at this time, it seems to me, to very technical constitutional questions. The first amendment provides that according to a survey by the proper Government officer, detailed for this especial purpose, we adopt his report and build a reservoir in the State of Wyoming. It provides also that the water shall be under the control of the State during certain seasons of the year, i. e., from July 1 to October 1.

As to the second section of the amendment, it provides for preliminary surveys in certain States, and I invite the attention of the Senate to the language of the provision. We are asking that the United States, through its Corps of Engineers, shall send out competent persons to make surveys and reports upon what? "The cost, practicability, and desirability of constructing such reservoirs and other works necessary for the storage and utilization of water to prevent floods, overflows, and erosion of river banks and levees and for the reinforcement of the flow of streams and the raising of the water line therein during drought and low water, and to utilize the water so stored, where practicable, for irrigation, mining, or domestic purposes."

It is a well-known rule that the Government constructs no public works in any State until it has proper jurisdiction, so that every State has it within its own hands to grant or not to grant the jurisdiction. So I think that point is well covered, and no State need fear the danger of having unwelcome reservoirs thrust upon it.

In the point of the use of the water by the States and the Government, respectively, the Government seeks, first, to keep back the water at flood time, and thereby prevent the overflows, erosion of river banks, etc., and second, to have it discharged at low-water time, when it can reinforce the streams. Mr. President, every person who understands irrigation knows that this matter will, as between States and the Government, thus take care of itself, I might almost say, automatically. The time when the water is needed in the streams below is just the time when, if used for irrigation, it would reach there. The time when it should be stored and kept back from the streams to prevent high water is just the time when it should be kept back in preparing for irrigation.

This proposition could justly and legally stand in the bill if it were made upon the principle of providing for irrigation alone. But it does not stand upon that. When the river and harbor bill was under consideration three years ago, we came in here as we had a right to do, asking that there should be a preliminary survey made on a few reservoir sites, and it was done. We have waited three years to get the result. The report made by an officer of the Army, who had no interest in irrigation, confirms the belief that these reservoirs are useful for irrigation.

The report shows that there are 1,500 miles of the Missouri River navigable above Sioux City; that the water we propose to impound would strike the river at Fort Benton, and that if the water should be stored according to the several reservoirs the engineers have surveyed, a flood as far down in the Missouri as Sioux City would be impossible. It also shows that water during the dry time would be very largely augmented, raising the water line sufficiently to permit shipping many times in the year when and where it is now impossible.

If the importance of these proposed amendments were measured by the amount of money appropriated, there would scarcely be any need of troubling the Senate at this time to consider it. This, however, is not the case. The sum of money involved is insignificant, but the improvement it seeks to inaugurate marks the possible beginning of the end of destructive floods on the Missouri River, the protection of the millions of property which these floods always menace and frequently destroy, and it also means the beginning of an extra developing which will result in the restoration of the water transportation on this river and bringing its benefits to the thousands of settlers who will be enabled to occupy the waste lands which now border this river.

Results as beneficent and important as these are worthy of consideration. In order to show my reasons for believing they can be secured, I wish to present the history of the estimate on which this amendment is based and outline the investigation which disclosed the facts on which my conclusions are based.

In the river and harbor act of June 3, 1896, is a clause which reads as follows:

For the examination of sites and report upon the practicability and desirability of constructing reservoirs and other hydraulic works necessary for the storage and utilization of water to prevent floods and overflows, erosion of river banks, and breaking of levees, and to reinforce the flow of streams during drought and low-water season, at least one site in each of the States of Wyoming and Colorado.

The investigation here provided for was intrusted to Capt. H. M. Chittenden, an able engineer officer in the Army, and now a lieutenant-colonel and chief of engineers. It was a fortunate selection, because of his having previously lived in the arid region, and was thus familiar with its conditions and problems.

As to the outcome of his industrious, disinterested, and impartial study, he has become an ardent advocate of the Government construction of reservoirs, basing his advocacy of this work on two benefits which the work will secure. These are:

First. That the large outlay now being made by the Government to prevent the destruction wrought by summer floods on the Missouri has been directed toward mitigating the effects rather than to removing the cause. He urges a change in methods by which, instead of seeking to control floods, we end them.

Second. That by holding back the floods from the river below they can be made use of by the farmers above, and that in this way large areas of public land now unproductive can be made valuable. The benefits to result from this alone he regards as justifying the work considered entirely apart from its effect on the regimen of the lower half of the stream.

So exceptional are both the opportunities and so beneficent the prospective results that he states—

That in no other part of the United States nor anywhere else in the world are there such potent and conclusive reasons, of a public as well as a private nature, for the construction of a comprehensive reservoir system as in the region here in question.

When this report and the reasons for the above conclusion were submitted to his superior officers, it received the following indorsement from Colonel Stickney, the eminent engineer in charge of the work of this Government on both the Missouri and Upper Mississippi:

The examination thus provided for has been made by Capt. Hiram M. Chittenden, Corps of Engineers, and I have now the honor to submit that officer's report of November 6, 1897, on the subject. Captain Chittenden entered upon this duty with zeal and with more than ordinary personal interest, and his very admirable report shows deep research and a close study of the subject in hand, involving the examination of a vast amount of data and of territory of wide extent. This paper is accompanied by 13 maps and diagrams and 20 photographs, and in view of the importance of the subject under consideration and the interest manifested by those to be most deeply affected by the establishment of these reservoirs, if constructed, I beg to recommend that all the accompanying papers be printed.

Captain Chittenden's report was transmitted to this office by Lieut. Col. Amos Stickney, Corps of Engineers, who has had large experience in connection with Western rivers, and attention is invited to his remarks touching the construction of these reservoirs.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

JOHN M. WILSON,
Brigadier-General, Chief of Engineers, U. S. Army.

HON. R. A. ALGER,
Secretary of War.

LETTER OF LIEUT. COL. AMOS STICKNEY, CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

ST. LOUIS, MO., November 13, 1897.

GENERAL: I have the honor to submit the following report upon the examination of reservoir sites in Wyoming and Colorado, directed by act of Congress of June 3, 1896, and assigned to my charge by letter from your office of August 1, 1896, with the view of having it carried out by Capt. H. M. Chittenden, Corps of Engineers:

In conformity with the above, Captain Chittenden was directed to make the examinations, and he has performed the duty as thoroughly as possible with the funds allotted for the purpose, viz, $5,000 from the contingent appropriation. He has made many personal examinations, and collected a large amount of valuable data from surveys and various sources.

His report, transmitted herewith, gives much information upon the subject investigated, and it is hoped furnishes the information contemplated by the act of Congress and instructions from your office. I concur generally in the conclusions reached by Captain Chittenden from the study and data set forth in his report. There are a few points to which I would invite attention. In the estimates of cost of work some of the units of price may have been taken too low, especially if work is contemplated under the laws and regulations governing hours of labor and manner of conducting Government work. The items for contingencies, in estimates based upon general examinations and limited preliminary surveys in a rough country, should be larger than what might be considered ample in localities where labor and supplies can be more quickly and easily obtained, and the work of a character and extent to be closely estimated. Captain Chittenden believes his estimates to be ample, and reference is made to them only as a matter of caution.

Special attention is invited to the conclusions relating to the purposes to be served by the construction of reservoirs. First and far above other reasons for their construction is their adaptability and value for industrial purposes; for irrigation of land, furnishing power, and for water supply for cities, and in this way adding greatly to the material prosperity and progress of parts of the country which, without such assistance, would be almost valueless and might remain almost uninhabited. As to their effect upon the flood conditions and low-water navigation of the larger rivers, it may be said to be comparatively small, and only beneficial to any considerable degree by an enormous expansion of the system.

The question of the propriety of the National Government entering upon the work of reservoir construction in the arid regions is one of public policy, which, it is believed, should be left for the consideration of Congress upon the facts presented. The construction of any one reservoir would of course affect only a limited region of country, but the effect of a system of reservoirs built wherever the conditions were favorable might be far-reaching, and not only add largely to the welfare of communities in their immediate vicinity, but indirectly affect many others.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

AMOS STICKNEY,
Lieutenant-Colonel of Engineers.

Brig. Gen. JOHN M. WILSON,
Chief of Engineers, U. S. A.

This report comes before Congress for action with the indorsement of every official who has examined it, and the propriety and wisdom of this work as a part of the improvement of inland commerce is recommended by the branch of the Government on whom Congress largely relies for its information in the items which make up this bill.

The report of Colonel Chittenden recommends an appropriation by Congress of $200,000, $100,000 of this to be expended in Colorado in the purchase of a site and in the preliminary work for the construction of a reservoir on the South Platte River. The second sum to be expended in the construction of two reservoirs in the mountains at the head waters of Piney Creek, in northern Wyoming.

In recommending the latter sites Captain Chittenden says:

My reasons for recommending the Piney system in Wyoming for first consideration are that it is least expensive, is least complicated in matters of right of way, the storage is now urgently needed for irrigation, and in all other respects it presents the fewest objections to successful development of any of the sites considered.

Captain Chittenden recommended two sites on this stream; this appropriation provides only for the smaller and least expensive. It is located on one of the tributaries of the Yellowstone, and it is intended to be the first of a comprehensive system of reservoirs to hold the melting snows and spring rains on the head waters of the Missouri River to protect dwellers along its course from their destructive action.

The situation on this stream is peculiar. Its annual flood nearly all comes from the head waters. On the great mountain range which its tributaries drain the snows which fall from October to May do not melt and run off gradually. On the contrary, they accumulate until the approach of summer. Then the rainfall of months rushes down the mountain sides, and its disappearance is only a matter of days. It produces what is known as the "June rise," and it fills the river at the time when the banks are soft and when every condition favors destructive erosion. When the flood subsides, the water supply for navigation has filled the channel with the trees which grew along them, has added material to the bars and reefs, so that not only are the opportunities of water transportation lessened, but the danger augmented.

For many years the Government has been expending large sums of money to alleviate these evils. We find in the report of the Chief of Engineers of the War Department for 1896 that $630,000 has been expended between Fort Benton and Carroll up to June 30, 1896.

We find the estimate for controlling the river at one city (Yankton, S. Dak.) is $296,000. (Page 326, volume 1, 1898.) We find the estimate of completing the work on hand on the Upper Missouri alone is nearly $2,000,000, while the appropriations for the twenty years from 1876 to 1896 amounted to about one and three-quarters millions.

The total expenditures during the year have been $108.20, mostly for freight liabilities of previous years.

WORK REQUIRED.

Stubbs Ferry to Greatfalls.—To complete the existing project for work between Greatfalls and the canyon next below Stubbs Ferry will require the expenditure of $162,646.50, of which $81,500 will be required to complete the work between Greatfalls and Cascade, 55 miles. One-half of the latter sum, say $42,000, can be profitably expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900. Its expenditure will increase the depth that can be carried between Greatfalls and Cascade, and will, it is hoped, result in an increase of the commerce of the "Long Pool."

Carroll to Sioux City.—For remarks on the general improvement of this reach, 1,300 miles in length, and on improvement at isolated localities within the reach, see Annual Report of the Chief of Engineers for 1897, pages 2184 and 2185.

In the act of June 3, 1896, Congress provided for work at the following localities: Bismarck Harbor, Pierre and Fort Pierre, Yankton, Elkpoint, South Sioux City, and Sioux City. At Bismarck Harbor, Pierre and Fort Pierre, and Sioux City work had been done in 1895, based in each case on a general plan, not yet approved, for the improvement of a considerable reach of river in the vicinity, the work done forming a small fraction of the entire plan, and the work done under the above act has also been in conformity with these general plans.

The same is true of the work done at South Sioux City in 1896-97, as it formed a part of the general plan for the Sioux City reach; of that done at Yankton during the past year, and of that proposed under present allotment for Elkpoint. To complete the work at all of these localities as provided for in the general plans would require the expenditure of $1,707,746.50 in addition to present funds and to the cost of improving 2½ miles of river above the mouth of the Big Sioux River, for which no estimate was made on the general plan for the Sioux City reach. It is understood to be the intention of Congress to continue improvements at these localities, viz, Bismarck Harbor, Pierre and Fort Pierre, Yankton, Elkpoint, and Sioux City and South Sioux City; and for the purpose of economical work an estimate of $675,000 is submitted, with recommendation that the allotment of this amount be left to the discretion of the Secretary of War.

No estimate for maintenance of the two ice harbors in this district, at Rockhaven, N. Dak., and on the Big Sioux River, South Dakota, appears to have been approved, though an estimate of $5,000 annually for their maintenance is given in annual reports of my predecessors. I would respectfully repeat this estimate, as being urgently needed for properly maintaining the harbors.

MONEY STATEMENT.

July 1, 1897, balance unexpended.....	$140,008.73
June 30, 1898, amount expended during fiscal year.....	90,076.73
July 1, 1898, balance unexpended.....	50,832.00
July 1, 1898, outstanding liabilities.....	16,517.02
July 1, 1898, balance available.....	34,314.98

Amount (estimated) required for completion of existing project:
Great Falls to Stubbs Ferry.....	162,646.50
Great Falls to Sioux City.....	Indefinite.
Amount that can be profitably expended in fiscal year ending June 30, 1900.....	717,000.00
Submitted in compliance with requirements of sections 2 of river and harbor acts of 1866 and 1867 and of sundry civil act of June 4, 1897.

APPROPRIATIONS.

The appropriations and allotments, exclusive of those for snagging, for the Upper Missouri River have been as follows:

1876.....	$20,000	1888.....	$200,000
1878.....	42,500	1890.....	300,000
1879.....	60,000	1892.....	150,000
1880.....	45,000	1894.....	110,000
1881.....	66,000	1895.....	40,000
1882.....	*115,000	1896.....	235,000
1884.....	140,000
1886.....	60,000	Total.....	1,581,500

Much of this money has resulted in no permanent improvement; the work has not been directed to that end. Instead, all that was accomplished was the temporary alleviation of conditions which the remedy we propose will remove. The money now being spent in pulling snags, dredging shoals, or riprapping banks will not be required if we control the floods.

The report says:

To take off the flood excesses at Sioux City, mentioned by Mr. Seddon in the first section of his memoir, would require a storage of, say, 48,400,000 cubic feet, corresponding to a reduction in stage of 2.8 feet. A storage of 100,000,000 cubic feet would probably give the very material reduction of 6 feet.

Allowing a reservoir efficiency of only 60 per cent, as elsewhere explained, and assuming that no one of the great floods of the Missouri had its origin in more than one-half of its watershed, it would seem that a reservoir system of 400,000,000 cubic feet, distributed over the watershed above Sioux City, would quite effectually control the floods of the river. This amount of storage is about the percentage of total flow required to be stored for irrigation, as hereafter explained, in order that the water of the arid region may be fully utilized. It must be understood that such a result can be predicted only from a system of reservoirs. The effect of any single reservoir would certainly be insignificant, but the combined influence of many might be very important.

The sums which have been paid out by the Government are, of course, but a small fraction of the amounts which have been lost by the people living along this stream. There is probably no other river on this continent, if in the world, where the erosive action of the floods is more rapid or the consequences more disastrous than along the Upper Missouri.

There is not a city along its course which has not been injured and to which its effects, as long as it remains uncontrolled, will not form a perpetual menace. Sioux City, Omaha, and Yankton are illustrations. And the injuries of the past are in turn but a fraction of the damage which will be wrought in the future as the growing population and expanding commerce of the West multiplies the towns and increases the value of the property which is subject to its dangers.

* $2,332.42 of this transferred to work below Sioux City.

‡ $161.53 of this afterwards allotted to snagging.

I believe it is conservative to say that it is not within the power of this Government to control the hundreds and hundreds of miles of this stream except in the way contemplated by this appropriation.

It is my belief that the policy which seeks to control this ruin is a proper one, and that as cities and towns along its banks multiply and commerce increases the value and importance of the bridges, wharves, and buildings which are menaced by its floods, the necessity for larger expenditures and more effective measures will be more and more imperative; for that reason I am in favor of the adoption now of a policy which looks to absolute safety, rather than simply to a temporizing policy which leaves the cause unrelieved.

A comprehensive system of storage will do more than control floods—it will furnish a supplemental supply for low-water navigation which will make nearly 1,500 miles of this river navigable in summer and autumn when crops are being moved and there is most need of water transportation.

On nine out of ten streams which flow into the Missouri the discharge in either May or June is greater than for the entire ten remaining months. Yet, even under these adverse conditions, the commerce of this river is of sufficient importance to warrant the expenditure of large sums in dredging out and removing obstructions from the channel in order that navigation may be continued during the period of low water. In the report of Captain Chittenden will be found a diagram of the discharge of the Missouri at Sioux City, which shows my statement to hold good for the lower end of the stream I am discussing. In the 1898 report of the State engineer of Wyoming, on page 108, will be found a diagram of the discharge of a typical stream where it leaves the mountains. To regulate this wide variation and to secure an approach to uniformity of discharge during the summer months should be the object of every expenditure for the betterment of navigation on this stream. There is only one way in which it can be done, and that is by storing the surplus during floods and releasing it during drought.

The report of Captain Chittenden shows that this is a recognized feature in the stream management of European countries, where this result is the sole and only end of reservoir construction and where every gallon of water is held back to be impounded.

The greatest benefit of these reservoirs will come, however, from the service they will render in reclaiming and rendering habitable a vast area of the national dominion which must otherwise remain uninhabited and practically of no value. It is not my purpose to enter into a discussion of the subject of irrigation, nor of its importance as a national question. The marvelous change in the resources of States like Colorado and Utah, which has resulted from the use of their rivers, is destined to be followed by still more wonderful and valuable results in the future.

Great as has been the change since the overland trail was the only connection on our own soil with California, the adoption of measures to utilize the rivers which now run to waste will witness a growth and development which will render it insignificant. There are many streams in the West whose valleys are now sagebrush solitudes which are destined to have a greater population than the entire State has to-day. Some day Congress will awake to the importance of fostering this work. When we get through buying and civilizing other countries we will take up the development of our own. On the part which reservoirs are to perform and their necessity in securing the utilization of Western rivers I quote the following from the Chittenden report:

But to utilize fully this element of national growth something more must be done than to take these streams as nature has created them. Already in many sections the natural flow has been used as far as it is practicable to do so. The only resource left is to store that portion of the flow that runs away in nonirrigation seasons and the surplus in times of annual flood and sudden freshets and make these also available for use. Not until that is done can a stream be said to be really utilized to the fullest extent.

Here, then, is a definite reason of the highest validity for the construction of reservoirs. It is of itself a sufficient reason, without any reference to the incidental benefits to the streams below.

Another particular and definite reason is flood protection along the streams immediately below the reservoirs. The destructive power of mountain floods is sometimes very great, and damages of vast amount have been wrought by them. The damage from these mountain floods will, of course, increase with the settlement of the country. Well-built, capacious reservoirs are an almost complete protection against such floods, and their usefulness in this respect will be an important consideration in their favor.

It may be set down as a rule, to which there are very few exceptions, that every artificial body of water created in the West, by which the surplus water of its streams is held back, will be a positive benefit. There are some who even go so far as to think that the influence of these stored waters, which would cause the streams to return to vapor in the near locality of their origin instead of flowing down to the sea, would have a marked beneficial effect upon the rate of precipitation in the West.

The inevitable tendency of Western development is therefore to store the waters of the streams, and the limit of development in this direction seems certainly to be nothing less than the final utilization of all their flow. As reservoirs are indispensable aids to this end, it will be seen that their construction as an element of growth of the Western country is not merely "desirable," it is absolutely necessary. The only question in this connection that admits of doubt or uncertainty is, What is the proper agency to do the work.

All that he said in favor of reservoirs as an abstract proposition can be said in behalf of the one selected. It is an ideal location, with all the benefits which any site could have and none of the drawbacks of some. A mountain lake, 2,000 feet above the valley to be irrigated, inclosed in granite walls and filled from the melting snows which cover the summit of the Big Horn Mountains, it combines security with availability. The water to be stored will be available for every settler in the valley below, because the reservoir is above all ditches. It is on public land; there will be no complication about titles.

The ability to utilize the waters of these reservoirs in irrigation adds to their value as an equalizer of streams below. As nature has left these streams the acreage which can be reclaimed is measured by what they carry in July, rather than by what runs to waste in May and June. If, therefore, we can increase the supply for the latter month, we at the same time augment the demand during the earlier ones.

So far as controlling floods is concerned, every gallon taken out of these rivers by irrigation in May and June is just as effective as if it were stored in a reservoir, and the reservoir by stimulating the increase of this early use doubles its effectiveness. As a means of flood protection, therefore, reservoirs in arid lands have more than double the value of those of equal capacity in humid districts.

It now remains to be considered the influence of irrigation and of the utilization of the stored water on the low-water discharge and on the navigation of the river below during the season of drought. In deciding this we do not have to depend on surmise or conjecture. Repeated measurements have shown that a large percentage of the water diverted from a river in ditches and spread over the ground in irrigation returns again in seepage. Measurements made last summer on one of Wyoming's streams showed that with less than 25 second-feet of water above the ditches over 85 feet had been diverted, the same supply having returned to be used over and over again (pages 63 to 71, State Engineer's Report).

By building reservoirs we enormously increase the volume taken out during floods; this returns later for users below, to be diverted by other ditches or to increase depth on shoals where steamboats ply below. The water stored would much of it return after use. It is a plan which will work alike for the upbuilding of commerce and for its improvement, which will create homes and farms where now none exist, and provide for those farmers the cheapest form of transportation from the interior of the continent to the sea.

So, Mr. President, the superiority of this work to usual methods of river improvement is that every dollar expended results in a permanent gain. These reservoirs once built are for all time. They will not only control floods but end their existence.

They not only protect and improve commerce, but create it.

That they will exert somewhat smaller influence on the Lower Mississippi is conceded. But the benefits are not confined to the Missouri alone. We well know the character of the Missouri is, such as to make its floods peculiarly destructive, and thus we are at the fountain head of trouble in working on the Missouri. To control these floods large sums have already been spent, immense damages already suffered. And this, too, while the region it traverses is as yet almost a wilderness. More effective methods in the future are absolutely necessary, and the conditions on this river are such as to make reservoirs the correct system from an engineering standpoint.

The June rise of the Missouri is as certain as the annual rise of the Nile. Floods have been sufficiently studied by engineers of the War Department, and their character is now well understood, and are discussed in the report of Captain Chittenden.

The greatest flood was in 1881. Page 79 of the report gives computation of amount of storage needed to have lowered the greatest floods to a safe level. A reservoir 7 miles long, 8 miles wide, and 31 feet deep would have lowered the river at Sioux City below danger point. The reservoirs for which Captain Chittenden prepared plans and estimates have almost an equal capacity. The greatest flood at Sioux City could have been controlled by a reservoir 55 miles square and 31 feet deep. The ones planned by Captain Chittenden are equivalent to one 47 miles square and 31 feet deep, and the estimated cost of these is only about $2,000,000.

Farther down the river, at St. Charles, we find that to keep the river down to a safe stage at the greatest flood would have required in the highest measured flood a reservoir of 147 square miles, which is only three times the capacity of the reservoirs described in the Chittenden report.

Reservoirs in the arid region, where stored water can be used for irrigation, are twice as effective in equalizing flow as reservoirs of equal size in humid regions.

Water taken from streams by ditches during floods is limited by low-water flow later. Storage increases late supply and makes possible large increase in volume, which can be profitably diverted by irrigating ditches during floods. In practice every acre-foot of flood water stored in these reservoirs will cause another acre-foot to be taken from the flood flow of these rivers by irrigation ditches and canals.

The influence of irrigation reservoirs on increasing the low-water flow of rivers is greater than influence of reservoirs of equal capacity in regions where it rains, for reasons well known.

On the average, 85 per cent of water taken out in direct irrigation in June returns to the rivers in seepage. Reservoirs increase this direct diversion and in this way augment volume of return water.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Wyoming allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. I am very anxious to support this amendment if I can see my way clear to do so, but I sympathize with the opinion which has been expressed by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], that there is a lack of constitutional power to authorize the legislation. I understand the Senator from Wyoming, however, to be now talking about some report in which it is made to appear that the water which it is proposed to collect in these reservoirs is to be so utilized as to improve navigation in the Missouri River. I have not seen any such report.

If there is any such report I should be very glad to have my attention called to it. I have looked at the report which was furnished to Senators by the Commerce Committee, and I have looked at all that appears therein. So far as I have been able to find in regard to this subject, and in so far as the report discloses any purpose of the reservoirs provided for in the second paragraph of the amendment, it is a purpose that has reference not to navigation at all, but only to irrigation and to other enumerated purposes, which, it seems to me, are beyond the power of Congress to legislate about.

Mr. WARREN. I will take pleasure in loaning to the Senator a copy of the report that I referred to, if he will kindly return it. The Senate and House, whom I have asked to reprint certain volumes, seem to consider that the arid region is too far away to be considered, even to print the reports, and therefore there are only a few copies left.

Mr. FORAKER. I have not time now, while the debate is progressing, to read the report, which seems to be quite voluminous, that the Senator hands me. I will take pleasure in looking at it when I have an opportunity. But in the meanwhile we need information at once. I will ask the Senator whether or not it is the purpose of this legislation to promote navigation in the Missouri River or in any other navigable stream. If so, then it will come within the power of Congress to regulate commerce. But if that be not one of the purposes of the amendment, I do not know of any constitutional provision under which the Government would have the power to enact such legislation. I would be glad to hear the Senator on that point.

Mr. WARREN. I will ask the Senator if the reading of the amendment does not cover it so far as it goes?

Mr. FORAKER. No; as I read the amendment—

Mr. CARTER. Will the Senator from Wyoming yield to me merely for the purpose of making a suggestion?

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator wait until I answer the Senator from Wyoming? The amendment on page 84, after providing authority to the Secretary of War to do certain things in the way of making preliminary surveys, etc., reads as follows:

Such reservoirs and other works necessary for the storage and utilization of water to prevent floods, overflows, and erosion of river banks and levees, and for the reinforcement of the flow of streams and raising the water line therein during drought and low water, and to utilize the water so stored where practicable for irrigation, mining, or domestic purposes while it is in transit to replenish the streams during the season of low water.

In other words, this debate has proceeded largely upon that idea, as a concession at the bottom of the whole question, that the purposes are mining and irrigation and other domestic purposes, to use the language employed in this amendment.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator, I presume, does not object to incidental benefits of irrigation?

Mr. FORAKER. No; certainly not. I think that is quite well where you are legislating within the scope of the Constitution; if you can confer incidental benefits, well and good. Certainly it is within the power of Congress to legislate to promote navigation. All this legislation is upon that theory. But when it comes to legislation that is purely local in its benefits, if that be the primary purpose and really the only purpose accomplished, I do not see where there is any warrant in the Constitution.

If the Senator will indulge me just a moment, I wish to come into agreement with him if I can, but I can not unless some of these difficulties can be taken out of the way. In the report furnished us by the Commerce Committee under the head of "Reservoirs at the head waters of the Missouri River," on pages 316 and 317, there is found what the committee have to say in regard to this particular legislation, and among other things they quote a letter from the lieutenant-colonel of engineers, Amos Stickney, who made the surveys, in which, as I understand it, he does not undertake to point out that this will promote navigation, but only irrigation and local domestic purposes of that character, and this stream, Piney Creek, is spoken of in that connection as a typical mountain torrent. I do not think there is any purpose disclosed by the engineer, or in these surveys elsewhere, to make that mountain torrent a navigable stream.

Mr. GRAY. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio what particular stream the amendment applies to?

Mr. FORAKER. That is what I was trying to find out. Piney Creek is mentioned.

Mr. WARREN. If I may be permitted to answer, as far as the first system is concerned it is on what is known as Piney Creek, which flows into the Yellowstone and from there into the Missouri River at Fort Benton. So far as the second proposition is concerned, it provides preliminary surveys without locating points. It simply—

Mr. GRAY. Surveys for what purpose?

Mr. WARREN. Surveys to locate reservoir sites and report upon their practicability and use in storing water, to prevent the erosion of river banks, etc. I read it a short time ago. Perhaps the Senator from Delaware was not in.

Mr. GRAY. Is that the purpose of the survey declared in the bill?

Mr. FORAKER. Did the Senator from Delaware ask me a question?

Mr. GRAY. I was asking what purpose is declared in the bill for the survey.

Mr. WARREN. If it will not disturb the Senator, I will state—

Mr. FORAKER. I merely inquired for information.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I would be gratified to hear what is going on.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator from Delaware asked what is the purpose in providing for the surveys.

Mr. GRAY. As stated in the bill.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator can better understand, perhaps, by consulting the amendment in the bill. However, I will read from it:

The Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause preliminary surveys or examinations to be made of one or more reservoir sites in each arid and semiarid State, and report upon the cost, practicability, and desirability of constructing such reservoirs and other works necessary for the storage and utilization of water to prevent floods, overflows, and erosion of river banks and levees and for the reinforcement of the flow of streams and raising the water line therein during drought and low water, and to utilize the water so stored where practicable for irrigation, mining, or domestic purposes while it is in transit to replenish the streams during the season of low water.

Mr. GRAY. Then the survey is directed to be made in the arid or semiarid region, and therefore the primal and manifest purpose is to make the survey in the interest of a scheme of irrigation and not of navigation.

Mr. WARREN. If the Senator will permit me, not altogether, because in the arid or semiarid region are the head waters of the dangerous streams and dangerous floods that come down the Missouri and from the Missouri into the Mississippi.

Besides, in the arid region, high up in the mountains, floods are caused by the annual accumulation of snow. There may be 8 or 9 feet of snowfall in the winter, which melts and comes down in very large volumes, and is not only in flood but is periodical. Therefore, the storage of water can be better calculated.

Second. In the region where the water is stored for use, as it is proposed for irrigation, one reservoir practically provides three or four reservoirs, because taking the water from the reservoir out on the lands the soil takes it up as a sponge does water.

Later on perhaps 85 per cent finally finds its way back to the stream. So a reservoir in the arid region used for both purposes becomes practically three or four reservoirs in its capacity to supply water.

Mr. GRAY. I think, if the Senator from Wyoming will allow me, that a project of this sort should have to be very carefully masked in order to commend it both to those who doubt the constitutional authority of Congress to provide for a scheme of irrigation and to commend it to those agricultural classes in the East and Middle West who will in large part help to pay the taxes necessary to support such a scheme, and into whose agriculture will be brought, by this very expenditure, a very important agricultural competition.

There will be nothing in this bill which will at all assist the agriculture of the great regions east of the Mississippi, but they will be called upon to contribute their share in order to promote the fertility and the productiveness of those far-away regions in which they have no direct interest at all. I am speaking now of it as a measure that will commend itself to that sense of fairness and justice that must be always appealed to when a tax burden is considered.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut in the chair). Does the Senator from Wyoming yield?

Mr. WARREN. If there is any question the Senator wishes to ask, I will listen to it with pleasure.

Mr. GRAY. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. WARREN. I do not wish the Senator to inject a speech into mine.

Mr. GRAY. I beg the Senator's pardon. I am not in the habit of encroaching upon or abusing the courtesy of a Senator.

Mr. WARREN. I know that.

Mr. GRAY. But when I asked the Senator what the purpose of the bill was for which this survey is to be made, he must have understood that I directed my question to the point that unless it was for a purpose clearly constitutional there would be very grave objection. I wished to point out further that there is another grave objection in the tax burden on the country, and that, in a sense of fairness and equality and justice, the people should not be taxed by a measure of this kind unless it could be justified on some other ground.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 1 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (H. R. 11023) for the reorganization of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the unfinished business will be temporarily laid aside.

Mr. ALLEN. With the consent of the Senator from Wyoming, I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware upon what clause of the Constitution he bases the right of the Government to appropriate money for the improvement of rivers and harbors?

Mr. GRAY. On the commerce clause.

Mr. ALLEN. On the commerce clause?

Mr. FORAKER. We can not hear in this part of the Chamber.

Mr. ALLEN. On the commerce clause, the Senator says, which is the third subdivision of section 8, article 1. If a reservoir is constructed by the Government at the head of a navigable stream, a stream navigable in fact as well as in law, for the purpose of storing waters and preventing an overflow, which is an interference with navigation, and also for the purpose of supplying waters when the natural stream is too low to accommodate the entire navigation, is that not also in aid of commerce under the commerce clause of the Constitution?

The Senator says to me, "Yes." Would it make any difference, then, if the waters thus stored before reaching the channels they were intended to improve should incidentally aid in the production of agriculture? That is, suppose they were first poured upon agricultural land or used for mineral purposes, and then in the due course of their control were thrown into the channel in aid of commerce, would that destroy the constitutional power of the Government to appropriate money?

Mr. GRAY. I think not, but—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. WARREN. I will yield with pleasure, if the Senator will only speak so that I can hear him.

Mr. GRAY. I generally speak so that I am heard.

Mr. WARREN. The Senator's back was turned to me; that was all.

Mr. GRAY. Mr. President, I think the question of the Senator from Nebraska is best answered by saying that the whole matter turns upon the manifest honest purpose of the legislation. I do not use "honest" in any way to suggest that there is a dishonest purpose, but I think we have got to be honest with ourselves, and we ought not in legislation to play tricks upon our own understanding, and while seeking to accomplish one purpose, which is the main and the moving one, attempt to use a power of the Constitution that was intended for an entirely different purpose. I do not think that we should take from the armory of constitutional power a weapon and use it for an unconstitutional purpose. I do not think that because we have the right to make war we should make it for an improper purpose.

Mr. ALLEN. No, I think not.

Mr. GRAY. I do not think because we have a right to improve the navigation of the streams and rivers in order that commerce may be facilitated between the States and between this country and foreign nations, that we have a right for some other and entirely alien purpose to spend the money of the people because there is a relation that the expenditure may have to the legitimate purpose of improving commerce. Incidental aid to irrigation is something like incidental protection. I do not object to incidental protection, provided it is not the purpose of the lawmaking power under that guise to accomplish an unconstitutional end.

Mr. ALLEN. I submit to the Senator that this is a cold question of constitutional law. Now, if in the construction of these reservoirs—

Mr. GRAY. I notice, if I may say again, that the purpose seems to be indicated in the language of the amendment by stating that the survey is to be made in the arid region.

Mr. ALLEN. Yes, sir.

Mr. GRAY. That is very much as if we said that in order to lay a tariff for revenue we would select those things to which incidental protection would be given. I do not think that for a person who has the view I have of constitutional duty it would be a proper exercise of legislative power.

Mr. ALLEN. Here is the longest stream in this country, the Missouri River, navigable for more miles than any other stream in the United States. It is proposed to establish a water-storage basin to restrain the water from the mountains, the source of the river, rising, I think, in three small rivers, so that the flood will not interfere with navigation during certain seasons of the year, and to utilize the water thus stored at other seasons of the year in aid of navigation. It is proposed also that the water shall be used for agricultural, mineral, and domestic purposes.

Now, if 60 per cent of the use of those waters were found to be of value in domestic purposes or in purposes that might be said to be unconstitutional, in the language of the Senator from Delaware, and if 40 per cent of the use were constitutional or in aid of commerce, would that violate the Constitution? Would it be any the less in aid of commerce under the commerce clause?

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I feel that I am entitled to proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). The Senator from Wyoming declines to yield further.

Mr. WARREN. I do not decline to yield; only I see another colloquy coming, and when lawyers get into a debate on constitutional questions we poor laymen have very little room.

Now, the Senator from Delaware says we ought to be honest with ourselves. He has given us an example, I think, of his honesty when he says he does not desire irrigation to go on any further, because it may compete with some Eastern farmer. If that is the ground this is to be put upon, then I submit that we had better open another line of argument or presentation of the case.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator does not want to misrepresent me, I know.

Mr. WARREN. I do not.

Mr. GRAY. I said one of the effects of the legislation, which I thought was unconstitutional from my point of view, would be to impose an unequal burden upon the farmers east of the Mississippi; that is all.

Mr. WARREN. I have here in that same line a petition which was sent to Congress—the Senator to whom it was sent very considerably sent it to the Committee on Irrigation—in which the petitioners take the ground that no money should be expended in the arid region because there is too much farming in the West already, and that the Eastern farmer is suffering because of the growth of the West.

Mr. GRAY. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. WARREN. I desire to say that in this case we are not in competition with the farmers of the East. It is simply that we have a people there in the arid and the semiarid region who are giving to the United States over 96 per cent of all its gold produced within its borders; 99.9 per cent of the silver; 57 per cent of all the copper; 70 per cent of all the lead, and other minerals accordingly. They raise 55 per cent of the sheep and 57 per cent of the wool and a large percentage of the native cattle and horses. They are engaged in producing something and bringing it into the world that does not come from shinning around in barter and trade, living off of each other and loaning money at a usurious rate. They are producing something from the ground that adds directly to the nation's wealth, and in order to go on with the production of these metals and these minerals it is necessary to raise some of the heavier articles that come from the farm near where the mining is going on.

Why, my dear sir, transportation itself protects the Eastern farmer. We desire an opportunity to raise some forage for the pack mules that are bringing the sacks of ore out from behind the mountains. We must have certain food and forage products raised near our mines.

The Senator says we are only going to an arid and semiarid region with our reservoir building. Can the Senator tell me of any other place where there is such an opportunity for reservoirs? I will cite the Senator to a reservoir site, and I will show him the picture of it here in the report of a Government engineer, where by building a dam a little higher than the highest feather on the Indian on the top of the Dome of this Capitol, the dam would still not be as wide across the top as it is high, and this dam would make a lake or great inland sea behind it so large that you could pick up the whole District of Columbia and add a part of the State that the Senator so ably represents and throw the combined mass over into the lake that would have there been formed, and it would look like a fishing boat on an ordinary mill pond.

That is why we say we should go into the arid and semiarid region in order to impound the water that we may reinforce the streams and make the streams navigable.

Nature has done most of the work for these proposed reservoirs. It remains to simply cover the gap where the water has worn a narrow gorge through high rocky ridges of mountains and then fill the valley behind.

Mr. GRAY. Now, Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. WARREN. I shall be delighted to yield.

Mr. GRAY. The Senator from Wyoming has in the zeal of advocacy entirely mistaken and misrepresented the position that I have assumed. I do not look grudgingly at the development of the West or its resources, mineral and agricultural as well, but I only called attention to the fact that it would impose an unequal burden of taxation to develop the agricultural resources of any part of this country at the expense of another, and that the exercise of which I conceive to be an unconstitutional power would result in just that thing and justify the wisdom of those who made the great charter of our Government in withholding from the Government the power to thus discriminate.

I welcome every advance made by the part of the country, teeming with great resources, from which the Senator comes and which he so ably represents. Every addition that it makes to its own prosperity is an addition to the common weal. I know that. I do not envy him or grudge him his silver and his gold and his golden fleeces.

Mr. WARREN. Does not the Senator—

Mr. GRAY. Wait one moment, until I am through.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. GRAY. I do not grudge him, but all I want is that he shall be content with the bountiful gifts of Providence that have been with such a lavish hand distributed to that glorious country, and not seek to take a tail of taxation from the poor farmers east of the Mississippi in order to increase what has already so bountifully been supplied.

Mr. WARREN. Now, will the Senator from Delaware kindly yield the floor to me?

Mr. GRAY. The Senator is entitled to the floor. I am much obliged to him for yielding to me.

Mr. WARREN. Does the Senator think the Western people do not pay their share of taxation? Is that the proposition? I take up the river and harbor bill and I look it over to see what it contains. I find that there are certain States—some nine of them—not mentioned there at all in that great bill except in this proposed amendment. Here are Nevada, Colorado, Wyoming, Montana, Utah, Nebraska, Kansas, South Dakota, and North Dakota. Does the Senator think that those States escape taxation, and that they are not taxed to pay this river and harbor bill improvement that is going on in New York Harbor, and in Delaware, and in New Jersey, and all about the East?

I find in looking over the bill that for the subdivisions of the United States there are more than $30,000,000 appropriated by the bill. I find that of the nineteen or twenty-two political divisions covering the western half of the country there is a paltry and measly sum of $2,000,000 only. I find that by drawing a line from north to south through the United States, leaving about one-half on the west and one-half on the east, one half gets two million, the other half twenty-eight million; the one half including the Pacific, the other the Atlantic coast; and who will say that the Pacific coast is not a promising field of commerce or that it will not be the most important of the two oceans in the hereafter?

Now, take the entire Pacific coast. Take the Gulf of Mexico from the west around to Galveston and we have as much coast west of us as we have on the eastern line, and we have but $2,000,000 appropriated for it in this bill, while $28,000,000 or so are appropriated for the other subdivisions. Then do you talk about the appropriation of only $100,000 being too much to go to the entire arid regions, and say that it is taking the money from the toilers of the East and expending it in the West? A matter of $100,000 to a country that is producing nearly all the mineral and that stands here always paying its share of the tax for all the other parts and parcels of this and every other appropriation bill.

Mr. President, I thank God that there has never been, to my knowledge, a vote cast here in the Senate by any representative from the State that I in part represent that has not been for river and harbor and other improvement bills, that has not been for the Navy bill, that has not been for every other bill that is for the betterment of the conditions of this country, no matter in what part of the country the money is to be spent. We do not stop to ask whether we are getting direct benefits or not, or whether we are paying taxes for something that may benefit somebody a thousand or two thousand miles away.

While talking about it, Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Delaware, who so ably represented us in Paris and who has so nobly stood by the Administration with reference to treaty matters, who is doing the fighting for the United States to-day in Manila? Take up the newspapers and find where your troops there come from. You will find there in the trenches and on the field of battle the First Wyoming, the First Colorado, the First Montana, the First Washington, the First Idaho, the First Battery of Utah, the First Battery of Wyoming, the First South Dakota, and the Second Oregon. In fact, the only place in the United States where it costs something to be loyal and patriotic to-day is filled with troops from the same despised and belittled arid region.

Mr. President, Senators can luxuriate within the comfortable walls of this Senate and safely prate about patriotism, but to the private soldier miles away from home and in a tropical fever-stricken country is left the true definition and appreciation of the term. These men shed their blood and lose their health, their limbs, and even life itself without a murmur while upholding the honor of our flag and the dignity of our country, and yet it is, here on this floor, insinuated that the inhabitants of the arid region are asking alms of the nation.

Mr. GRAY. Will the Senator from Wyoming allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wyoming yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. WARREN. I shall be delighted to hear the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. GRAY. I wish to unite with the Senator in admiration of the noble soldiery that has gone from his own State and other States in the West and that is upholding the honor of the American flag and the American name all over the world. But I want to remind him that his State was particularly honored by having those troops selected out of the many to take upon themselves this arduous service.

I represent a State which had as good a regiment, I venture to say, as was in the Volunteer Army, who were eager to go to Manila, and considered that they were very much aggrieved because other States had precedence and other troops were selected when they were left at home; but that does not detract at all from the honor that is due to the splendid soldiery who have gone to and are now in that region, giving their lives to their country and its flag.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I would not detract one iota from the glory of any of the soldiers of the United States. Every State has distinguished itself, as has the United States. As a whole, all have done nobly. That is true; but as reference has been made to the troops from Wyoming, I desire to say that it was not by the importunate request of the troops from Wyoming that they were sent to the Philippine Islands.

I desire to say further that there has been no demand made by those troops on the Administration for their discharge. Those men stand there simply asking what they may do to uphold the glory of our flag and the honor of our country. They do not ask when their time may expire or if the treaty with Spain is signed; they do not say, "Come bring us home that we may spend the summer in our own land." They simply ask, "What can we do for the nation?" That is all.

Now, to come back to the river and harbor bill, which is so sanctified by constitutionality, in the minds of some lawyers who happen to be opposed to this particular item, that it must be approached with hats off. I maintain that the river and harbor bill may be dumped into the wastebasket this morning and the country go on just the same. There is not a single dollar in all the twenty-eight or thirty million dollars carried in the bill, exclusive of the Nicaragua Canal and nearly one hundred and fifty million including it, that we can not get along without expending.

Nobody is subsisting on it; nobody's distress is relieved by it. What is it, then? It is simply a dividend declared by this nation and distributed over it for the benefit of trade and commerce. That is all there is of it, and there need be no concealment. If it was truly a river and harbor bill, Simon pure, to improve some river or harbor most necessary for ships to go in and out through, we would not find 15 or 16 rivers and creeks that we had never heard of before and we can not find on any official map generously provided for with appropriations in this bill. Not at all.

We would simply appropriate now the $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 adequate to make and maintain a sufficient harbor at New York; at some other time go up to Delaware; and at some other time to the Mississippi River, and so on. But this bill might just as well be understood as a batch of appropriations for general improvement of trade and commerce, for the public understand it; we might as well admit it and be honest with ourselves.

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] doubtless thinks this river and harbor bill has been extended far enough already to enable its friends to secure votes sufficient to pass it. I call his attention to the fact that when the last river and harbor bill was passed it owed its life, its passage, and final consummation to the votes of Representatives in this body from the arid region and to Senators who had not a dollar's direct interest in a river and harbor bill for their own States, and never had a dollar's interest in such a bill. It was well known when we were considering the last river and harbor bill that it would be vetoed. We had the power then and there to stop the passage of that bill. We had nothing in it, but we were willing that the trade and commerce of this country should receive the benefits from it.

Here is a proposition now which declares on its face exactly what it is. We do not come in here stealthily and in the darkness of the night. We came here three years ago and said: "Send a man out, survey at least two reservoir sites, and report upon the practicability and desirability of storing water in the interest of navigation."

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator permit me?

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. RAWLINS. In view of the statement the Senator has just made, that this river and harbor bill is a declaration of a dividend, and not founded upon any duty or public necessity or right to make the appropriation, does not the Senator think that it would be better to eliminate those small items pertaining to the arid regions which are of questionable authority, and also at the same time let the entire bill go by the board? Does he not think the public interests would be far better subserved in that way than for us to try to get anything for the section of the country in which he and I live?

Mr. WARREN. I desire to say that when we become thoroughly convinced that the river and harbor bill shall confine its lines to the Missouri River, notwithstanding the wants somewhere else, and that is to be a close corporation, then I shall be glad to join that Senator in suspending operations on the line of river and harbor appropriations until such time as we can get a broader basis to stand and work upon.

In my short life in this Senate I do not know that I have ever seen a river and harbor bill or a sundry civil appropriation bill made up here when some Senator did not rise in his place and make an objection to some item on the ground that he did not consider the allowance of the item constitutional, or he thought did not belong to that particular bill, or was not strictly under the rule, and so on and so forth; but, as a general rule, the Senator who does this is the chairman of the committee who is responsible for the bill.

We have, however, the rare spectacle here to-day, Mr. President—perhaps not an unprecedented one, but an unusual one—of having a bill reported from the largest committee numerically in the Senate, and one that certainly is second to none in ability, and when that committee comes in here with it and with an amendment which they say is in order, we find some other Senator who is opposed to a particular item rises in his place and undertakes to test the question on the point of order. Such a proceeding is amusingly unusual.

Mr. BACON. I desire, with the permission of the Senator, to ask him a question.

Mr. WARREN. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I ask the Senator whether or not I am correct in my understanding that a large proportion, if not the larger proportion, of the lands which are benefited by this proposed irrigation are not lands belonging to the Government?

Mr. WARREN. Yes. I desire to say, in answer to the Senator from Georgia, that this appropriation could be defended entirely, and it would be desirable entirely, on the line of the United States taking care of its own. The United States has to-day not, as quoted a short time since, 800,000,000 acres of land, but it has something less than 700,000,000 acres—exclusive of Alaska—of public domain, and of that land there are nearly 600,000,000 acres that are arid and worthless to the United States and comparatively so to everybody else unless some way is found of getting the land and water together so that the land can be irrigated and reclaimed.

The laws of the United States to-day are not adapted to the arid regions. They are based upon the conditions which exist in Iowa, in Kansas, in eastern Nebraska, and other places, where a homesteader has simply to settle on 160 acres, to turn over the soil, plant his seed, and in a year he is in possession of a crop with which he can support his family.

The arid lands of the United States are not in such condition that homesteads can be made upon them. The law has not been enlarged at all. The settler gets 160 acres, it is true, but he can not produce anything until he has brought water thereupon.

There is no use in dodging the question. Something has got to be done on those lands of the United States if they are ever to be made habitable.

Mr. President, I will immediately take my seat and not undertake to argue the question if we are to be put upon the basis that the protection of the Eastern farmers requires that no benefits shall be extended to the Western farmers. But I am surely glad of one thing, and that is to see my friend the able Senator from Delaware getting down to the point of wanting to protect somebody and something, somewhere and at some time, for I remember that when the Dingley bill and other revenue bills were before the Senate the Senator from Delaware wanted to have everything wide open.

He wanted competition for the whole world. He wanted to let the wool of Australia and South Africa in to compete with the wool of the arid regions, and now he would like to protect the Eastern farmers against the Western farmers—quite a change in his creed! I am very thankful for even that much in the way of reformation.

Mr. President, this arid-land question is no new thing. It is no Utopian scheme. We have knocked at the doors of Congress for years and years for relief. Some years ago I made the first speech I ever made in Congress, and the longest one I ever made anywhere, in support of the bill to cede the arid lands to the States in which they lie; but that proposition met with no generous response.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who is now so suddenly awakened to the view that we ought to cede the arid lands to the States—and I regret his absence from the Chamber at this moment—has sat in his seat this winter and allowed a bill to stand upon the Calendar to cede a matter of 5,000,000 acres of land to the States to go uncared for. He has not attempted to pass it nor offered to help pass it, notwithstanding his theory in this regard.

Down in the Committee on Public Lands you will find bill after bill—not less than half a dozen—which I have introduced, asking for the cession of the arid lands, in whole or in part, to the States, so that the States may go on and build the reservoirs and reclaim the lands. You will find there not less than a dozen bills, of greater or less size and length and breadth, to secure the object of reclaiming our lands, but they are quietly sleeping in the pigeon-holes of that committee room. The United States owns these lands. This one reservoir which it is proposed to build is located upon United States land and inside a forest reserve, and the most of the land surrounding it on all sides belongs to the United States.

We are asked, Where will this reservoir proposition and appropriations therefor end? The matter being now brought to our attention, where will it end? Sure enough! Why, it may end when we get to the report of this engineer. He may report adversely, and if so, there it will end. Mr. President, I am one of those who, while I may not have great confidence in myself, nevertheless have confidence in the men around me. I think they will take care of this problem.

I am one of those who believe that the Senators who come after us will have sense, economy, and judgment. I am willing to submit to the hereafter. We are asking now simply for an appropriation of $100,000 for the benefit of 17 States and Territories of the United States, occupying more than two-fifths of its area. This is only tardy justice to a region of country that seldom asks and more seldom receives the attention of the Congress of the United States.

In other countries the building of reservoirs of mammoth size and cost is approached without misgivings, as instanced by the reservoirs of India, some of which have cost $5,000,000 each, and still later as evidenced by the article in the Century Magazine of this month entitled "Harnessing the Nile." This proposition is one whereby the British people propose to build in Egypt a reservoir to cost $20,000,000, and yet $100,000 is all that the present measure contemplates for immediate expenditure in this line by the United States.

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, I had the floor about an hour and a half ago, and, without yielding it to anybody, I lost it, and it will always remain a mystery to me exactly how it was taken away from me.

Mr. GRAY. I would not say that your loss is our gain.

Mr. ALLEN. I do not know but that would be admitting the truth. I do not know that I ought to say anything now, and yet, Mr. President, the Constitution has been brought in here for discussion; and in view of the fact that recently that appears to be quite an important document, I do not know but that it is entirely proper for me to discuss it from my standpoint.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], who first discovered there was a constitutional objection to this portion of the bill, took a slight shy at that document, and then ran away. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER] immediately discovered that the Constitution was about to be invaded, and while he was somewhat in doubt as to whether he would support this particular part of the bill or not, he desired the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] to explain to him a seeming conflict between this provision and the Constitution. The Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] completely broke the halter and got entirely away when he came to the constitutional objection.

Mr. President, it is a common thing to invoke the Constitution. Whenever you want to do a thing in this Chamber or whenever you do not want to do it, it is equally convenient to invoke some provision in the Constitution. The Constitution of the United States and Thomas Jefferson have been compelled to do more duty in the Senate during the last six years than all other instruments and individuals combined. I have seen Senators in this Chamber undertaking to put through a bridge bill invoke Thomas Jefferson in aid of it, and I have seen other Senators opposing the passage of such a bill invoking the Constitution in opposition to it. So it has been Thomas Jefferson and the Constitution and the Constitution and Thomas Jefferson from day to day.

The Senator from Wisconsin discovered a difference between an appropriation to improve some river or harbor and an appropriation—I will put it in broad terms—for no other purpose than to improve the arid lands of the Western country. Now, there is a fair issue. The Senator discovered that under the commerce clause of the Constitution we had power to appropriate money without limitation in aid of commerce to improve the rivers and harbors so that they may be navigated more easily; yet the Senator from Wisconsin, the Senator from Ohio, and the Senator from Delaware, to uphold the untenable positions they have taken here, are compelled to take the position that Congress can not appropriate a dollar in aid of the origin of commerce itself; that is, you can appropriate money to carry the thing when it is created, but you can not appropriate a dollar in aid of its creation. That is the absurdity; that is the position that is taken.

SEC. 8. The Congress shall have power—

This is familiar language—to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes.

That is the provision of the Constitution under which this power is claimed to exist—the power to regulate commerce between nations and the States and the Indian tribes.

What is commerce? Is it simply carrying articles upon ships or steamboats or upon cars? Is it simply traffic, the trading of jack-knives, the interchange of articles? Is commerce confined to those things, or does it not reach the creation of things that are themselves for exchange and to be carried? Does it not embrace the whole field of creating and carrying? I may be in error about this, but I have lived thus long and shall continue to live during the remainder of my days with the idea that it embraces the right to create as well as to carry.

Oh, Mr. President, it is a very nice thing for those who come from States which do not need irrigation, and are not concerned in it, to say that the Constitution raises an insuperable objection to the appropriation of money for irrigation purposes. The Senator from Wisconsin was perfectly willing that the arid and semiarid States should take those lands and improve them themselves. I do not doubt it. He wants this Government to escape the burden and the duty of improving and opening those lands to actual settlers and discharging its duty to the people of this country in putting them in a form that they can be utilized.

If those States which are receiving millions of dollars in the form of appropriations to improve their creeks and bays and rivers and estuaries and lagoons are willing to take upon themselves the responsibility of improving them at their own expense, then those of us who live in the semiarid regions will be willing to take upon ourselves the responsibility of improving the arid and semiarid lands at the expense of our States. I have not seen thus far an appropriation of any consequence that has gone into the central States of the Union—into what may be called the Mississippi or Missouri basin.

The Senator from Wisconsin sees paternalism in this, and that is a nightmare that scares him. Pray, what is paternalism? I see the Senator from Wisconsin is now in the Chamber, and I repeat, What is paternalism? I suppose you must have a patriarch before you can have paternalism. It would be a blessing to this country if we had a patriarch occasionally, and a still greater blessing, Mr. President, if we followed him. This Government has been guilty of this kind of paternalism throughout its entire history. This Government has in Oregon to-day a ship canal which is owned and operated by the Government for the use of private individuals.

In 1853 the United States donated certain lands for the construction of the Illinois Central Railroad, reserving 5 per cent, and that road is to-day paying 5 per cent of its earnings to the State. But, Mr. President, that was done upon the express argument that every alternate section reserved by the Government of the United States was improved one-half by the donation made. Was not that a quid pro quo? Was not that paternalism? And what was it when the Government turned over the swamp lands of the United States to the different States of the Union? Was not that paternalism, sir? And yet the nightmare of paternalism is held up here to frighten Senators who are not frightened by the Constitution, to induce them to vote against the proposed amendment. A portion can be frightened by the Constitution, another portion can be frightened by paternalism; and between the two, like Jack Spratt and his wife, they form a majority to beat the amendment, for you remember it was said of Jack Spratt:

Jack Spratt could eat no fat,
His wife could eat no lean;
So betwixt them both, you see,
They licked the platter clean.

It is proposed between the nightmare of paternalism and the nightmare of the Constitution—if Jefferson himself does not get into the debate before we get through—to have a majority here to lick the platter clean, and this amendment will be defeated.

Mr. President, it is always better to be honest with yourself and not to invoke the Constitution where it is not properly invocable, not to speak of paternalism where there is no paternalism, not to raise subterfuges behind which to hide one's self, but to say in candor, "I will not vote for this measure because it will raise up competitive agriculture." I do not believe in sectionalism. I have uniformly voted against it since I have been in the Chamber. I believe in the entire Union and in every State in the Union, and the people of Delaware are as sacred to me in a general sense as the people of my own State; although, of course, I know my neighbors and they know me much better than I know the people of Delaware and much better than the people of Delaware know me. I believe in the exercise of national power. I hailed with as much delight as any other Senator in this Chamber the disappearance of sectionalism during our late war. It was the disappearance of sectionalism that compensated to me in some considerable degree the expenses and the heartburnings and the heartaches created by the war.

Yet I have seen from time to time, when the question of irrigation has been broached in this Chamber throughout the last four or five years, a disposition to take the Western farmer by the throat and, through the mediumship of high transportation and niggardly legislation, put him to the disadvantage of the Eastern farmer. It is small. I may be permitted to say it is contemptible. Let us open all this country. Here are more than 600,000,000 acres of arid and semiarid lands in this country, and if they were touched with a sufficient rainfall or sufficient waterfall they would blossom and bloom like the rose, richer by odds than the Valley of the Nile. Why not open up these millions of acres of land to the settlement of the poor people of this country? Why not give the poor who are congesting to centers of population and who are producing conditions that are inimicable to the welfare of the nation an opportunity to occupy and settle these lands? Are we to prevent this simply because to open these lands would be to bring more farmers into competition with the farmers of Delaware and Ohio?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I did not chance to be present at the meeting of the Committee on Commerce when the proposed amendment was adopted, but if I had been there I should have voted for it heartily and earnestly. I have heard a portion of this discussion, and I am not profoundly impressed with the idea which has been suggested that we are violating the terms of the Constitution in granting this relief that is asked for by the arid and semiarid States of this great country. It was my privilege not long ago to be a member of a subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce which made an investigation of that great problem which has been troubling this country so long, to wit, the Mississippi River.

I went to the extreme head waters, or nearly to the head waters, of that stream, and I found there some reservoirs which it is said were built to promote commerce. But if those reservoirs are performing that function, I was unable to discover that such was the fact to any very considerable extent. I traversed the Mississippi River to its mouth, and I found that the Government had spent and is continuing to spend millions of dollars to construct levees along that great waterway, and ostensibly they are built for the purpose of promoting commerce, but as a matter of fact they are constructed largely to prevent the overflow of millions and millions of acres of fertile lands which lie alongside that great river.

Mr. President, the people of the great West, where the rainfall is deficient, come here and in this river and harbor bill ask for a very small appropriation to make an experiment in the matter of building reservoirs which they contend are primarily for the promotion of commerce, but which to my mind are very much in the same position that the reservoirs are at the head waters of the Mississippi and the levees that line the banks of that stream. We are solicitous sometimes about the Constitution, and we are not solicitous about it at other times. I think we have transgressed the letter of that instrument, and perhaps the spirit of it, over and over again, and it may be that we are trenching upon it somewhat in adopting the amendments which have been proposed in this regard to the river and harbor bill.

But, Mr. President, it has been a tenet of my faith since I have been a member of this body to vote for almost every proposition that those great Western States have asked at the hands of Congress. I do not think they share in the benefactions of this Government in the same degree that the States of the East and the Middle States of this country share in those benefactions, and for my part I am willing to take a little chance regarding the constitutionality of any measure that the Senators representing those States ask for at our hands, and I am willing to take that chance to-day.

I rose, Mr. President, simply to say that this is certainly no greater transgression of the Constitution than when we are voting away the people's money to build along the Mississippi River and Missouri River what are called harbor improvements. That money is voted simply for the purpose of protecting the towns and the railroads that lie on the banks of the river, and for no other purpose on earth. We say it is designed to improve commerce, but as a matter of fact it is designed to protect the property of the citizens, which, if we did not make these appropriations, would be swept away and they would be reduced to the condition of abject poverty and of suffering. I vote for these appropriations. I vote for them cheerfully, and upon the same line of argument I shall give what little influence I have and my vote in support of these amendments which are asked for by the Senators from these great and mighty States of the West.

That is all I care to say, but I wanted to say this much in justice to myself, feeling as I do on this question, and feeling as I do that I am not transgressing the Constitution of the United States any more when I cast this vote than I do when I vote for a great many appropriations which are not challenged in this Chamber.

Mr. CARTER obtained the floor.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from Montana yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. FORAKER. Mr. President, when I took some part in this discussion some time ago it was with the idea that it was thought to justify this legislation solely upon the ground that it came under the power of Congress to regulate commerce. I was seeking for the facts with a view to voting intelligently. I was of the opinion then and am of the opinion still that under that power of the Constitution we do not justify this legislation. But since then another fact has developed which, I think, gives to Congress clearly the power constitutionally to provide this legislation. It has since developed, what was not then known to me, that nearly all this arid land which is to receive the benefit of irrigation is public land belonging to the United States Government. Clearly the Government has the inherent power to improve the value of its own property; and upon that ground I see no difficulty of a legal nature or of a constitutional nature in the way of this legislation, and I shall vote for it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, this question is not new. It has been under consideration since 1853. In that year in a publication quite celebrated at the time, entitled "The Mississippi and Ohio Rivers," by Charles Ellet, jr., a very exhaustive report was made favoring the construction of retaining reservoirs along the course of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers for the purpose of securing throughout the dry season of each year an adequate flow in the stream and at the same time to prevent the overflow during the wet season. The literature upon the subject is quite extensive. During the Fifty-first Congress a report was made to the Senate, known as Senate Report No. 929 of the first session of that Congress, in which a learned committee of this body reports favoring the construction of retaining reservoirs, not only at the head waters of the Mississippi River in the State of Minnesota, but likewise near the head waters of the Missouri River and along the course of that stream extending through the States of Montana, North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, Nebraska, and Missouri.

Mr. President, the question of constitutionality first raised by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] in the course of this discussion is of course a vital one. If there does not rest with the Congress of the country the constitutional power to do the thing which this amendment contemplates there can not be any justification in any argument based wholly or partially upon considerations of expediency or policy that can be invoked to justify it. It does seem to me that the action of Congress in authorizing the construction of retaining reservoirs near the head waters of the Mississippi River has passed the question of constitutionality beyond the limits of this Chamber. The action then taken has been steadily sustained without question in appropriation bills passed from year to year since the scheme was first inaugurated.

The Senator from Wisconsin suggests that overproduction may result from the reclamation of the arid lands in the West. In so far as that remark is germane or pertinent to the subject-matter under discussion it would hold that unconstitutional which would otherwise be in strict accord with the Constitution, because an incidental benefit would flow to citizens residing in the locality where the reservoirs were located.

Mr. HAWLEY. Will my friend the Senator from Montana yield to me for a moment?

Mr. CARTER. With pleasure.

Mr. HAWLEY. Has the order for the day at 2 o'clock been called?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business was laid before the Senate at 1 o'clock to-day, the Senate having met an hour earlier.

Mr. HAWLEY. I beg pardon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It was laid aside temporarily.

Mr. HAWLEY. It was laid aside temporarily.

Mr. SEWELL. I do not wish to interrupt my friend the Senator from Montana, but I suppose the Army bill is the regular order at 2 o'clock?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. At 1 o'clock to-day.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to submit a few remarks on that bill. It will not take over twenty minutes. I should like to do it now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana has the floor upon the pending bill. The Senate met this morning at 11 o'clock. Consequently the morning hour expired at 1 o'clock, when the Chair laid before the Senate the unfinished business, which was temporarily laid aside that the river and harbor bill might be considered.

Mr. SEWELL. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator from Montana, but I should like to have a few minutes on the Army bill after his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will recognize the Senator from New Jersey upon this bill.

Mr. FRYE. The conference on this bill is bound to involve a great deal of labor. It will take several days at the very least. It is exceedingly important that we shall complete the consideration of this bill to-day.

Mr. SEWELL. I desire to say that in my estimation nothing is so important to the life of the nation to-day as the Army bill, notwithstanding I shall vote for this bill and believe it to be of great importance. But I do want to submit some remarks on the existing condition of things in relation to the Army bill. I will not take over twenty minutes, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. FRYE. Is not the Senator from New Jersey willing that this matter should be settled first?

Mr. SEWELL. Yes; the present matter?

Mr. FRYE. Yes; the present matter.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. President, the question involving the incidental benefits that may flow to the country in which these reservoirs are to be constructed can not cast any light upon the question whether the action in and of itself is constitutional.

From 1853 down to this day able engineers in and out of the United States Army, with a force and logic that seem irresistible, have insisted that the proper way to secure a regular stage of water in the Mississippi River and to prevent overflows in the lower country was by the construction of retaining reservoirs upon the principle recognized in this amendment. That was the contention, Mr. President, before any arid country was reclaimed in the West or before anyone lived in what is now the great arid region on the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains.

When the dams were constructed at the head waters of the Mississippi for the purpose of securing a steady flow of water through that stream, the question of constitutionality was discussed, and Congress determined that the steady flow of water being an incident to and indispensable for the accommodation of the commerce in the river below, clearly justified the expenditure of public money in the construction of the reservoirs. We have now in the course of our national experience ascertained that these reservoirs may not only subserve the purposes of commerce, but they may be made beneficent agents in creating things to carry upon the river below to the sea and to foreign markets.

But here comes the Senator from Wisconsin with the suggestion that this might result in overproduction, because, forsooth, the arid lands when quickened by the touch of water are wonderfully productive. This same argument was used when we commenced to develop railroad facilities between the Mississippi Valley and the Atlantic Ocean. Throughout New England, Pennsylvania, New York, indeed all along this Eastern coast it was contended, and correctly, too, that the opening up of the vast Mississippi Valley, with its wonderfully fertile soil conjoined to the act of constructing quick and cheap lines of transportation, would depreciate the value of every acre of land along the Atlantic coast. That result has obtained, but who is to be heard to-day to assert that this has been a national calamity?

The industries of the East have become diversified. The productions of the farm have changed from wheat, oats, corn, and rye to vegetables and other farm products that are needed in the factories near by. So it will be with the great plains extending from the line of British Columbia south to the line of Mexico, that are capable of producing wheat enough to supply the entire world and that, too, without the possibility of a failure of crop.

Recently we have commenced to open out a trade with the Orient. Within the last year we have shipped 600,000 barrels of flour to Yokohama and Hongkong to supply a market that had never before been heard of in the experience of man as a wheat-consuming market.

Mr. MASON. We would have shipped more if we had had the vessels.

Mr. CARTER. The only limitation, as the Senator from Illinois suggests, upon the possibilities of that trade last year was found in the inability of the railroads to find shipping facilities on the Pacific Ocean to take the cargoes they delivered at the docks.

Mr. President, there are 700,000,000 people in that Asiatic country. The farmer of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, or Illinois can not make the shipment of his wheat to the Pacific coast, to be transhipped thence to the Orient, because the railroad rate will devour the profit before the car reached tide water on the Pacific. But we people who live on the slopes of the Rocky Mountains and beyond can produce the wheat to supply the oriental market, thus adding to our own wealth and to the country's general progress without taking aught from any man or any community.

I am astonished that at the close of the nineteenth century, with all the public schools and colleges and papers and educational facilities we have in the United States, a man can be found in the Senate Chamber who will insist that we may in the United States produce too many things to sell to our neighbors in the Orient and in Europe as well. Mr. President, if this theory had been consulted and had been permitted to act as the controlling factor in national policy, this country would to-day be limited on the west by the Allegheny Mountains. I have no patience with the proposition that this amendment should be defeated because its enactment might result in increasing the store of national treasure and our power to produce.

A trifling sum of money is sought through the pending amendment for the purpose of constructing a couple of reservoirs, and another small sum for the purpose of having surveys made to ascertain where other reservoirs may be constructed with profit. Let it be understood, and distinctly, too, that this is the entering wedge; that this is the beginning of a new policy—a policy that will result in staying the tide of destruction in the Lower Mississippi during the season of flood, and will incidentally and without additional cost to the Government cause thousands upon thousands of fertile fields and happy homes to be built in places that are now waste along the slopes of the Rocky Mountains. I think that the double benefit resulting from this course of action may well be considered with great favor by the Congress of the country.

We are making appropriations each and every year in the river and harbor bill for Podunk River or some other equally indefinite stream, or for the survey of streams that never can be made navigable. I have in mind, in the State of the Senator from Wisconsin, the Fox and Wisconsin rivers. The amount of money appropriated for the Fox and Wisconsin rivers in the course of the last twenty years would be sufficient to build reservoirs at the head waters of the Mississippi River or the Missouri River which would distribute water to millions and millions of acres of land, and would do more for trade and commerce in one year than ever will result from the Fox and Wisconsin rivers as agencies in our national progress.

Mr. President, according to my understanding there has not been a cartload of goods sent up or down the Fox and Wisconsin rivers in years.

Mr. FRYE. And never will be.

Mr. CARTER. And never will be. The appropriations add nothing to the wealth of the people along the shore except to the extent that the distribution of public money in the neighborhood may prove useful. There is no intention now, nor has there been for years, to make these rivers useful in aid of commerce, and yet the appropriations go on in a perfunctory way.

Here, sir, is a proposition to make an appropriation which will create an empire along the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains; which will make garden spots where waste places now exist; and yet this will only be one of the incidents connected with the entire operation. To-day there is complaint in the State of Nebraska, the State of Kansas, and in the State of Arkansas, I believe, that the waters taken out of those streams in Colorado during the irrigation season exhaust the streams and their dry beds only are exposed in the States below.

Now, Mr. President, a word upon that situation. This condition will continue to become more aggravated. The policy outlined in this appropriation will prevent the consummation of an event that is inevitable under present conditions. A controversy is upon the eve of being precipitated in the courts now between the States of Kansas and Colorado, growing out of the exhausting of the streams within the jurisdiction of Colorado. That results from the fact that the waters of the streams running down from Colorado are not stored. The irrigation season lasts, say, for three months. During that period of time every drop of water in the stream is used to irrigate a portion of the lands along the bank, and it is all taken out.

If you could store and retain the entire flow of the twelve months, the percolation through the soil would ere long leave a steady flow in the streams going to the sea through the States of Kansas, Arkansas, and Nebraska. This steady flow would fortify the river for commercial purposes in the dry season. These reservoirs would hold back the snow water and the floods in the season when the Lower Mississippi is menaced with destruction. I do not pretend to even approximately state the number of millions of dollars that have been spent in building dikes to control the waters of the Mississippi River and the lower country. Every few years the country is appalled by a sudden inundation of that region and by the destruction of life and property and the beggaring of thousands of people through the instrumentality of this river turned loose all over the section of country through which it flows.

If experience is worth anything, Congress may well turn to some other agency of control than the mere mud banks that have been thrown up along the channel of that stream year after year, only to give way when the moment of trial comes. The water will do no damage if it does not get down there. The water that constitutes a curse in the Lower Mississippi is a benediction to the people in the arid region along the slopes of the mountains. Why not keep the water where it will do good and keep it away from the place where it will do evil? That sums this case up in a nutshell. The attempt to make the reservoir at the head waters of the Mississippi constitutional while the reservoir at the head waters of the Missouri is unconstitutional because it is of some benefit to the people in the immediate vicinity is ridiculous and untenable. It can not be defended anywhere or at any time. The amendment should pass, and I trust it will.

Mr. FRYE. Now let us have a vote on both items, please.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT of Connecticut in the chair). As one?

Mr. FRYE. As one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the committee, on pages 83 and 84, down to line 18, on page 18, which will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 83, after line 13, the Committee on Commerce report to insert the following:

Reservoirs at the head waters of the Missouri River: For construction along Piney Creek, Wyoming, of three reservoirs, in accordance with the recommendations submitted in House Document No. 141, Fifty-fifth Congress, second session, $50,000: Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for such work and materials as may be necessary for the completion of such reservoirs, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $165,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated: Provided further, That these reservoirs shall be emptied, as near as may be, each year between June 30 and September 30, the discharge of stored water to be under the direction of the State engineer or other State officer especially designated for the purpose by the State wherein such reservoirs are located.

The Secretary of War is hereby directed to cause preliminary surveys or examinations to be made of one or more reservoir sites in each arid and semi-arid State, and report upon the cost, practicability, and desirability of constructing such reservoirs and other works necessary for the storage and utilization of water to prevent floods, overflows, and erosion of river banks and levees, and for the reinforcement of the flow of streams and raising the water line therein during drought and low water, and to utilize the water so stored where practicable for irrigation, mining, or domestic purposes while it is in transit to replenish the streams during the season of low water, and the sum of $50,000 is hereby appropriated to carry out the purposes of this section.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL. I now ask that the consideration of the Army bill be resumed.

Mr. DANIEL. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator from Virginia will not demand the yeas and nays. A vote by yeas and nays can be taken, if necessary, in the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The demand for the yeas and nays, the Chair understands, is withdrawn. The Army reorganization bill having been temporarily laid aside by unanimous consent for the consideration of the river and harbor bill, the Senator from New Jersey asks that the consideration of the Army bill may be resumed; and it is so resumed.

Mr. SEWELL. I will state to the Senator from Maine that I do not want to embarrass or delay the river and harbor bill, but I wish to submit a few remarks, which will take only a very short time, on the present situation in relation to the Army bill.

Mr. MASON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. SEWELL. Certainly.

Mr. MASON. I want to inquire if the Senate has disposed of all the arid-land question in the bill?

Mr. FRYE. Both of the items are disposed of.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. They are agreed to.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11023) for the reorganization of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, I was not one of those Senators who were particularly anxious for a war with Spain. I believed that Spain had answered our demands to a very great extent in connection with the government of Cuba. I never would have consented by my vote to a war with Spain until the incident of the Maine. That fired all hearts in the country and brought us all together, and the result was war. It would be hard to say to-day who blew up the Maine. The Spaniards ought to have made an inquiry. We ought to make an inquiry. I have very grave doubts indeed that the Maine was exploded by any act of the Spaniards. It might have been done by the Weyerlites, but it was not done by any authority of Spain. But that forced us into war. That was the guiding spirit. It may have been Spain.

It may have been the Cuban junta themselves. They had more at stake than anybody else in bringing on a war.

But the war came and with it great responsibilities. The President of the United States was authorized to arm, equip, and recruit a very large army, amounting last August to, I think, about 275,000 men. That army has been reduced one-half under the authority given to the President, and at his discretion. We are to-day, though, in my opinion, more in a state of war than we were before Santiago.

I never was in favor of the acquisition of the Philippines. I frankly say that I told the President the day after Dewey's victory, "For God's sake order them away from there; there is a population of 10,000,000 people almost uncontrollable." I said so from a knowledge of the situation. As a boy I was in the Philippines, a sailor, an officer of a vessel. I managed crews from Manila. I knew the people; I knew the situation. There are probably to-day half of them civilized and half of them savages, and a good many of them are pirates.

It will take from 25,000 to 30,000 men to occupy the Philippines. We have there just now about 21,000 men and 7,000 are going. We do not control anything outside of the lines of a field glass. We are cooped up practically in Manila. And yet there is opposition to the increase of the Army proposed to about 95,000 men. It will take in Cuba 20,000 men and in Porto Rico and Hawaii about 5,000 men. So our whole Army will be used in our colonial possessions, if you choose to call them so, or our acquisitions. We are not in a position to hold our own without a substantial force to do so.

Mr. FORAKER. Will the Senator from New Jersey allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. SEWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. FORAKER. The Senator has made several statements that I do not agree with, but he has just made one that I do not like to see passed by without now calling attention to it. He has stated that we will need 20,000 troops in the island of Cuba. I will ask the Senator if he is aware that the Military Committee, of which he is a member, has reported that we will need, according to the judgment of that committee, only 12,000. I should like to ask the Senator, inasmuch as he is a member of that committee and has made the statement he has, what we will need with 20,000 troops in the island of Cuba, saying to him, in connection with the inquiry, that I do not believe we will need any, or certainly not very many, judging from the conditions as they have appeared in that island since the protocol was signed. And if we do need any, by what authority are you going to keep them there after peace has been declared?

Mr. SEWELL. I will say to the Senator from Ohio that we have about 40,000 there.

Mr. FORAKER. We have 45,000 there now, according to your own report. There are no Spanish soldiers there any longer. Whom are they to fight? What do we need with an army of 20,000 in the island of Cuba? I want to say to the Senator that the turbulence and the violence that some people apprehended we would have in the island of Cuba after the protocol was signed has not occurred. On the contrary, the Cubans have shown a most remarkable self-control and have behaved themselves so as to excite the admiration of the whole people.

Mr. SEWELL. Well, Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio and I differ in our views in that respect. We have had peace there because we had a large force.

Mr. FORAKER. Although we may differ—

Mr. SEWELL. They are a turbulent people. They are constant revolutionists; they have been during all our history.

Mr. FORAKER. All I wanted was to ask the question, Is it because they have been a turbulent people in the past that you imagine we will need 20,000 troops there in the future? That is what I wanted to ask the Senator. Does not the Senator conceive that the Cubans had a just cause to rebel against Spain and to fight and to resist the authority of Spain in the island of Cuba?

Mr. SEWELL. I agree with that, Mr. President.

Mr. FORAKER. Is not that, then, a sufficient cause for turbulence and violence and war and outbreak?

Mr. SEWELL. They will think the same thing about the United States in a short time. We will have war with Cuba by and by.

Mr. FORAKER. That is the Senator's opinion. I do not entertain that opinion.

Mr. SEWELL. I say that is mine. I believe we will have just as much trouble with those people as Spain had and that it would have been better to let Spain have it.

Mr. WHITE. If it will not interrupt the Senator from New Jersey—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FAULKNER in the chair). Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SEWELL. Certainly.

Mr. WHITE. I will make the suggestion, in response to the inquiry of the Senator from Ohio, that possibly the presence of this large force in Cuba, as well as in the Philippines, is to further the cause of "benevolent assimilation."

Mr. SEWELL. Well, Mr. President, I do not want to go into a discussion of Cuban matters and the force there. I think that has been very properly reduced.

Mr. FORAKER. All I wanted was to know the ground upon which the Senator based his statement.

Mr. SEWELL. We can not to-day go outside of our own lines in the Philippine Islands, and the Philippines are a very large country. There is a very large number of islands there that we can not occupy. We will be in a continuous state of war there until those people are put down. If I were the President of the United States and had the authority, short, sharp, and decisive work would be what I would adopt, somewhat like the English in the Sudan. I would send a force there that would clean the country out, if necessary, and that is the cheapest way to do it in the end. War is, as our friend General Sherman said, hell. It can not be carried on peaceably. It can not be promoted peaceably. The shorter and sharper it is, the better you can get rid of it.

Now, Mr. President, I did not intend to take the time of the Senate very much except to submit some remarks in relation to the present Army bill, if the Senate will allow me.

The bill under consideration proposes to increase the Regular Army of the United States to a maximum of about 95,000 men, this increase being largely based on the increase of the number of men for a company and battery. The President is given discretion to reduce the number by the discharge of enlisted men when not required in the service. The bill is framed so as to give as large a force as possible to the number of officers provided for.

It increases the major-generals 3 and the brigadier-generals 6. It provides for 2 additional regiments of cavalry, which increases the officers 2 colonels, 2 lieutenant-colonels, 6 majors, 30 captains, 40 first lieutenants, 24 second lieutenants, and 1 veterinarian in each regiment with the rank of second lieutenant.

It changes the regimental organization of artillery and designates it as a corps of artillery, to consist of 24 field batteries and 144 heavy batteries. The number of men required for this corps is about 20,000, and this, after the most careful calculation, will give just a sufficient number of men to man the guns in the fortifications of our coast defenses, and will require to be largely increased in case of war. It is well known that we have been spending large amounts of money in the construction of the new batteries and the entirely new system of seacoast defenses; that the guns mounted are of the most costly description; that it is absolutely necessary that they should be taken proper care of, and that the men who are to serve them should occasionally be drilled in the practice of their use. These guns can not be effectively used in a hurry by men who are not thoroughly trained to the same. The best illustration of this fact is the difference in marksmanship between the men of our Navy and that of Spain in the late war.

We had been exercising our ships in squadrons and spending considerable money in target practice in the past two or three years, so that the men became so proficient that it not alone excites our admiration, but is favorably commented upon in all of the European navies. Guns that throw shells the charge of which costs several hundred dollars each time they are fired can not be used by men who are not entirely proficient in their service, and therefore all thinking men connected with the Army are satisfied that we should have this force for our seacoast fortifications and land batteries. More men will be required in the future for the guns not yet mounted and put in position instead of a reduction in the force. The light batteries are provided with 180 men and the heavy batteries with 120. The increase of officers in this arm of the service would be 7 colonels, 7 lieutenant-colonels, 21 majors, 98 captains, 102 first lieutenants.

The bill makes an increase of 5 regiments in the infantry service, and of officers 5 colonels, 5 lieutenant-colonels, 40 majors, 150 captains, 100 first lieutenants, 60 second lieutenants.

The total number of enlisted men proposed by the bill is 94,800 maximum, with a minimum, at the discretion of the President, of 56,564; officers, 3,497. This includes the Hospital and Signal corps.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SEWELL. Certainly.

Mr. LINDSAY. I desire to ask the Senator a question which involves a matter of some interest. I understand that he is addressing himself to the bill reported by the Committee on Military Affairs. It is reported in the public press this morning that certain Senators, not members of the Military Committee, in conjunction with other Senators who are members of that committee, representing both political organizations of the country, and with the approbation of the Chief Executive of the nation, have agreed on a compromise Army bill, and that it will probably be reported to the Senate to-day. If that be true—and I ask the Senator whether it is true—will the remarks he is now submitting apply as well to the bill which we are to have to-day or to-morrow as to either one of the bills now pending before the Senate?

Mr. SEWELL. I will state to the Senator from Kentucky that I believe what he states is perfectly correct, and that there will be a compromise on this measure; but I am making my remarks on the bill as reported by the Senate committee.

At the breaking out of the Spanish war the strength of the Army was about 27,000 men. Under an act of Congress passed for the general increase of the forces, both regular and volunteer, the same were augmented from May to August of last year as follows:

	Officers.	Enlisted men.	Grand total.
May:
Regular Army.....	2,191	41,994	44,125
Volunteer Army.....	6,224	118,560	124,804
Aggregate.....	8,415	160,514	168,929
June:
Regular Army.....	2,198	49,513	51,711
Volunteer Army.....	7,169	153,355	160,524
Aggregate.....	9,367	202,868	212,235
July:
Regular Army.....	2,327	53,931	56,258
Volunteer Army.....	8,638	203,461	212,094
Aggregate.....	10,965	257,392	268,357
August:
Regular Army.....	2,323	56,365	58,688
Volunteer Army.....	8,755	207,244	216,039
Aggregate.....	11,108	263,609	274,717

The maximum number in the Army in the month of August was 274,717, of which 216,029 were volunteers. This force has been reduced up to the first of this month to 134,453, the Regular Army at that date being somewhat less than 60,000 men.

The display of confidence in the President, under which he had authority to raise an unlimited number of men and to discharge them whenever the exigency was over, demonstrates that the Executive is to be trusted in carrying out the will of Congress. It is now proposed to give him a reduced number of men, with authority to still further reduce to about one-half that to be authorized.

When we take into consideration that the force required for the Philippines will not be less than 25,000, and in all probability 30,000 men; for Cuba, 15,000 to 20,000 men; for Porto Rico and Hawaii, about 5,000 men; in all, a minimum of 45,000 and a maximum of 55,000 men, the army proposed looks small indeed. The country is as much at war to-day as it was when we made the attack on Santiago, and with a more numerous foe on the battle line. The situation in the Philippines is a grave one and will continue to remain so as long as there stands up a division of counsel in the Congress of the United States.

To end this war prompt action by force is necessary, as they will become more aggressive from day to day and with more prospects of harassing our troops as the warm and sickly weather advances, which is now almost upon us. You can not handle these people in the same manner as you would more educated communities or those living in the temperate zones. They know very little except when they feel the strong hand of power. Anything that does not look in that direction is to them weakness on our part. I have never been in favor of the acquisition of this territory; but it is acquired practically by the treaty, and we must uphold the flag there for the honor and dignity of the nation. This can only be done by a strong force, and should be accomplished by short, sharp, and decisive action before our men become decimated by disease and as a necessity we have them returned to the United States, as we did from Santiago, utterly prostrated.

It is proposed to increase the Adjutant-General's Department by 8 colonels and 6 majors; the Inspector-General's Department, by 1 colonel, 2 lieutenant-colonels, and 6 majors; the Judge-Advocate-General's Department, by 1 colonel, 2 lieutenant-colonels, and 1 major; the Quartermaster's Department, by 2 colonels, 4 lieutenant-colonels, 6 majors, and 20 captains; the Subsistence Department, by 1 colonel, 2 lieutenant-colonels, and 12 captains; the Medical Department, by 2 colonels, 6 lieutenant-colonels, 10 majors, and 25 first lieutenants; Pay Department, by 1 colonel, 2 lieutenant-colonels, and 15 majors; Corps of Engineers, by 1 colonel, 2 lieutenant-colonels, 8 majors, and 28 second lieutenants; Ordnance Department, by 2 colonels, 3 lieutenant-colonels, 4 majors, 2 captains, and 6 first lieutenants.

The promotions in these corps are all to be taken by seniority, and in the lower grades from the officers of the Army. The increases proposed are very moderate in proportion to the organization, and are absolutely essential; they have been proposed by a board of officers, who have gone over the matter for some time carefully, and I think they rather underestimate the necessities of the occasion. The force in the Adjutant-General's Department will be barely enough to keep up with the business of that bureau; that of the Inspector-General's Department could be very largely and profitably increased, as our experience in the late war demonstrated that we wanted inspections more than anything else, and this corps was largely denuded by details and promotions to the front line, the vacancies occurring in it being filled by officers taken from the line.

In this connection I desire to say, in opposition to the proposition made by the Senator from Vermont as to an interchangeable staff, that these officers are appointed to these positions after having served about twenty years in the line. They are appointed from men that have special adaptability for either the Adjutant-General's corps, having been successful adjutants in the field, or for the Inspector-General's corps, having demonstrated their fitness in acting capacities in that corps on the staff of the different departments. Every man's status in the Army who has served to the rank of captain is known at the Department and by his fellow-officers. He is known for just what he is worth, and when he is promoted to a staff appointment it is in recognition of his special fitness and ability to fill the place.

The Senator may allude jocosely to the amount of influence necessary to appoint a staff officer; he has been Secretary of War, and is Senator, and his evidence on this question is entitled to great consideration. At the same time, I maintain that a thoroughly equipped man, who has had fifteen or twenty years of service as a line officer, and the bent of whose mind lies in the line of duty to which he is appointed on the staff, is a better man for the position than can possibly be obtained by changeable details from the line to the staff, which may destroy the efficiency of an officer for the former duty without making a good officer for staff service. It is all very well to say that this is the custom in continental Europe. It may be, and to a great extent is, but their armies are different from the one we have here, and we wish more simple regulations. We do not want the matter of details to be open to favoritism.

This proposed amendment of the Senator would make it so there would be a procession to Washington from the Army, either by the details of the General Commanding or the Secretary of War. If the present system of appointing men direct to these staff positions from the Army creates favoritism, then this proposed amendment would place it in a much more aggravated form. It is not suitable to our Army, and I trust will not be adopted. The same views will apply to the Quartermaster Department and the Commissary Department. These positions are filled by promotion in the corps, the lower grade, that of captain, being taken from first lieutenants of the line. The officers that have been appointed heretofore to these positions have been men who have been about fifteen years in service, and who, it may be, have filled the position of post commissary or post quartermaster for a series of years.

The increase in the Medical Department is very moderate and would not be at all in keeping with the necessities of the service but for the authority given for the appointment of contract surgeons for temporary service when imperatively necessary.

The increase in the Pay Department is on the same basis, except that the officer of lower grade, that of major, may be appointed from civil life, as has always been the custom.

The increase in the Corps of Engineers is an absolute necessity under any circumstances. If we were at peace to-day, we should increase this corps. The enormous amount of duties performed in connection with the rivers and harbors of this country, light-houses, etc., by the Engineer Corps has made it one of the hardest worked bodies of men in the service. They are graduates at the head of their class at West Point, the most accomplished, intellectually, of our young soldiers. Joining their corps as assistants, they work their way up, their details placing them in most responsible positions, where they supervise the expenditure of millions of dollars of Government money. As the country grows, the work of this corps will increase, and a sufficient number of officers must be allowed for it to make it an effective force, not only for war, but for, in this case, the greater requirements of peace.

The increase in the Ordnance Department is necessary also to keep up the requirements of the situation, so far as ordnance and ordnance supplies are concerned. The organization was that of an army of 25,000 men at the commencement of the war, without any stores on hand. It is to be hoped that we will not be placed in this condition again under any circumstances.

The Signal Corps it is proposed to increase by 1 colonel, 2 lieutenant-colonels, 4 majors, 7 captains, and 14 first lieutenants. The Signal Corps is practically a new organization in war. While used during our civil war to a limited extent, it has grown rapidly since in all the armies of the world and has been developed in our own, more particularly in the National Guard of the different States. The present corps in the field has been practically taken from these organizations, and has been found to be very effective. The promotions in this corps will be by seniority above the rank of captain; that of captain and below may be taken from persons having professional qualifications to fill the positions, provided they are not over 40 years of age.

It is proposed in this bill to give the President authority to augment the organization serving in the islands of the Pacific, Porto Rico, and Cuba by the recruiting of natives, who should be counted as a part of the aggregate number. It is expected as these places become pacified that local organizations may be attached to some of our commands, to be increased from time to time as they become more effective and serviceable, and in the end we may be enabled to preserve order to a large extent with this class of troops. That, however, can not be entered upon immediately. It is a question of time. It is not reasonable to expect that you could arm a number of men, or one-twentieth part of the number of men needed in the Philippine Islands, and intrust them with the uniform and arms and the flag of the United States just now. It may be a time to commence it on a small scale in Porto Rico and possibly in Cuba, but even the latter is doubtful as yet.

The bill proposes to increase the number of cadets at West Point by adding 3 at large for each State in the four years, and 20 from the United States at large. This would give a little over 20 additional cadets a year, and these are much needed in the line of the Army under any circumstances and will not require any increased cost in their graduation from the Academy.

The proposition of my friend the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] to give the President all the troops that he wants and all the officers that he wants is generous, but he fixes the mode in which it shall be done, and will give him up to 1901 the present army organization, with the discharge of all volunteer troops and the power to enlist in these islands of the sea 35,000 men. The practical proposition in the bill is to give the President the power to use our own force for the present and to reduce them, as he can not safely enlist organizations in the new acquisitions. If it was not for the very high regard that I have for the opinion of the Senator from Missouri, the proposition for the President to recruit from the natives of these islands 35,000 men at the present time would seem ridiculous. There may be this number of men available in the Philippine Islands, but they stand in front of our troops at this moment, 30,000 strong, outside of Manila, in a worse condition of war, as I have before stated, than we had in Cuba.

This is not the kind of authority needed; this is not the kind of material to make United States soldiers of. It might as well be understood that we are not at peace at the present time; that we are at war, and that in the Philippines we are practically on the defensive, and that as the season advances we will possibly be more so. We are right up to the situation as to whether the Congress of the United States, which has been so liberal in the prosecution of this war up to this time, is going to destroy the whole result of it by endeavoring to embarrass the President and cut down the Army way below the necessities of the case. The Congress forced us into a war with Spain, and they were liberal in their provisions for it. Certainly this policy should not be changed when we are in one of its most critical periods.

Senators who now think that the Army should be cut down below what gentlemen think who are thoroughly conversant with these affairs should never have voted for this war. They should have foreseen that, even in Cuba and Porto Rico, it would take a long occupation before the Army could be reduced very materially. They should have known that the far-off possessions of the East, where there is a population of possibly 10,000,000 of people, one-third civilized, one-third semicivilized, and one-third barbarous and practically savages and pirates, can not be turned over to a native police.

While we better never have acquired this territory, it should, for humanity's sake, be governed with a view to the advancement of the natives, the preservation of law and order, and the expansion of our commerce.

The whole subject-matter of this war takes in a great deal more scope than most men thought of when we entered into it. The acquisition of the Philippines, which involves great responsibilities and will cost the country a large amount of money annually, may in the end pay commercially, but can not be governed in a halfhearted manner.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. SEWELL. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I do so for information, in order that I may ascertain what may be the views of himself and others who think like him.

I desire to ask the Senator if in his own opinion this obligation upon the United States Government to govern those people will continue so long as the people continue to be of the character which he has just described? In other words, whether we must continue under that obligation to govern them until they have been elevated to such a plane of intelligence and character generally as will enable them to properly and safely conduct their own affairs consistently with their own safety and with their obligations to other nations?

Mr. SEWELL. I will say to the Senator from Georgia that that is a question which the Congress of the United States can determine at any time. It remains an open question. Personally I do not believe that those people will be fit to govern themselves for the next fifty years.

Mr. BACON. I quite agree with the Senator, and that is the reason I asked the question. The Senator announced the proposition that there was upon us this duty and obligation because those people were unable to govern themselves, and I therefore desired to know whether, in the view taken by the Senator, this obligation was to be an indefinitely continuing one in the future, or whether he could anticipate the time when that obligation would end, and if so, at what time?

Mr. SEWELL. I have not the slightest idea. I do not believe in it, and never have done so. As I have said, nearly fifty years ago I was in the Philippines, and I do not believe the people there have changed a particle since then.

Mr. BACON. Then the Senator does not think they will change their condition for several generations at least?

Mr. SEWELL. I do not know what the civilizing influences of the United States may do, but I have not very much hope of bringing those people to a very high state of intelligence.

Mr. BACON. That being the case, I hope the Senator will pardon me—

Mr. FRYE. I hope the Senator from New Jersey will go on with his speech. The courtesy of the Senate required me to consent to his speaking when I ought not to have done so. The river and harbor bill is of exceeding importance, and if it does not go to the other House to-night, so that it may go into conference, there will be no river and harbor bill this year.

Mr. BACON. I was not aware of the situation under which the Senator from New Jersey took the floor and therefore I shall not press him any further.

Mr. SEWELL. I will say to the Senator from Maine that I shall occupy but a few minutes more.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, I shall be glad to have my colleague on the Military Committee yield to me just a moment that I may explain an error which is very disagreeable.

Mr. SEWELL. Certainly.

Mr. HAWLEY. Last evening in the War Department some of us met and engaged in perfecting an Army reorganization bill, as it is called. We got it into some shape and went home, when a young man spoke to me of getting some copies of it. Said I, "It is not yet to be given out; it is confidential as yet; it has not yet been examined by the subcommittee or by the whole committee." That rough draft was sent by somebody in the Department, and the Military Committee of the other House presented it to the body for consideration, and that body has been debating it with extraordinary vigor for some considerable time. [Laughter.]

I want to say that that is an unauthorized bill; but a rough draft. A legitimate subcommittee of the Committee on Military Affairs has spent every available minute of the day endeavoring to frame something that will be legitimate and, I hope, acceptable when we bring it in, which I think will be before a great while.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, resuming my remarks, which have been interrupted, I will say that we must carry out the obligations which we in good faith have assumed, or confess that we are unable to control the situation. We can not let the United States flag be cooped up in one small locality, such as Manila. Our soldiers in the field must be supported. The people of this country would never sanction or condone any dishonor to the flag that might arise out of any want of sufficient support of the Executive who has displayed such ability in the conduct of the war.

Senators may discuss the want of harmony in some of the departments of the Army; I confess it has, in some instances, been lamentably so, but if you look across the Atlantic Ocean you will find an army of vast proportions, with the nation back of it, shaken almost to disintegration by an army scandal. We have been exceedingly free from anything of this kind; our officers, as a rule, have been brave, patriotic gentlemen, who have done their duty, and have worked heroically to conquer a situation that they should never have been placed in. The expansion of an army of 25,000 to 275,000 men in three months was a most herculean task with the small force of officers in the different departments. This great army was recruited, disciplined, and ready for the front in an incredible space of time.

The army that the Sadir of Egypt defeated the Dervishes with it took about eighteen months to organize. I mention this as showing the adaptability of our present staff departments to the wants of the organization, and how they recruited, equipped, and transported this large army in so short a period, which has never been done before in any other country. The French, Germans, English, and Russians will move large bodies of men, but they are men of the regular line, who have been in service for years, and who are disciplined and drilled, not raw recruits, such as we take in when the necessity requires it. The National Guard or State troops are particularly adapted to the service that they have heretofore had, the protection of the peace in the States—a police force, practically—but if you want troops for foreign service you need men who are enlisted for a regular period, men who join the colors as a profession. The National Guard can always be counted on to support the Government of the United States in any exigency. It is composed of patriotic citizens, the flower of our young men, but they are not intended to be kept in the Army for a very long time. When the exigency is over, they prefer to return to their homes and occupations, leaving to their brothers of the Regular Army the work of protecting and advancing the flag wherever their services are required.

The country is in a position to-day where the Administration should have the patriotic support of every representative of the people. I have not been in accord with entering into this war until the destruction of the Maine, but having entered into it I feel bound to support it. I have not been in favor of the acquisition of the Philippines; but the country having entered into a solemn treaty, which we have now ratified, I feel it my duty to support the Government, regardless of politics, to a successful conclusion of the war that we have on our hands and the pacification of all the territory that we may have acquired. To this end I would vote every man and every dollar that is necessary to sustain the honor and dignity of the nation, not alone before our own citizens, but before every civilized nation of the earth.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair) laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives disagreeing to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11683) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments disagreed to by the House of Representatives and agree to the conference asked by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Presiding Officer was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. QUAY, Mr. ALLISON, and Mr. PETTIGREW were appointed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11795) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRYE. As to the item on page 84, line 22, in the provision relating to the improvement of the Missouri River, the committee intended to have made a certain appropriation as desired by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], but by mistake it was left out. The Senator will now offer the amendment.

Mr. ALLEN. I offer as a proposed amendment what I send to the desk.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 85, after line 2, it is proposed to insert:

For the improvement of the Missouri River on the Nebraska side from the first relevation north of the Commutation Bridge, between Sioux City, Iowa, and South Sioux City, Nebr., to a point opposite Elk Point, in South Dakota, the sum of $25,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN].

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed on page 90, at section 2.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, on page 91, after line 10, to strike out:

SEC. 3. That the provisions of the river and harbor act of 1894 for a boat railway from the foot of The Dalles Rapids to the head of Celilo Falls, Oregon and Washington, and the provisions of the river and harbor act of 1898 providing for the improvement of Yaquina Bay, Oregon, and all acts for the prosecution of either of said projects, are hereby repealed, and any amounts heretofore appropriated for either of the same now remaining unexpended shall be paid into the Treasury of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 91, after line 20, to insert as new sections the following:

SEC. 3. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire, for and in the behalf of the United States, such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua, or such rights, easements, or privileges therein or connected therewith as may be desirable and necessary to excavate, construct, control, and defend a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movements of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from a point near Greytown on the Caribbean Sea, by way of Lake Nicaragua, to Brito on the Pacific Ocean; and such sum as may be necessary to make such purchase is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

SEC. 4. That when the President has secured the territory in section 1 referred to, or said rights, easements, or privileges, he shall direct the Secretary of War to proceed with the excavation or construction of a canal and waterway from a point on the shore of the Caribbean Sea, near Greytown by way of Lake Nicaragua, to a point near Brito, on the Pacific Ocean. Such canal shall be of sufficient capacity and depth as that it may be used by vessels of the largest tonnage and greatest depth now in use, and it shall be supplied with all necessary locks and other appliances to meet the necessities of vessels passing from Greytown to Brito; and the Secretary of War shall also construct such safe and commodious harbors at the termini of said canal, and such fortifications for defense, as will be required for the convenience and safety of all vessels desiring the use of said canal.

SEC. 5. That in making surveys for, and in the construction of said canal and harbors, the President may detail such number of engineer officers of the Army and Navy, or employ such civil engineers as may be necessary, and may require of them the performance of such professional duties as he may desire. The Secretary of War shall have power to enter into contracts for the performance of all or such portion of the work as may be necessary to most speedily and advantageously complete the construction of said canal and harbors.

SEC. 6. That in the excavation and construction of said canal the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua, or such parts of each as may be available, shall be used.

SEC. 7. That in any negotiations with the States of Costa Rica or Nicaragua the President may have the President is authorized to guarantee to said States the use of said canal and harbors, upon such terms as may be agreed upon, for all vessels owned by said States or by citizens thereof.

SEC. 8. That the sum of $15,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the completion of the work herein authorized, said money to be drawn from the Treasury from time to time, as the same shall be needed, upon warrants made and verified by the chief engineer in charge of the work and approved by the Secretary of War.

Mr. FRYE. I move to amend the amendment on page 92, in section 3, line 1, after the words "may be," by striking out "desirable and;" so as to read:

SEC. 3. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire, for and in the behalf of the United States, such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua, or such rights, easements, or privileges therein or connected therewith as may be necessary to excavate, construct, control, etc.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. In section 4, line 10, after the word "section," I move to strike out "one" and insert "three."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. RAWLINS. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of this bill in regard to one or two features of this amendment. As I understand, it proposes to give to the President authority to negotiate and obtain by purchase territory necessary for the construction and protection of this canal. It does not provide that any such treaty of purchase shall be submitted to the Senate for ratification, but I understand it does authorize the President to proceed at once, after he has effected a treaty, with the construction of the canal without making a submission to the Senate. I ask if that is not the case?

Mr. FRYE. It does not provide for a treaty at all. It gives the President authority to purchase and obtain the cession direct from Costa Rica and Nicaragua. So nothing is said about a treaty between the respective countries.

Mr. RAWLINS. Costa Rica and Nicaragua are independent nations. The territory sought to be acquired must be obtained by a contract or compact or treaty or convention between independent nations; and I submit to the Senator the question as to whether or not we can obviate or do away with that provision of the Constitution requiring the concurrence of the Senate by enacting such a provision as this?

Mr. FRYE. If anything is done by the President in the way of a treaty, it must be submitted to the Senate of the United States for ratification. There is no doubt about that; and the work can not go on, if it is done by treaty, unless it is submitted.

Mr. RAWLINS. I do not intend to detain the Senate at length on this question, because I am aware that there is an overwhelming desire on the part of the Senate, and possibly of the country, too, to have some provision go through relating to this subject; but it occurs to me that this provision undertakes to confer upon the President authority not warranted by the Constitution to acquire control of territory by treaty with an independent government without requiring the ratification of such treaty in the method which the Constitution provides.

Mr. President, it further directs the President to proceed with the construction of the canal upon the basis of an agreement or treaty not ratified in the method which is essential, as it seems to me, in order to give it validity.

I think this is a question of sufficient importance that it ought to be dealt with independently; and I raise the question of order upon the amendment that it is general legislation.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator might raise a different question of order from that. He might raise the point that it is not germane. I do not think it is general legislation by any manner of means, but the point might be raised that the amendment is not germane to a river and harbor bill.

Mr. RAWLINS. It is general legislation, as it seems to me, in this sense, that it undertakes to confer authority upon the President by an act of Congress which is inhibited by the Constitution. Of course, the last objection would be one which ought to be fatal to the amendment upon its merits, but certainly the President has no authority to enter into a contract with an independent nation under the Constitution, unless it is by virtue of general legislation by Congress authorizing him so to do; and to the extent that this legislation attempts to authorize the President to enter into such a contract it is general legislation.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I do not think I care to discuss the amendment until after the question of order shall have been disposed of. I think the amendment is obnoxious to Rule XVI, that it is general legislation on a general appropriation bill. Rule XVI provides:

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors.

Thus making the river and harbor bill clearly a general appropriation bill. Then the rule provides that—

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received.

We do not propose to raise that question, but we raise the point of order that it is general legislation on a general appropriation bill. It is full of legislation; in fact every line of it has legislation giving authority and power not existing without it, to such an extent that it seems to me unnecessary to argue that generally or to indicate the points of general legislation contained in the amendment.

Mr. FRYE. I do not think the amendment is any more general legislation than any other item in the bill: for instance, an appropriation for a canal in Ohio or a canal in New York, or a reservoir at the head waters of the Mississippi, and then instructions as to how the money shall be expended. I think there may be a question raised as to whether or not it is germane to this bill, because it provides for a canal in a foreign country. It is only on that ground, it seems to me, that the point of order could be entertained.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I say we do not propose to raise that question now. We raise the question that the amendment is general legislation. As I said before, it hardly seems necessary to point it out. It provides:

SEC. 3. That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire, for and in the behalf of the United States, such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua, or such rights, easements, or privileges therein or connected therewith, as may be desirable and necessary to excavate, construct, control, and defend a canal of such depth and capacity, etc.

Then it provides in section 6:

That in the excavation and construction of said canal the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua, or such parts of each as may be available, shall be used.

That is clearly general legislation of the broadest sort.

SEC. 7. That in any negotiations with the States of Costa Rica or Nicaragua the President may have, the President is authorized to guarantee to said States the use of said canal and harbors, upon such terms as may be agreed upon, for all vessels owned by said States or by citizens thereof.

I do not doubt but what there are other items of general legislation upon this bill, and I suppose they would go out if the point of order was raised against them. We do raise the point against this amendment.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, it seems to me that this amendment is not subject to either of the points of order which are suggested. The words "general legislation" used in our rules can hardly be defined with exactness, but they primarily refer to legislation in a broad sense as distinguished from legislation carrying an appropriation. I can imagine no appropriation bill among all those which are subject to the jurisdiction of Congress upon which an enterprise like this might be fastened more appropriately.

Suppose that instead of referring to a canal across Central America the appropriation related to a canal or other improvement at New Orleans or elsewhere in this country, with like provisions about acquiring land upon which the work might be done, would it be said that it was "general legislation" and could not be initiated upon this bill?

I have not before me the original rule of the Senate assigning the jurisdiction of the river and harbor bill to the Committee on Commerce, but this I know, that there is a connection, a direct connection, between the idea of constructing a great waterway from the Atlantic to the Pacific oceans and the general purpose of improving the bays, rivers, and harbors of the United States.

We are justified in building this great canal under that clause of our Constitution which authorizes Congress to regulate foreign commerce, and all the improvements which are found upon this bill relating to our exterior navigation are founded upon the exercise of that self-same power of Congress. From beginning to end the bill is one setting on foot needed facilities to interstate and international commerce, and the Nicaragua Canal will be but another and wider and surer facility to these great ends. It is, therefore, clearly germane. There is no other appropriation bill, as I have said, in all those committed to the jurisdiction of the Senate upon which it could be put with more fitness.

Mr. CULLOM. Not as much.

Mr. CHILTON. Not as much, the Senator from Illinois suggests; and I for one feel that both the points of order which have been submitted deserve to be overruled by the Chair.

Mr. MORGAN. As I understand, only one point of order is insisted on.

Mr. CHILTON. Part of my remarks were intended to meet the intimation of the distinguished Senator from Maine. I for one can not accept his admission that the appropriation is not germane and relevant to this appropriation bill.

Mr. FRYE. I did not admit, by any manner of means, that it is not germane.

Mr. CHILTON. I so understood.

Mr. FRYE. I said that point might possibly be raised, but that I did not believe there was anything whatever in this.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, on the point of general legislation, the observations of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] are so clearly right, so perfectly undeniable as to the purpose and effect of the rule as to general legislation, that I do not think it is worth while to add anything to them. I do not think I could, by amplifying them ever so long, make the point any clearer.

As to its being germane, what is meant by "germane?" To the bill; to the general scheme of legislation; to the general topic or subject of legislation; it should be akin to it. It should be classified with it in the human mind. Let us see what this bill proposes. Take the title of it. It is a bill "making appropriation for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes." There is a broad title. The phrase "other purposes" does not mean to include general and independent legislation, but other purposes mentioned in the bill, such as public works on rivers and harbors. So much for the title. Perhaps that is not so important, and yet it does show the characteristics of the bill. It shows the purpose of the committee in bringing this subject to the attention of the body, in making the report and inviting us to consider it, in bringing it within the general purview of consideration that is presented here when this bill is presented for action. Let us see the first section:

That the following sums of money be, and are hereby, appropriated, to be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be immediately available and to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War and the supervision of the Chief of Engineers, for the construction, completion, repair, and preservation of the public works hereinafter named.

Not private works, not the maintenance of some independent branch of the Government, such as the Army or the Navy or the Post-Office or any other scheme of legislation outside of the purview of this bill, but "public works" which are "hereinafter named."

For the construction, completion, repair, and preservation of the public works hereinafter named.

Is this a public work? If it is a public work, it is a work that is germane to this measure. It is not foreign to it. Whether it is a public work within the limits of the United States or outside of the limits of the United States makes no difference. It is, nevertheless, a work for the advantage of commerce, the advantage of our postal service, the advantage of our national defense. It covers a number of subjects in the benefit that it proposes to give to the country. The canal is, therefore, in every sense a public work.

I merely wanted to draw the attention of the Senate to the nature of the legislation that we are upon. I think there can be nothing clearer than that this is entirely germane.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, upon the question whether this is general legislation within the third subdivision of Rule XVI, I wish to say a few words. The first subdivision of that rule uses this language:

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

This is, therefore, classed with the general appropriation bills. The third subdivision provides:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant, etc.

The first clause is the one under which the question of order is now raised, as to whether this is general legislation in that sense. Does it change or propose to change existing law? The amendment in the third section of the bill provides:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire, for and in the behalf of the United States, such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua, or such rights, easements, or privileges therein or connected therewith, as may be desirable and necessary to excavate, construct, control, and defend a canal of such depth and capacity as will be sufficient for the movements of ships of the greatest tonnage and draft now in use, from a point near Greytown, on the Caribbean Sea, by way of Lake Nicaragua, to Brito, on the Pacific Ocean; and such sum as may be necessary to make such purchase is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The next section reads:

That when the President has secured the territory in section 1 referred to, or said rights, easements, or privileges, he shall direct the Secretary of War to proceed with the construction of the canal.

Mr. President, Nicaragua and Costa Rica are both independent nations. The President, without the authority of legislation, is not empowered, independently of the concurrence of the Senate, to make a contract or treaty with either of those Governments for the acquisition of Territory. If this legislation has any validity, it is by reason of the fact that it is legislation empowering the President to do that which otherwise he would have no authority to do under the Constitution.

For instance, the President proposes to these two Governments, or to one or both of them, to buy a strip of country over which they now have sovereign control. They accept the proposition. It is embodied in a written agreement. This amendment proposes that as soon as the agreement is executed on the part of those Governments and the President, he shall direct the Secretary of War to proceed with the construction of the canal. It seems to me very plain that such an agreement is a treaty in the sense of the Constitution. It seems to me there is no power in Congress to impart any validity to such an agreement unless it receives the concurrence of the Senate of the United States. But certain it is that the President has no such power and can possess no such power under the Constitution unless Congress confers it upon him.

This proposed legislation assumes that Congress may confer upon the President authority which he would not otherwise possess. There is no answer, it seems to me, to the proposition that this legislation is in contravention of the Constitution or that it is general legislation authorizing the President to do that which otherwise he could not do, namely, to make a valid agreement between this Government and another independent nation relating to the acquisition of territory.

Mr. President, the question now presented is, Is this general legislation? If it has any validity, it is general legislation; and that proposition, it seems to me, can not be controverted. If it is a nullity, then for another reason it ought to be rejected. But the moment it is decided that this is general legislation it must be eliminated from the bill, according to the rule I have read.

Mr. SPOONER. Will the Senator from Utah allow me to ask him what, in his judgment, constitutes this project general legislation in distinction from any other project of improvement in the bill; for instance, in distinction from a great scheme of improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi?

Mr. RAWLINS. If it is a subject-matter over which the United States has jurisdiction, if it is a navigable river coming within Federal control, which does not require action on the part of the Government or any department of the Government in order to gain control over it, and it is a question germane to a river and harbor bill, then I would concede (although I confess I am not familiar, so far as experience is concerned, with the practice of the Senate in passing upon the questions of order which are raised) that such an objection as this, that it is general legislation, while simply making an appropriation to improve a river or harbor over which the Government of the United States has control, would not hold.

But in this case it involves the question of acquiring territory from an independent foreign government. It is a question of the very highest consideration. It involves a compact or agreement between independent governments. This provision undertakes to delegate to the President alone the authority which the Constitution gives to the President and Senate, to enter into and make valid a compact to bring this territory within the jurisdiction of the United States. That certainly depends upon legislation, and if it be valid at all, it is general legislation.

Mr. SPOONER. That is just the point which I wanted to put to my honorable friend the Senator from Utah. I did not have in mind his proposition that Congress has no power to authorize the President alone, without the intervention of the Senate, to acquire territory to be utilized in constructing the canal. That is another thing. But, admitting the power of Congress, how is this general legislation within the rule?

Mr. RAWLINS. This changes the existing law.

Mr. SPOONER. No; there is no—

Mr. RAWLINS. It is general legislation proposing to clothe the President of the United States with an authority which he does not now possess. It involves a question which is not related to the question of making an appropriation for the improvement of a river or harbor over which the Government already possesses control.

Mr. SPOONER. The Senator certainly will not claim that Congress can confer upon the President the power to negotiate a treaty. He gets that power from the Constitution.

Mr. RAWLINS. This amendment does propose to do that; and the point I make is that if it is valid legislation it is general legislation and subject to the point of order. If it is invalid because in contravention of the Constitution, then it should be eliminated upon its merits and for a very palpable reason. But the committee has reported it here in its present form, assuming it to be in harmony, I take it, with the Constitution, and it is legislation in that sense. Upon that theory it undertakes to clothe the President with an authority which he does not now possess—the authority to enter into negotiations and make a treaty with an independent foreign nation in order to extend the jurisdiction and sovereignty of this Government over territory to which they do not now extend.

Is there anything which can be of higher signification in the way of general legislation than a proposition of this character? It seems to me not; and there can be no mistake about the purpose of this legislation. It is perfectly free from ambiguity. It is that the President is hereby authorized to acquire. That is not necessarily related to a river and harbor bill. If it were proposed in the form of an independent bill here, no one would question that it was general legislation, and that if it were enacted into law it would change existing law. If it had any validity under the Constitution, it would impart to the President a power which he does not now possess and which, as a matter of fact, has never heretofore been conferred upon him.

Mr. President, if we strike out the third subdivision, and if we had jurisdiction over the territory or the line of communication, and this bill simply proposed to appropriate the money for the improvement of that thing over which the Government had control, then it would not be subject to this point of order. But it seems to me there can be no question that it is subject to it.

Mr. LINDSAY. Mr. President, according to the Senator's argument, if section 3 read:

The President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire by a treaty for and in behalf of the United States—

Then this would not be conferring by statute a power upon the President which he does not now possess. Now, I maintain that unless an act of Congress by its language necessarily implies that it intends to disregard the Constitution, no such interpretation as that will be allowed. So, then, if it be necessary, in order to the validity of this legislation, that we shall read into this authority conferred upon the President the words "by treaty," then they are in virtue of the Constitution. But if the Senator will turn to section 7, he will see that negotiations are contemplated by this identical bill:

That in any negotiations with the States of Costa Rica or Nicaragua the President may have, the President is authorized to guarantee to said States the use of said canal and harbors, upon such terms as may be agreed upon, for all vessels owned by said States or by citizens thereof.

This provision evidently contemplates that this right of way, this cession, this easement, whatever it may be, shall be secured by the President through negotiation with these two independent States. Without any act of Congress the President, in virtue of his constitutional power, may negotiate a treaty with these two powers for this identical purpose, subject to ratification by the Senate of the United States. It does not at all change his relation to this act because Congress, in advance of the exercise of this Executive power of treaty making, indicates to the President that it is desirable that such a treaty shall be made—that such negotiations shall be had as will result in cessions to the Government of the United States which shall authorize this great work to be done.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. LINDSAY. Certainly.

Mr. RAWLINS. The third subdivision, if the Senator will observe it, provides that the President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire, etc., and the fourth one that when the President has secured the territory, he shall direct the Secretary of War to proceed with the excavation or construction of the canal.

Mr. LINDSAY. That is absolutely consistent with the argument I am making. If the President can only acquire a concession through a treaty, then when the negotiations have been closed by the President and the treaty shall have been ratified by the Senate, without any further legislation upon the subject of the appropriation, the President may go on and do those things provided for in the fourth section.

Mr. RAWLINS. Then, if that is true, the provision is absolutely vain and idle legislation; that is to say, the President may, in his discretion, make a treaty with those Governments, to be ratified in the usual way by the Senate, acquiring this territory. That is a power which he will exercise or not in his own discretion. It is a matter in which we have no power to direct him as to what he will do in respect to it. But I submit to the Senator whether the reading of this legislation does not make it plain that the purpose of this measure is that the President shall by himself, without the concurrence of the Senate, make these negotiations and acquire this territory, and then, when he has so acquired it, shall at once proceed to carry out the work of the excavation and construction of the canal as the measure directs.

Mr. LINDSAY. While I admit that the language is broad enough to admit of that interpretation, that is not the necessary interpretation of the language used; and therefore this bill, if it become an act, will be read in connection with the Constitution, and the President will exercise, if he exercises at all, the high powers conferred upon him by this bill in consonance with the Constitution.

Mr. BACON. Will the Senator from Kentucky permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. LINDSAY. Certainly.

Mr. BACON. I desire to know the opinion of the Senator as to whether the President would, in a proper construction of this law, be required to proceed through the agency of a treaty? I desire to say before the Senator replies to me that my object in making the inquiry is to have, if possible, such an expression of the Senate as may be taken as the intention of the Senate. I very much favor the project. At the same time I am very strongly convinced that the President, without the machinery of the treaty-making power, is not authorized to acquire foreign territory; and for that reason, which the Senator will appreciate, I ask him the question.

Mr. LINDSAY. I do not think the President, in the exercise of any executive duty, owes obedience to any act of Congress. In other words, while Congress may indicate to the President by its legislation that it is desirable that a certain executive duty resting in the discretion of the President shall be performed, and that in case of its performance he shall be authorized to do certain other things, we can not put the President under the obligation to exercise that great executive power.

Mr. BACON. I do not wish the Senator to understand me as taking issue with him at all; but I understand him, then, to construe the phraseology of this act as simply an indication to the President of the desire of Congress that it shall be acquired by him through constitutional methods.

Mr. LINDSAY. That is the first phase of the question, that Congress indicates to the President its opinion that this duty, which is executive in its character, should be performed. But the President has a right to put up his judgment against that of Congress if he chooses to do so.

The amendment further provides that if the President shall exercise the treaty-making power in consonance with the expressed desire of the Congress of the United States and the treaty which he makes, the negotiations which result in an agreement, shall meet the approval of the Senate of the United States, then he shall proceed to make these expenditures and to execute this work in the manner provided by the statute.

Mr. ALLEN. Can we ratify a treaty in advance?

Mr. LINDSAY. We can not ratify a treaty in advance, but we can make an appropriation dependent for its expenditure upon the existence of a treaty in the future.

Mr. ALLEN. Suppose the Senate should refuse to ratify the treaty after it was made?

Mr. LINDSAY. Then there will never be a dollar of money expended under this act, if I comprehend its real meaning.

Mr. ALLEN. Does it not authorize the President to secure title or a cession and begin the work before the Senate acts?

Mr. LINDSAY. It authorizes him to begin the work when he shall have secured the title.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well. Now, suppose—

Mr. LINDSAY. If he can not secure the title except by a treaty and its ratification by the Senate, then he will never commence the work at all.

Mr. ALLEN. But how can he acquire title except by treaty?

Mr. LINDSAY. I do not say that he can acquire it in any other way, and I say section 7 of the provision evidently indicates that he shall acquire title by treaty.

Mr. ALLEN. We can only acquire title by conquest or by treaty. As I understand it, a purchase is a treaty. It is a treaty of cession. Now, suppose the President is authorized by this bill to acquire title by cession and is authorized to expend money in the construction of the canal, and the Senate should finally refuse to ratify the treaty?

Mr. LINDSAY. I have certainly been unfortunate in expressing myself. My theory of the case is that this provision contemplates a treaty.

Mr. ALLEN. I admit that it contemplates a treaty. Suppose the President makes that treaty, and before the Senate convenes and ratifies it the President goes on and expends money—

Mr. LINDSAY. What right have we to assume—

Mr. ALLEN. Wait a minute. When the Senate convenes, it declines to ratify the treaty. What becomes of the money?

Mr. LINDSAY. In the first place, we have no right to assume that the President will proceed to expend any of this money until the treaty shall have been ratified.

Mr. ALLEN. It authorizes him to do so, does it not?

Mr. LINDSAY. Not if we read this act in connection with the Constitution and if we give effect to section 7. Then it does not authorize him to expend any money until the treaty shall have been ratified.

Mr. ALLEN. What does it mean when it says that he may secure the title and that he may direct the Secretary of War to begin the construction of the canal?

Mr. LINDSAY. If he can secure the title only through treaty, then he can not secure it until the treaty has been ratified.

Mr. ALLEN. The Senator knows—

Mr. LINDSAY. Then the act will be read by the President to mean that he shall commence these expenditures when the treaty shall have been ratified, without awaiting any further action on the part of Congress.

Mr. ALLEN. Does the Senator know of any way the United States can acquire title to property except by conquest and by treaty?

Mr. BERRY. How about Hawaii?

Mr. LINDSAY. It can be acquired by joint resolution. So we decided at the last session.

Mr. ALLEN. That amounts to a treaty.

Mr. LINDSAY. It was a treaty with ourselves.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. LINDSAY. Who was the other party to that treaty?

Mr. ALLEN. The Government of Hawaii.

Mr. LINDSAY. When and where?

Mr. ALLEN. By their asking to be annexed.

Mr. LINDSAY. They asked to come in by treaty, and we took them in by joint resolution; and without waiting to have any further investigation of their desire, we took possession by force.

Mr. RAWLINS. I will ask the Senator if that was not general legislation?

Mr. LINDSAY. I submit that it was no legislation at all, in my opinion, neither general nor special.

Mr. ALLEN. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that a treaty is nothing more nor less than an agreement between two nations.

Mr. LINDSAY. I understand that.

Mr. ALLEN. Very well. I admit that the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands was a little irregular. I did not vote for it myself. But when that government, a de facto government if not a de jure government, consented and we accepted their proposition by a joint resolution, was not that virtually a treaty?

Mr. LINDSAY. They never made any proposition to us to be accepted by joint resolution.

Mr. ALLEN. Oh, well.

Mr. LINDSAY. They provided for a ratification of the treaty and for an exchange of ratifications. We never did ratify the treaty. Therefore there never has been an exchange of ratifications. Therefore there never has been any acceptance of their proposition.

Mr. ALLEN. That was the Republican view of the situation, not a Populistic nor a Democratic view.

Mr. LINDSAY. It was not my view.

Mr. President, section 4, to which special objection is taken or about which so great a point has been made, reads:

That when the President has secured the territory in section 1 referred to, or said rights, easements, or privileges, he shall direct the Secretary of War.

Now, until he secures that territory, or until he secures those rights, privileges, and easements, this act does not provide that he shall do anything at all. It is argued, and I admit with great force, that he can only secure the territory or those rights by treaty, and that the treaty will not become effective until ratified or confirmed by the Senate. So, then, although the President may close the negotiations so far as the Executive is concerned, he will not proceed to act under section 4, but he will submit the result of his negotiations to the Senate; and when the Senate shall have ratified those negotiations or that treaty, then he will proceed to carry into execution the provisions of section 4 and the subsequent provisions, and that is all there is in this act.

Now, then, it is not extraordinary that Congress shall make an appropriation to take effect when something else shall have been done. We scarcely ever appropriate money to build a custom-house or a post-office without providing that when the title to the site shall have been secured to the satisfaction of the Government the President, or the proper Department, shall then proceed to expend the money.

Mr. BACON. That is a general law.

Mr. LINDSAY. If it were not a general law, it would be a special law in each particular case. We put it in in some cases.

Mr. FRYE. There are a great many such provisions in the river and harbor bill.

Mr. LINDSAY. Yes; there are a great many in the river and harbor bill. So, then, the only question that remains here is whether or not we can make an appropriation of money to be expended on a great public work when the title to the land over which it is to be built and when the rights, easements, and privileges necessary to the execution of the work shall have been secured, and that is all there is in this question.

Mr. ALLEN. We secure title to post-office building sites and such things, and that by virtue of the power of eminent domain.

Mr. LINDSAY. I understand that, but we do not spend any money until we have exercised the right of eminent domain or until we have made a contract with the owner.

Mr. SPOONER. Does not the word "acquired" mean lawfully acquired?

Mr. LINDSAY. Constitutionally acquired in this case; lawfully acquired in all other cases. So, then, this bill does not attempt to confer upon the President a power in excess of the Constitution, and the President will not undertake, I take it, to execute these powers except in obedience to the Constitution and as the Constitution directs their exercise.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, this amendment provides, first:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire, for and in the behalf of the United States, such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua, or such rights, easements, or privileges therein or connected therewith as may be desirable and necessary to excavate, construct, control, and defend a canal, etc.

There is a provision, then, for the purchase of the old Maritime Canal Company's property—for the purchase of a concession previously given, and clearly it is legislation under the rule. The President can make a treaty with these countries without any legislation on our part. But here is a power to buy the property in a foreign country and an unlimited appropriation with which to pay for it. Here is a power to purchase the two canal companies that are in conflict struggling for the right to occupy that country, but in reality struggling for the right to get some portion of this appropriation.

Mr. SPOONER. What language is that?

Mr. PETTIGREW. It is on page 91—

Or such rights, easements, or privileges therein or connected therewith as may be desirable and necessary—

Mr. FRYE. The words "desirable and" are stricken out, so that he can only get that which is absolutely necessary for the construction of the canal.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The friends of this movement have contended on this floor constantly that all that was necessary to acquire was the right of the Maritime Canal Company; that all that it was necessary to have was to purchase this old franchise with its rusty material and rotten buildings and filled-up harbor. The propositions heretofore brought before this body were to limit the amount we would pay these people to $4,000,000, and now it is proposed to authorize the purchase without any limit whatever to the amount that shall be paid. Theright is conferred here, and it is legislation of the broadest sort.

If this was limited simply to the treaty-making power which the President now has, it would be unnecessary to say anything about it. But if you are going to buy the property, or so-called property, of the old canal company, it is necessary to have this wording, and it is here in all its force. Therefore, we raise the point of order.

Not only that, Mr. President, but all through it is legislation. There are other provisions almost as broad as that. There can be no mistaking the language or the purpose of this amendment.

In section 7 of the amendment there is the following provision:

That in any negotiations with the States of Costa Rica or Nicaragua the President may have, the President is authorized to guarantee to said States the use of said canal and harbors, upon such terms as may be agreed upon, for all vessels owned by said States or by citizens thereof.

Now that the President can make a treaty which will provide for those things, there can be no question but that under this provision he can make an agreement that is not a treaty, and confer upon them those rights and privileges without submitting it to the Senate at all. That is the purpose of this provision, and therefore it is general legislation as broad and strong as you can make it.

Why is the provision here if it is expected that the President will make a treaty and afterwards submit it to us? That power exists. It is unnecessary to put it here. The purpose is to evade the necessity of making a treaty and to confer upon him powers which are general powers that he does not possess, broad in their scope and general in their operation.

Mr. FRYE. Now, let us have the decision of the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senator from Utah [Mr. RAWLINS] has raised the direct point of order that the amendment is general legislation under the third section of the sixteenth rule. Incidentally the question of relevancy has been raised by the Senator from Maine and also by the Senator from Utah under the same section in his remarks. The Chair is very glad to relieve himself from the responsibility of ruling as to what is general legislation included in this bill. He therefore avails himself of the opportunity given him by the twenty-first rule to submit the question of order to the Senate whether the amendment is in order and whether it is, under the rules, proper to be submitted to the Senate. The question to be submitted to the Senate therefore is, Is the amendment in order?

Mr. PETTIGREW. We raised the question of order that it is general legislation. We did not raise the question of relevancy.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understood and now so understands.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Then, do I understand that the Chair submits the question of order?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The direct question of order raised by the Senator from Utah.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The question of order and not the question of relevancy?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Not the relevancy of the amendment, but the direct question of order that it is general legislation. The question to be submitted is, Is the amendment in order?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I wanted to understand the ruling of the Chair.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. If the question of relevancy had been directly raised by either the Senator from Utah or the Senator from South Dakota, the Chair would have been compelled then to submit the question of order to the Senate. The Chair avails himself of his privilege to submit it to the Senate upon the other question directly raised by the Senator from Utah and supported by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. PETTIGREW. That is just what I wanted to understand.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Is the amendment in order? [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it.

Mr. PETTIGREW and Mr. VEST called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE], who is absent. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MASON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. SULLIVAN]. As he informs me that he would vote "yea," I will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. WELLINGTON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER]. In his absence, not knowing how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. MCBRIDE. My colleague [Mr. SIMON] is necessarily absent from the Chamber. If he were present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 7; as follows:

YEAS—51

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Senate therefore declares the amendment is in order. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. FRYE. The amendment is perfectly understood, and I hope we may now have a vote upon it.

Mr. VEST. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. FRYE. I did not know the Senator had risen to speak.

Mr. VEST. I had not risen to speak, but to make an inquiry as to whether I can now raise the question of relevancy under the third subdivision of Rule XVI?

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair so understands.

Mr. VEST. I raise that question, and call for the yeas and nays. It is not debatable.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question of the relevancy of the amendment is raised by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. The Chair is bound, under the rules, to submit that question to the Senate.

Mr. VEST. I understand the question of relevancy was not included in the point of order.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. It was not included. The Senator is in order.

Mr. VEST. I raise, then, the question as to the relevancy of the amendment, that it is not relevant to a river and harbor bill.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is: Is the amendment relevant?

Mr. VEST. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FRYE. So would the Senator from Rhode Island.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. BERRY. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. JONES of Arkansas] is detained at home sick. He is paired on all these questions with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. WELLINGTON. As I heretofore announced, I have a general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. BUTLER] upon political matters. I do not know how he would vote, if present, upon this question, but as it is not a political matter I am at liberty to vote, and I vote "yea."

Mr. McBRIDE. My colleague [Mr. SIMON] is temporarily absent from the Chamber. If present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—48.

So the amendment was decided to be relevant.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment is in order.

Mr. SPOONER. If agreeable to the chairman of the committee, I should like to offer an amendment to the committee amendment on page 93, to come in as an additional section.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, as an additional section, the following:

SEC. 9. That if the President shall be unable to secure from the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica such concessions as will enable the United States to build and perpetually own and control the said canal, the President is authorized to negotiate for a control of, or a right to construct and maintain and perpetually control, some other canal connecting the Atlantic and Pacific oceans; and the President is requested to negotiate for the abrogation or modification of any and all treaty obligations, if any such exist, as shall in any wise interfere with the construction, ownership, and perpetual control of any such canal.

Mr. FRYE. I have no objection to that amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. CHILTON. Mr. President, I am disposed to object to the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER]. I can not vote to admit that there is any outstanding treaty obligation interfering with the right of the United States to construct an interoceanic canal. I have examined that subject thoroughly, and I feel that it places this Government in a false position to make any sort of declaration which tends to give color to the claim that the Clayton-Bulwer treaty is still in existence. It seems to me it can do no possible good to clutter our records with such an intimation. It encourages Great Britain to hold her pretensions at a high key and engenders doubt in the minds of our own people.

Mr. BATE. Mr. President, I wish simply to say to the Senator from Texas that we are aware that in all the discussions upon this question in the Senate the Clayton-Bulwer treaty has figured very conspicuously; and whether that treaty is still in existence or not, I can not conceive that there is any harm in so framing the provision as to leave the matter to the President, and that is all that this amendment does, as I understand.

I wish to say, furthermore, that this bill as it now presents itself has certainly been stripped of a great many of its objectionable features, which govern my action regarding it. The Government can now become the owner of the canal; and from this bill there will be no embarrassment, because Costa Rica and Nicaragua will have an interest in the canal. There will be no Maritime Canal Company who will have anything to do with it, for there is nothing in the way of an appropriation of $5,000,000 supposed to be in the interest of that company, and we may get a clean and naked title in the way we want it, and let the Government build the canal under the supervision of its own officers.

Certainly, Mr. President, the provision for the Nicaragua Canal has been improved in every way, and one of the main objections is obviated by the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER], to which the Senator from Texas [Mr. CHILTON] objects. Let us have that removed and let us enter upon the work without being hampered by any improper restrictions.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President, the amendment does not assert the existence of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty; it does not mention that treaty. It requests the President to negotiate for the removal of any treaty obligations, if any such exist. In passing such legislation, especially under the circumstances of this case, we should not assume by our legislation that no treaty obligations do exist. The same amendment precisely was passed by the Senate on the Morgan bill.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Texas will not object when it is understood that his objection means the defeat of the building of the Nicaragua Canal. I think he wants the canal built as much as I do. If objection is now made, the canal can not be built. Clearly I do not think the objection which the Senator opposes to this amendment exists, and therefore I hope he will withdraw the objection and let this provision remain in the bill.

Mr. BATE. I should like to say, in addition to what I have already said, and in the same line, that I have an objection to this bill, and that is the amount of money it appropriates; but that, I see, is guarded here by letting the President pay for the work only as it may be accomplished.

Mr. CHILTON. I find that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], who has for many years led the fight for the Nicaragua Canal, desires that the amendment should be adopted, and on that account I think it best to withdraw my objection.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TURLEY. I wish to offer an amendment to section 3 of the committee amendment. It merely changes the phraseology of it. After the words "United States," in line 23, I move to insert "from Costa Rica and Nicaragua;" after the word "of," in the same line, to insert the word "their;" then strike out the words on that line and the next line "now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua;" so as to read:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire for and in the behalf of the United States from Costa Rica and Nicaragua such portion of their territory or such rights, easements, or privileges therein or connected therewith, etc.

The reason I offer that amendment is that it would tend to eliminate any idea of purchasing any of the rights possessed by any corporation in either of those countries and confine it to the purchase from the countries themselves, and to obviate the objection that we might be empowering the President under this bill to buy out the old Maritime Canal Company.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY].

Mr. SPOONER. I want to say simply a word about that amendment. I suspect the amendment, if adopted, might defeat the grant by Nicaragua and Costa Rica of the easements and franchises which we will require. I do not know how many private concessions are outstanding, but if any are outstanding that are valid Nicaragua or Costa Rica might very well be obliged to say that they had incapacitated themselves by outstanding contracts from making the grants to the United States which this bill is calculated and intended to obtain, and if there is no power given the President to remove obstacles of that kind it might operate to defeat this bill. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] will know better about that than I.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, this amendment was taken from the amendment offered in the House of Representatives to the sundry civil bill, upon which a question of order was raised. The gentleman who is chairman of the Commerce Committee in the House of Representatives proposed that amendment. He has had some conference with me and with other members of the Senate, and we concluded that the amendment here reported was a very liberal advance toward his position. It is, in fact, as I understand it, agreed to as being substantially the same; and this form of legislation is acceptable to the gentlemen in the other House, who have really presented this measure, and who take all of the credit and all of the responsibility for it. I am not in any way contesting for honors in this matter. I want the canal.

I have made every possible concession that I could for the one single purpose of getting this canal constructed. The company for which I provided in the bill which the Senate passed by such a decisive majority have authorized me to say, as I have said on the floor of the Senate, and I repeat the remark here to-day, that, although they had spent a large amount of money in promoting the building of this canal, the Government was welcome to every cent of it rather than have the canal fail; that what they want to do is to build the canal, or they want to see the Government of the United States build it and control it.

It is hardly necessary and it seems to be very unjust to use words in our legislation for the purpose of cutting those gentlemen out now and hereafter of any right that the Congress of the United States might see proper to recognize. This bill as it stands here to-day makes it necessary, before the President of the United States can proceed to expend one dollar in constructing the canal, to obtain from Costa Rica and Nicaragua the rights which are herein mentioned—the right to the land or such easements therein as are necessary for the purpose of building and constructing the canal—that he shall agree with Costa Rica and Nicaragua as to these matters.

It is wise and necessary that this appropriation should be made to fortify the President in making that negotiation or arrangement with the Governments of Nicaragua and Costa Rica. He can not move an inch under this bill in the direction of building that canal by any arrangement that he might make with the Maritime Canal Company, or with the Grace Company, or with the British Atlas Company, or with any other company which has claims or concessions in that quarter. He has to commence with these two Governments. He is bound to begin with them. They owe obligations to these different companies. Nicaragua can not escape her obligations to our people with impunity. If she breaks her contract, either in making an agreement with us or if she has broken it already, we can not afford to say to our citizens, "If you have got reclamations of any kind against Nicaragua, you shall abandon them."

I do not think there is any occasion here for inflicting hardship upon men who have sacrificed their time and their money in good faith for the purpose of bringing this matter forward and gaining such position and attitude for the Government of the United States as will enable us to build this canal. I could not have it in my heart, if they were my personal enemies, to do that, and make a legislative enactment here which would exclude them entirely from all consideration. They do not deserve such treatment.

But this bill provides that we shall commence with Nicaragua and Costa Rica, and if we can not go through with them we can not go a step further. After we have begun with Costa Rica and Nicaragua, it does not compel us to make any concession to relieve Nicaragua from any responsibility to these people or to anybody else. So I hope the language we have agreed upon will be allowed to remain in the bill.

Mr. FRYE. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that the words he was anxious at first should be in the bill, "as may be desirable and necessary," have been stricken out, and now the power is left with the President to acquire only what is absolutely necessary for the construction of the canal.

Mr. MORGAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. BACON. Before the Senator from Alabama takes his seat, I should like to inquire of him if he agrees with the construction put upon this language by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY], as to the method by which the President would be authorized under this bill to acquire the necessary territory for the canal?

Mr. MORGAN. I do, Mr. President, agree with that construction. I do not think it necessarily involves the question that has been brought into consideration here, of making the ratification of a formal treaty necessary. I do not believe that, although that may be contrary to the judgment of the President of the United States. I am placing my interpretation upon the existing state of the law and the state of facts now existing. I could go on and amplify this matter, but I do not want to take the time of the Senate to do it.

Mr. BACON. If the Senator will pardon me, I understood that the Senator from Kentucky expressed the view that that would be necessary which the Senator from Alabama now says in his opinion would not be necessary. That was the object of my inquiry.

Mr. MORGAN. In determining what are the obligations and rights and duties of the President of the United States and of the Government in any of its departments, we have to give attention to existing conditions and situations. Now, a situation has been created here by our own act of legislation. What was that? A general act chartering the Maritime Canal Company. That act was approved on February 20, 1899. A good deal has been done under that act to carry it into effect. That act provides an incorporation for the purpose of carrying into effect—I will read the language in a moment. After naming the incorporators and the general purposes of the act, it defines them more particularly, as follows:

For the construction, equipment, management, and operation of a ship-canal from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean either entirely through the territory of the Republic of Nicaragua or through Nicaragua and in part through the territory of the Republic of Costa Rica with such collateral connecting, or cross canals as may be necessary to connect therewith, and to exercise such other powers as have been conferred by the Government of Nicaragua by the concession of that Republic to the Nicaragua Canal Association, through Mr. A. G. Menocal, its representative, and dated the 23d day of March, A. D. 1887, and finally approved by the legislative and executive authority of the Republic on the 25th, 23d, and 24th days of April, A. D. 1887, and such powers as the Republic of Costa Rica may confer of the same kind as those named in said concession.

Now, those legislative acts upon the part of Nicaragua continue, and whatever effect they may have to confer rights upon the United States of America, they certainly prescribe the line of duty and the line of obligation on the part of Nicaragua, and afterwards on the part of Costa Rica, which afterwards made a similar concession. These duties and obligations are toward the United States as well as the concessionaires.

Mr. President, this bill, if it shall be enacted, will carry into effect that general legislation of the United States providing that the President of the United States shall obtain the consent of Costa Rica and Nicaragua, and by an arrangement made directly with them shall proceed to excavate and build the canal.

So, while I made the remarks which have been drawn from me by the question of the Senator from Georgia, I do not wish to be understood as discussing a new question, one standing by itself. I take the environment, I take the surrounding facts and circumstances; and I think the President of the United States in the execution of this act might make what we call a diplomatic agreement with those Governments, an enlargement of their concessions already made to our people, by which they would consent that the Government of the United States might go on and complete the canal.

I merely make this explanation to avoid being misunderstood, and would not have offered these remarks at all, but they were called for by the question of the Senator from Georgia, and I thought it was my duty to reply to the Senator. There is no doubt at all that if we make an acquisition of territory from the Governments of Costa Rica and Nicaragua by contract that is new, that will stand by itself, confer upon us rights that we have not got now, and it must be done in the form of a treaty and brought to the Senate of the United States for ratification. How far such a contract may be independent of the existing state of facts we do not know.

Mr. TURLEY. Mr. President, just a few words. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] said we have to commence with Nicaragua and Costa Rica, and the amendment which I have introduced is to make that purpose plain, because the language of the section as it now reads might bear a different construction. It says:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire, for and in the behalf of the United States, such portion of territory now belonging to Costa Rica and Nicaragua—

So far, of course, as it goes that would require direct negotiation with those two countries, but it goes on and says:

or such rights, easements, or privileges therein.

That might cover the purchase of privileges existing therein from third parties. Therefore I move to amend it so as to make the title to be acquired by the United States to come through these Governments; and if the rights of third parties are outstanding, let those Governments then denounce those rights or get them in in whatever may be the best and most satisfactory way.

Mr. FRYE. Let us have a vote.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. TURLEY] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BACON. Mr. President, I want that made plain which the Senators say this amendment means now. They say it means that he can acquire it by treaty. That is not the language of the amendment proposed by the committee. I am most heartily in favor of the construction of this canal, and so much so that I propose to vote for any bill which presents any reasonable plan promising its construction which does not involve a violation of the Constitution as I understand it. I can not follow it whenever it goes counter to that. Therefore, in order that there may be no misunderstanding about that, and in order that what the Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Alabama say must be the proper construction of this law may be expressed in the law, I offer an amendment. After the word "acquire," in line 22, page 91, I move to insert the words "by treaty."

Of course I understand that a suggestion has already been made that Congress can not confer upon the President the right to make a treaty. That is undoubtedly true, but the use of the word "authorized" here would be construed in the nature of a request. I will say further that if that is what the proposed amendment means, the word "authorized" is already used. Therefore I offer the amendment.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I can not conceive that the Senator from Georgia has reflected fully upon this proposition when he comes to consider the advantage that it gives to Costa Rica and Nicaragua in wringing money out of the United States. Are we to say we will lay aside everything that has occurred, all the advantages that they have bestowed by their legislation and their concessions; the attitude that they have taken here, upon which we have spent more than $1,000,000 in making surveys and explorations without their consent, entering their territory as a matter of right; shall we lay aside every right of every citizen of the United States and all the relations that these Governments bear to us under these circumstances and confine ourselves to the question whether we can get out of the authorities of Nicaragua and Costa Rica new treaty obligations? In pursuing such a course they would have us where they would grind from us the last dollar they might choose to demand, or else the canal would fail.

Now, why should we thus tie our hands for the mere sake of accommodating the views of a particular Senator as to the construction of language, when this subject had been under examination for years and we have got into this measure such words as we think are ample security to the Government, to the President of the United States to prevent him falling a prey to this embarrassing situation?

This could all have been done a year ago if the president of the Maritime Canal Company had advanced to Mr. Zelaya—they had the money to do it—$100,000 to buy arms to make war upon Costa Rica. But this company, with a due sense of propriety and patriotism, said to Mr. Zelaya, "You can refer that question to the Government of the United States. We will not undertake to arrange affairs between this Government and your Government." They could have done this a year ago.

Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will not permit language of this kind to be inserted in the bill merely for the sake (that is not what it is offered for, but that will be its effect) of giving Costa Rica and Nicaragua an advantage over the United States in these negotiations which will have to be expressed in a great many dollars when this matter is wound up.

Mr. BACON. I desire to ask the Senator from Alabama, in order to get his view (of course this is not the particular section now under consideration, but by way of illustration), if he thinks that the powers attempted to be conferred in the seventh section can possibly be exercised by the President of the United States by virtue of an act of Congress? In other words, can the President constitutionally enter into negotiations with Costa Rica and Nicaragua and guarantee certain things to Costa Rica and Nicaragua except by a treaty?

Mr. MORGAN. I do not.

Mr. BACON. Very well. The Senator says he does not; and yet here is a proposed act of Congress which assumes to authorize him to do that very thing—not by treaty.

Mr. MORGAN. The Senator from Georgia, I think, can well understand what that means. It does not mean to confer a new power upon the President of the United States, but to inform Costa Rica and Nicaragua that we approach those States with a due sense of respect for their rights, whatever they may be, and that it is the pleasure of the Congress of the United States that those rights shall be guaranteed to them. They must be agreed upon and formulated, of course. We are merely addressing a friendly assurance to those States. We wish to disarm any suspicion they may have that Congress, in this enactment, is seeking to gain any advantage over Nicaragua or Costa Rica. We have already provided fully for all this in our treaty with Nicaragua and will do the same as to Costa Rica. There can be no harm in that provision.

Mr. BACON. I think the suggestion of the Senator is entirely in accord with that which ought to be, but it is not in accord with what we assume and propose to do. We say he is authorized to guarantee certain things. In other words, we say to the President of the United States, by an act of Congress, that he is authorized to make a pledge in behalf of the United States to those Governments. Mr. President, that is the very essence of a treaty.

Mr. SPOONER. Does not the Senator think we can safely presume that a coordinate branch of the Government knows something about the Constitution?

Mr. BACON. I certainly would not wish to be understood as intimating anything to the contrary; but unfortunately we do not always agree in the different coordinate branches of the Government as to the construction of the Constitution, and I know of no better illustration than the one we have had in the last year, when we did acquire territory by a joint resolution, which is the same as an act of Congress, and a coordinate branch of the Government at that time thought it was a constitutional exercise of power. It is a final exercise of it, because there is no appeal from it, it being a political act, and we being the highest court, if I may use such a word, to construe our powers under that provision of the Constitution.

Mr. President, I offer this amendment in no antagonism to the bill. Quite to the contrary, as I have said, I most earnestly desire that there shall be a bill, and I am willing to sacrifice anything short of what I conceive to be a constitutional duty to secure its passage. For that reason I have offered the amendment. If we could have from this body and from the House an announcement of the construction, such as the Senator from Alabama puts upon it and such as the Senator from Kentucky puts upon it, I should be willing to let the matter go, although I think it ought to be in other language.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON] to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. RAWLINS. Mr. President, since the point of order was made developments have made quite clear the purpose of this provision. The Senator from Kentucky and the Senator from Georgia, and I understood the Senator from Wisconsin, agree that this Government can not acquire territory from another government except by treaty. The Senator from Kentucky insisted that while this provision authorizes the President, or purports to authorize the President, to acquire territory necessary for the purposes of this canal from these two foreign Governments, it would be presumed that he would act in accordance with the Constitution and that he would not assume that he himself, without the concurrence of the Senate, could make a valid exercise of that authority.

The Senator from Georgia, in order to make that plain, proposed to amend this provision so that the meaning of it would be unmistakable; that the President would have no question as to the interpretation that Congress put upon the question of the authority to be exercised in this case. He moved to insert the words "by treaty." Now, if the purpose of the Senate and Congress is that it must be done by treaty, and that when the agreement or treaty is made it must be ratified by the Senate, as the Constitution provides, then there could be no possible objection to the adoption of the amendment which the Senator from Georgia proposed. That amendment, however, has been rejected by the Senate. That makes it clear to the President that we intend to confer upon him the authority to make a compact or treaty between these two independent governments, and assume that when he has done it, without its submission to the Senate for ratification, it is a valid act, and that the territory is thus acquired, and that the responsibilities of the Government of the United States, so far as they may be assumed by virtue of that act of the President alone, will be undertaken by this Government.

Mr. President, so far as it relates to myself personally, I am not much concerned about the river and harbor bill. It has been described by some Senators who are interested in it as being the declaration of a dividend to this creek and that creek, to this river and that river, in order to appease the demands of representatives of the States in this body or the representatives of the people in the other branch of Congress. This is a measure, if the amendment is adopted, which will carry from two to three hundred million dollars. There is no conceivable good or benefit that can come from it so far as a large majority of the people of the United States are concerned. I make no apology for the position I take in respect to this measure.

It does not imply that I have any undue lack of confidence in the Chief Executive of the nation, but I am unwilling to delegate to him, in contravention of the Constitution, the power to make a treaty for the acquisition of territory without the concurrence and advice of the Senate, as this amendment proposes to do. I am not willing to leave the question in his discretion, and his discretion alone, as to whether, upon the basis of an agreement he may see fit to make with Costa Rica and Nicaragua, or upon the basis of an agreement which he may see fit to make with the old Maritime Canal Company, beclouded as that situation may be with our treaties with foreign governments relating to that subject-matter—I am unwilling, so far as my vote is concerned, to turn over to his care and to his keeping the expenditure of these vast sums of money without conforming to any of the usual limitations and qualifications which pertain to legislation or the making of treaties under the provisions of our Constitution.

Mr. President, why this haste in respect to this provision at the present time? If it were designed that this territory should be acquired, these privileges obtained by treaty, which would have to be submitted to the Senate for its ratification before it could become valid, before the President, under the provisions of the amendment, could give direction to the Secretary of War to proceed with the construction of the canal and the expenditures of these vast sums of money—if it were intended, I say, that the form the Constitution prescribes should be adhered to in making these treaties, then it would be wholly unnecessary to make any appropriations in this bill.

Before any money is to be spent, if the Constitution is to be complied with, before the Secretary of War is to be directed to take any steps in the execution of this project, the right to that territory must be acquired, and it can be acquired only by treaty. The President can not make a valid treaty under the Constitution without the concurrence of the Senate. The Senate will not be in session until the next session of Congress. The President can not make and submit to the Senate during the existence of this Congress a treaty made in conformity with the provisions and directions of this measure.

Hence, if the Constitution is to be complied with, no valid agreement for the acquisition of the necessary territory for the construction of the canal can be made until a coming session of the next Congress. When it is made and submitted to the Senate, if it be a treaty with Nicaragua and Costa Rica, if it involves the acquisition of concessions made by either of those Governments to corporations or companies, if it involves modifications of our treaty provisions with other governments, if it be such an arrangement by which we can not only construct the canal but possess and control it, protect it and guard it so as to subserve not only the purposes of commerce but make it a means of strengthening our military and naval defenses—I say if such an arrangement is made and it is submitted to the Senate of the United States at the coming session of Congress, the Senate will then be entitled to take into consideration all the questions therein involved and determine whether or not, by a two-thirds vote of this body, it will concur in all those provisions and all those conditions; whether it will be willing that we shall embark upon this tremendous enterprise upon the footing or foundation which may then be presented to us.

Mr. President, if the Senate shall see fit under the Constitution to concur with the President in making such a treaty, it will then be left to Congress to determine, in the light of the arrangements which have been made in the manner in which the Constitution provides, whether or not they will make the appropriation of money necessary to carry into execution the plan which may then be submitted to us.

Mr. President, I will refer for a moment to the statement of the distinguished Senator from Alabama, for whom I have the highest respect, who is sincerely devoted to the consummation of this project. I question not his motives or those of any other Senator, but it seems to me the development of this case makes plain certain things. We can acquire no territory from Costa Rica or Nicaragua by treaty until the Senate shall have an opportunity to act and concur with the action of the President.

Mr. President, the authority given to the President in this case to acquire rights and privileges by purchase, coupled with the appropriation in this bill of the necessary money to enable him to carry out that direction, can only mean, and the President will be authorized and justified in construing it as, an expression of Congress to him to acquire what rights? Rights, supposed rights, conjectural rights and privileges of the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, or of some other speculative enterprise initiated and promoted, doubtless, by certain gentlemen more interested in their own financial welfare than in the great public good of this country; men who have embarked in the enterprise of obtaining concessions from those Governments in order that they might dispose of them to this nation for speculative purposes.

After a very careful investigation of all the rights under the concession made to the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua I conceive that they have nothing to sell. If this provision shall go through it will be an instruction to the President to carry out the propositions which have been submitted to Congress, to one Congress after another, for the past ten years. It is to induce him to take from the Treasury of the United States some five or twenty million dollars—how much, of course, I can only conjecture, because their claims or pretensions have varied according to the exigencies of the circumstances. But it will be a demand from them to the President for the surrender of that which has no value, to take from the Treasury of the United States a vast sum of money, the good money contributed for the support of this Government, to subserve its legitimate and public ends and purposes by the taxpayers of this country, my constituents and your constituents.

Mr. President, there is something involved in this, higher and more important far than that this bill shall be passed during the few remaining days of the present session when a combination—I will not say a conspiracy—of gentlemen come down here (without anything of value according to the showing which has been made, and as to which there can be little or no controversy, based upon any considerations which have been presented to us) demanding enormous sums of money for a thing which is without value and which expires by its own limitation before the next Congress can convene, before the Senate can have an opportunity of passing upon any treaty which may be submitted to it relating to this subject-matter. Are we going to do that? Is it necessary, Mr. President, for the sake of this river and harbor bill, that we vote now, to-night, in order that this scheme may be carried out to take from the Treasury of the United States and to turn over to private individuals without consideration money which was put there upon a sacred trust to subserve the great ends and purposes of this Government?

Mr. President, a proposition looking to a legitimate exercise of power by the President in the due forms prescribed by the Constitution is met with hostility and objection here. It is true it is met with objection by those who are in the majority in this body if in any way the proposition made is to interfere with the project by which the money is to be taken from the Treasury and turned over to a private speculative corporation, which is possessed of nothing of value to give or to cede or to turn over to the United States in consideration of the vast sum of money which they demand and exact.

Mr. President, if this bill were passed, and if the President, according to the instructions which will be given if this amendment is adopted, should buy the concessions made to the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua, or the other concessions which may be at large and which are without value, will that facilitate or advance one degree, one step, the consummation of that gigantic project by which the oceans are to be intermarried, to use the expression which has been used by some Senator here? My opinion is, judging from the circumstances which surround the injection of this amendment into the bill, which I conceive not to be germane to it, that when the worthless concessions of the speculative corporations have been disposed of and the millions have been taken out of the Treasury and turned into their coffers, the interest in this project will cease to be so acute and intense as it is just at this juncture.

These private concerns can not wait three or four days. The question of the construction of that canal has lingered through the centuries; and when this first step of turning over this money into their hands without consideration has been consummated, then there will be multitudes of difficulties which will thereafter arise in respect to the inauguration of that work, and its consummation will give Senators time enough to reflect upon the misstep which in my judgment they are taking when they adopt a provision like this. We can not construct a little post-office building inside of ten years under the Government's supervision in the city of Washington, involving an expenditure of $2,000,000 and less. In a tropical climate, under conditions which are little known, when will the Nicaragua Canal be completed?

Mr. President, so impatient are we, so impatient are those who want to part with their worthless concessions, who stand on the outside of us urging us on, that we can not wait in order to realize the fruits of the investigation for which we have made an appropriation of something like $250,000,000.

Mr. CHILTON. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

Mr. RAWLINS. Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. We are dealing with such tremendous figures in this project, in these appropriations that are now under consideration, that it is difficult for men to get down to the thousands or hundreds of thousands. It is hundreds of millions, Mr. President; and that is the question which in reality is involved.

Mr. President, we are so impatient that we can not wait to receive the fruits of the expenditure of $250,000 to know whether it is feasible to construct this canal, whether there is any line of transit through which by any possibility, by any stupendous feat of engineering, a ship canal can ever be completed.

If this matter were proceeding in the ordinary way, as if we were endeavoring to ascertain the best possible method by which to accomplish this gigantic enterprise, if we could for a few short moments eliminate the extraneous influences which are more interested in realizing wealth for themselves than to subserve the great public good of the American people, what would we do?

It seems to me that any intelligent business man who had an enterprise like that on hand would do this: He would have an examination, as we have proposed and made. He would wait until the facts elicited by the examination could be laid before him involving the expenditure of so much money as this will necessarily involve. He would go over the question in detail and with care and deliberation. If, after due consideration, he determined that the question was feasible, he would inquire as to the cost, and, after ascertaining the cost, he would next inquire as to whether he was financially able to carry it to success.

Mr. President, what is the predicament of this nation to-day? Of course, I do not represent a party; I speak only for myself. The responsibility of the administration of this Government is not with the Democratic party. It is with the Republican party. But we are told as to the condition of the Treasury of the United States. We know what that condition is. We know we have serious burdens and responsibilities upon our hands. The extent of those responsibilities, and the expenditure of how much money will be involved therein, what sacrifice of life, we can only to-day conjecture. But if we are to subjugate or if we are to exterminate 10,000,000 people across the Pacific Ocean, it will require many, many millions of dollars to bring about that result, that glorious achievement.

Mr. President, long ere we have consummated that, the surplus in the Treasury will have been exhausted. In order to take on that responsibility we will be invited here in a few days to appropriate $20,000,000 for the transfer of that turbulence and bloodshed 10,000 miles away from our seat of government. Now, in conjunction with all this, there stand around us, hovering about us like so many harpies, in the corridors of the Capitol, men seeking for worthless concessions relating to a territory which is so remote that the people of the United States know little about it.

They want to get their hands into the Treasury and take away the little surplus that now remains there.

Mr. President, where are we going to get the $115,000,000 with which to initiate this proceeding?

Mr. LINDSAY. Bonds.

Mr. RAWLINS. It is suggested to me that we will issue bonds. Aye, and another Senator says to me that is a fact. I am not going to enter into any discussion of the financial question as to whether they will be gold bonds or silver bonds or coin bonds, but they will be bonds, and there will be an obligation on the part of the people of the United States to contribute the necessary money to pay the interest upon those bonds.

Mr. President, I have no duty in this matter except that which I conceive to be my right as a Senator, having a common privilege with my colleagues in this body, to point out objections which I believe are vital objections to this amendment. I will ask the Senator from Maine who is in charge of the bill if he will consent to eliminate that feature of the amendment which makes an appropriation of $115,000,000 and the other features appropriating money out of the Treasury of the United States in order that that may await the further action of the Senate and of Congress after we shall have determined whether anything of value can be obtained by way of a cession from Costa Rica and Nicaragua?

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Maine has no power to eliminate anything from this amendment.

Mr. RAWLINS. Will he consent to its elimination as chairman of the committee in charge of the bill?

Mr. FRYE. He can not consent as chairman in charge of the bill. He has no authority. The committee put this amendment in the bill. The Senator knows perfectly well that there is going to be no expenditure of $115,000,000 for the next ten years. It will be impossible to expend it.

Mr. RAWLINS. Therefore, I see no possible reason for the enactment of the provision making this appropriation of $115,000,000. The Senator admits that it is without any necessity whatsoever at this juncture. It can not legitimately be expended this year or next year. He says it will not be expended in the next ten years; and I ask why this haste to make the appropriation now?

The Senator from Maine, I understand, moved an amendment to the bill by which the words "desirable and" were stricken out.

Mr. FRYE. That is true.

Mr. RAWLINS. The section under those circumstances will read:

That the President of the United States is hereby authorized to acquire * * * territory * * * rights, easements, or privileges therein or connected therewith as may be necessary to excavate, construct, control, and defend a canal, etc. * * * and such sum as may be necessary to make such purchase is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. LINDSAY] says that the condition upon which that money can be expended can only be when the arrangement or treaty has been submitted to the Senate and ratified by the Senate. For that reason there is no necessity for making that appropriation at this time. I move, therefore, to strike out from the section the words "and such sum as may be necessary to make such purchase is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The amendment will be reported by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. In the last clause of section 3, page 92, after the word "Ocean," it is proposed to strike out:

And such sum as may be necessary to make such purchase is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. RAWLINS. On that I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BACON (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE].

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. DANIEL (when his name was called). I would vote "yea," but I am paired with the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. HANSBROUGH], who is not here, but who, I suppose, would vote "nay."

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. McLAURIN].

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. Is the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] recorded as voting?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that he has not voted.

Mr. HANSBROUGH. I am paired with that Senator and will withhold my vote.

Mr. CARTER. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN]. I do not see him in the Chamber. I ask the Chair if he has voted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Nebraska has not voted.

Mr. CARTER. I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 5, nays 48; as follows:

YEAS—5.
Bate, Pettigrew.	Rawlins,	Turley,	Vest.
NAYS—48.

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Commerce as amended.

Mr. MANTLE. I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment submitted by the Senator from Montana will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend the amendment of the committee on page 92, section 3, at the end of line 8, by inserting:

Provided, That not more than two and one-half million dollars shall be expended in the purchase of such rights, easements, and privileges as may be owned or claimed by parties other than the States of Costa Rica and Nicaragua.

Mr. MANTLE. I simply desire to say in reference to that amendment that it proposes to limit the amount which may be paid to the Maritime Canal Company for such rights and franchises as it may own or claim to the sum of $2,500,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on the amendment of the committee as amended.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Mr. President, I do not wish to make a speech at this time, but I wish to say that I do not believe the Nicaragua Canal will ever be built under this amendment. If I thought this was the final disposition of the matter, I should desire to address the Senate at some length upon it.

One hundred and fifteen million dollars will not build this canal. In my opinion $315,000,000 will not build it.

But when it is built, if constructed by the United States alone, we must either make it a neutral canal, unfortified, to be used by all the nations of the world, or else we must fortify it at an expense of hundreds of millions more, and we must guard this 176 miles of canal in order to prevent its destruction, for its great embankments can be destroyed by a single person in a few hours of time with modern explosives. If it is not guarded, or if it is not fortified, our fleet, having reached Lake Nicaragua, could be imprisoned by the efforts of one man at each end of the canal along these enormous embankments 70 feet in height. Therefore I believe it is wise that we should delay the disposition of this matter until this whole question can be investigated.

Further than that, Mr. President, I believe it would be wiser for the United States to join with the other nations of the world and complete the canal at Panama. The canal at Panama is two-fifths completed already. The distance across the Isthmus at that point is 46 miles, as against 176 miles at Nicaragua. It takes fourteen hours to go from ocean to ocean at Panama, and it takes forty-four hours at Nicaragua.

Therefore, in view of the fact that the Panama Canal is sure to be built—for no great enterprise was ever abandoned where so much money has been expended as has been expended at Panama—the Nicaragua Canal, our private canal, will never be used by the ships of the world. There is no occasion for using it. No vessel will cross at this point. A vessel will have to spend forty-four hours in crossing, when it can cross in fourteen hours at another place; and the commercial value of the canal will be absolutely destroyed if the other canal is completed.

Four thousand men are at work to-day on the Panama Canal, and only 23 miles more of that canal remain to be built. The excavation for the rest of it is nearly done. Immense excavations have already been made along the 23 miles yet to be excavated. The money they are expending there is being expended with the most modern means of excavation and with great economy and great skill. Every single engineering problem has been settled. It has been determined beyond question that it is entirely practicable to build an excellent canal at Panama.

The problems with regard to the Nicaragua Canal have not been settled. There is no report before this body or before the American people to show that this is a practical route, or that a canal can be built upon it. Our own engineers, who were sent there at an expense of $350,000, have not yet made their report to this body, and it is not in our possession.

Now, what is the proposition? To expend a vast sum of money to purchase an old concession which is valueless; to undertake to build a canal which we say shall be our canal.

The Suez Canal is owned by the nations of Europe. Its neutrality is guaranteed by all the nations of Europe, and if the vessels of two nations at war with each other choose to pass through it, they can do so under the terms of that guaranty, only the vessel which first enters must first leave, and has twenty-four hours for departure before the vessel of the other nation at war with her can leave the canal, thus guaranteeing it against danger of conflict or destruction; and the canal across the Isthmus of Panama must and will be guided, governed, controlled, and guaranteed in the same way.

It is all nonsense to talk about our building, fortifying, and owning a canal of our own so long as it is a commercial canal, but if we wish one simply through which to pass our war ships, through which none of the commerce of the world will go, if the canal is to be our canal, and you are to spend $400,000,000 or $500,000,000 upon it, you are undertaking to start a project in this amendment without that intelligent consideration which it should receive.

This canal—and only one canal is needed—is of questionable commercial advantage. The distance from New York by Nicaragua or Panama to Manila or to Hongkong is 200 miles farther than it is from New York to Manila by the way of the Suez Canal. The route by the Suez Canal passes through the great populations of the world and by the great commercial marts of the world, with coaling stations everywhere.

A vessel leaving New York for Yokohama, Japan, would go through the Suez Canal in preference to the Nicaragua Canal. Why? Although the Isthmus is called 1,500 or 1,600 miles farther, it is really a shorter route, because when a vessel leaves New York to go by the Panama or Nicaragua Canal to Yokohama, if it goes by Hawaii, it must carry its coal to pass over 9,000 or 10,000 miles of the ocean, and carry so much coal that she could not carry freight, and she would have no intervening business. Therefore, the commerce with the Eastern world will not go through this canal when it is finished, but it will go by the way of the coaling stations of the East; by the way of the great populations of the world; by the way of the great commercial centers of the world.

It is 3,200 miles from New York to Gibraltar; it is 1,900 miles from Gibraltar to the Suez; it is 1,200 miles to the entrance of the Red Sea; it is 2,200 miles across to the island of Ceylon, and then across to the Straits 1,300 or 1,400 miles farther; then from the Straits to Singapore along the eastern coast of Asia, with coaling points at every stopping place.

A vessel loading at New York will take that route, because she can load with freight, because she can receive freight and discharge passengers every few days' sail; while if she starts for Yokohama, or the coast of Asia, through the Panama or Nicaragua Canal, she must sail 2,000 miles from New York to Panama; then she must sail nearly 5,000 miles to Honolulu, if she goes that way; and there she must buy coal, which has been carried there by ship, and upon which freight has been paid, or she must carry coal enough to sail the other 4,000 miles to the coast of Japan; and therefore she can not carry a load of freight and will not go that way. So the commerce of the Nicaragua Canal will be limited.

There are three or four problems connected with this transaction. The first one is, is it of advantage to the United States to possess this canal alone, to fortify it and use it purely as a war measure, and guard the whole length of it at the immense expense of maintenance, or would it not be better to join with the nations of Europe and finish the Panama Canal, so that any ship of any nation can pass through it at any time, whether the nations are at war or at peace?

The next question is, Do we want two canals as a commercial venture where but little commerce passes? A canal which gives access only to a great ocean to accommodate what is really but a small commerce which will go that way to the western coast of the United States and the western coast of South America.

The commerce of the western coast of South America is almost nothing. Why? Because mountain ranges of unparalleled height run along the western coast of South America, leaving but a shelf along the Pacific, with a sparse population. Therefore there are but few people there, for the crossing of these mountain ranges is almost impracticable, in fact, impossible, by railroads. There are but few people with whom business could be done, and those people are simply the people of western South America and the western coast of the United States. They are the only ones who are to be commercially reached by this route.

No vessel going to Australia will use the Nicaragua Canal. Such vessels will go by the Suez Canal and by the commerce of the world, although the distance is a little farther. But the distance is less when you take into consideration the facilities for securing coal and the chance for doing business on the route.

But it is said that the Nicaragua Canal will be a check upon the transcontinental railroads; and some one urges the building of the Nicaragua Canal because it will make the price of freight from coast to coast less than it is now. The commerce from one coast to the other, from the Pacific coast to the Atlantic coast, is infinitesimal.

The commerce of the transcontinental railroads is large, but the bulk of their business does not reach either coast. Therefore the commerce that will go over these lines will not be diverted by the building of this canal, because that commerce will be subject to a charge on the part of these railroads to bring it to the coast and to take it from the coast after you have carried it around.

If we wish to put a check upon the great transcontinental lines of railroads, half of the money it will cost to build this canal will build a transcontinental railroad from ocean to ocean, owned by the people of the United States and operated by the Government, fixing a rate of freights which would entirely destroy the competition of the canal and govern and regulate the rates of every transcontinental line. For my part, when I vote to expend money I will vote to expend it within the borders of my own country. When I vote the money collected from the people of the United States per capita, it shall be for those enterprises which will confer their blessings upon the people of the United States.

I would rather dig a canal down the lakes; I would rather spend this money to reach that vast commerce, so that an ocean vessel could load at Chicago or Duluth, than to spend it upon this canal of doubtful expediency and of doubtful utility in a semitropical region. I would rather spend that money to reclaim the arid lands of the West. We have 600,000,000 acres of arid lands, and 100,000,000 acres of that land can be irrigated by the streams of water which flow over those lands. They are also owned by the Government of the United States.

A population of 15,000,000 can be maintained upon that 100,000,000 acres, and the money that it would cost to build this canal would reclaim those lands and people them with people of our own blood, and in a climate where a man can be produced capable of self-government. The commerce of the people of this country resulting from the peopling of the arid regions of the United States would be a dozen times greater than all the benefit to commerce which will come from digging this ditch.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the adoption of the amendment of the Committee on Commerce as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. By an act of Congress approved June 3, 1896, the War Department was instructed to codify the laws touching rivers and harbors. We have passed laws in each river and harbor act, and they are scattered from the beginning of the Revised Statutes through to the end, and some of them are a little bit crude. The War Department have attended to that work and reported to the House. Now, they have placed in our hands all but two sections of the law, and they are contained in this bill, with some very few amendments to make the laws more certain. There has been some contention about the laws hitherto, the Attorneys-General disagreeing.

This amendment of three pages which I now offer is the result of their work. As it is all contained in the Revised Statutes, I do not see any necessity of reading this long amendment. It was referred to a subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce, and they examined it very carefully and found it to be entirely correct and in accord with the statutes now in existence, only scattered, as I said before, from the beginning of the statutes down through to the end, with some brief amendments, in order to make the meaning of the statutes more clear. So I ask that this amendment may be inserted. I do not think there is any necessity of reading it. It is only these sections of the Revised Statutes codified.

Mr. TELLER. I do not want to detain the Senate unnecessarily, but we have taken a good many things on faith in this bill, it seems to me. Here we have a provision to build a canal which I do not believe is acceptable to any man. I do not believe anybody is satisfied with it, and yet when we suggest amendments we are told, "Oh, well, that will be fixed somewhere else." I insist upon the reading of the amendment.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Is the amendment printed?

Mr. FRYE. It is printed. It came in in a Senate or House document. It was prepared by the War Department.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Do the amendments come from the Committee on Commerce?

Mr. FRYE. They came from the War Department to the Committee on Commerce and were reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The committee have duly considered them?

Mr. FRYE. Oh, yes, and examined them through a subcommittee with great care.

Mr. CHANDLER. I wish to ask the Senator whether there is any change made in the existing law by the amendments?

Mr. FRYE. Very slight changes to remove ambiguities. I have here a letter from Colonel Mackenzie, who understands the laws about rivers and harbors and understands rivers and harbors better than any man living, and I propose to have that placed in the RECORD.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Is it in regard to these amendments?

Mr. FRYE. It is.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Let it be read.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested. The Secretary read as follows:

In addition to the matter above referred to I beg to invite your attention to the following:

In accordance with the direction of Congress in section 2 of the river and harbor act of June 3, 1890, the compilation of all general laws that had been enacted from time to time by Congress for the maintenance, preservation, and protection of navigable waters of the United States was prepared and submitted to Congress, together with a draft of an act embodying such provisions and enlargements of the aforesaid laws as the experience of this office had shown to be advantageous to the public interests. The draft submitted covered every subject embraced in the existing laws with two exceptions, and was printed in House Document No. 293, Fifty-fourth Congress, second session, a copy of which is inclosed.

This proposed act I believe to be clear from ambiguity, and better adapted to serve the interests of commerce and navigation than the laws in their present form. The proposed act has 13 sections, the last 3 of which (sections 11 to 13) were incorporated by the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors in the pending bill. (See sections 6 and 7 of H. R. 11766.)

In my opinion it would be to the public interest to incorporate in the bill the remaining 10 sections of the proposed act, and I can conceive of no objection thereto, as these sections contain no new matter, but simply revise and make clearer and more definite laws that have been already enacted.

Sections 1 and 2 of the proposed act are intended to replace section 7 of the act of September 19, 1890, as amended by section 3 of the act of July 13, 1892, and I beg to invite your attention to the accompanying brief, giving special reasons why this particular law should be revised and amended.

Very respectfully,

A. MACKENZIE,

Lieutenant-Colonel, Corps of Engineers.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not like to object, but I think this is a dangerous precedent. It seems to me we are enacting an entire revision of these laws.

Mr. FRYE. Oh, no. There are not ten words changed in the entire thirteen sections. It is a compilation. The Senator understands that these laws have been passed in this way: A section in a river and harbor act fifty years ago, another one forty years ago, another one twenty years ago, another one later, and so on down. We put a provision in the last river and harbor act to codify those laws. The Department have codified them, and in their careful examination during the codification they found two or three of them, relating principally to impediments placed in harbors and things of that kind, which required to be changed, as to just a word or two, because the Attorneys-General had rendered different decisions in regard to the effect of the law.

It seems to me there is no necessity of reading them. I will state further, as I said before, that I examined them myself. I then had them referred to a subcommittee of the Committee on Commerce to go over them carefully, and the subcommittee reported that they were all right.

Mr. NELSON. I wish to say to the Senator from South Dakota that I carefully examined these amendments, and if the Senator will look at the sheets he will see that they are all printed portions of the statutes, nearly every word. There is no material change in the law. It simply puts them all into one body instead of having them scattered. I took special pains especially to see whether they interfered with existing structures and bridges and navigation, and they do not.

Mr. PETTIGREW. Of course, none of those statements satisfies my objection. It appears that we have a codification of these laws, and it is proposed to bring them in here—

Mr. FRYE. If there is any objection, let the amendment be read. I ask those who favor this bill to stay here to-night and pass it. That is all.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I have not said that I would raise an objection, neither have I yielded the floor to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. FRYE. I beg the Senator's pardon. I ought to have addressed the Chair in proper form, but I am getting a bit tired.

Mr. PETTIGREW. The Senator has committed the same offense again. I did not yield the floor, and neither did the Senator from Maine address the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GALLINGER in the chair). The Senator from South Dakota is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PETTIGREW. I do not know how important this legislation is. I have great confidence in the Senator from Maine and the Senator from Minnesota, but it seems to me a bad precedent that we should codify the laws upon this subject, bring it in here at the last minute, at the end of the day, and without reading it, without having it printed and laid upon our desks, without any chance to consider or think about it, practically knowing nothing about it, put it through as an amendment to an appropriation bill. But there are so many awful things in this bill now that I do not think you can possibly make it much worse, and I will not object, for the reason that I believe this will be another reason why the other House will never let the bill see daylight after they get hold of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. The amendment was agreed to, as follows:

SEC. 12. That it shall not be lawful to construct or commence the construction of any bridge, dam, dike, or causeway over or in any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, navigable river, or other navigable water of the United States until the consent of Congress to the building of such structures shall have been obtained and until the plans for the same shall have been submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and by the Secretary of War: Provided, That such structures may be built under authority of the legislation of a State across rivers and other waterways the navigable portions of which lie wholly within the limits of a single State, provided the location and plans thereof are submitted to and approved by the Chief of Engineers and by the Secretary of War before construction is commenced: And provided further, That when the plans for any bridge or other structure have been approved by the Chief of Engineers and by the Secretary of War, it shall not be lawful to deviate from such plans either before or after completion of the structure unless the modification of said plans has previously been submitted to and received the approval of the Chief of Engineers and of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 13. That the creation of any obstruction not affirmatively authorized by Congress to the navigable capacity of any of the waters of the United States is hereby prohibited, and it shall not be lawful to build or commence the building of any wharf, pier, dolphin, boom, weir, breakwater, bulkhead, jetty, or other structures in any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, navigable river, or other water of the United States outside established harbor lines, or where no harbor lines have been established, except on plans recommended by the Chief of Engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War; and it shall not be lawful to excavate or fill, or in any manner to alter or modify the course, location, condition, or capacity of any port, roadstead, haven, harbor, canal, lake, harbor of refuge, or inclosure within the limits of any breakwater, or of the channel of any navigable water of the United States, unless the work has been recommended by the Chief of Engineers and authorized by the Secretary of War prior to beginning the same.

SEC. 14. That where it is made manifest to the Secretary of War that the establishment of harbor lines is essential to the preservation and protection of harbors he may and is hereby authorized to cause such lines to be established, beyond which no piers, wharves, bulkheads, or other works shall be extended or deposits made, except under such regulations as may be prescribed from time to time by him: Provided, That whenever the Secretary of War grants to any person or persons permission to extend piers, wharves, bulkheads, or other works, or to make deposits in any tidal harbor or river of the United States beyond any harbor lines established under authority of the United States, he shall cause to be ascertained the amount of tide water displaced by any such structure or by any such deposits, and he shall, if he deem it necessary, require the parties to whom the permission is given to make compensation for such displacement either by excavating in some part of the harbor, including tide-water channels between high and low water mark, to such an extent as to create a basin for as much tide water as may be displaced by such structure or by such deposits, or in any other mode that may be satisfactory to him.

SEC. 15. That every person and every corporation that shall violate any of the provisions of sections 12, 13, and 14 of this act, or any rule or regulation made by the Secretary of War in pursuance of the provisions of the said section 14, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,500 nor less than $500, or by imprisonment (in the case of a natural person) not exceeding one year, or by both such punishments, in the discretion of the court. And further, the removal of any structures or parts of structures erected in violation of the provisions of the said sections may be enforced by the injunction of any circuit court exercising jurisdiction in any district in which such structures may exist, and proper proceedings to this end may be instituted under the direction of the Attorney-General of the United States.

SEC. 16. That it shall not be lawful to throw, discharge, or deposit, or cause, suffer, or procure to be thrown, discharged, or deposited either from or out of any ship, barge, or other floating craft of any kind, or from the shore, wharf, manufacturing establishment, or mill of any kind, any refuse matter of any kind or description whatever other than that flowing from streets and sewers and passing therefrom in a liquid state, into any navigable water of the United States, or into any tributary of any navigable water from which the same shall float or be washed into such navigable water; and it shall not be lawful to deposit, or cause, suffer, or procure to be deposited material of any kind in any place on the bank of any navigable water, or on the bank of any tributary of any navigable water, where the same shall be liable to be washed into such navigable water, either by ordinary or high tides, or by storms, or floods, or otherwise, whereby navigation shall or may be impeded or obstructed: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall extend to, apply to, or prohibit the operations in connection with the improvement of navigable waters or construction of public works, considered necessary and proper by the United States officers supervising such improvement or public work: And provided further, That the Secretary of War, whenever in the judgment of the Chief of Engineers anchorage and navigation will not be injured thereby, may permit the deposit of any material above mentioned in navigable waters, within limits to be defined and under conditions to be prescribed by him, provided application is made to him prior to depositing such material; and whenever any permit is so granted the conditions thereof shall be strictly complied with, and any violation thereof shall be unlawful.

SEC. 17. That it shall not be lawful for any person or persons to take possession of or make use of for any purpose, or build upon, alter, deface, destroy, move, injure, obstruct by fastening vessels thereto or otherwise, or in any manner whatever impair the usefulness of any sea wall, bulkhead, jetty, dike, levee, wharf, pier, or other work built by the United States, or any piece of plant, floating or otherwise, used in the construction of such work under the control of the United States, in whole or in part, for the preservation and improvement of any of its navigable waters or to prevent floods, or as boundary marks, tide gauges, surveying stations, buoys, or other established marks, nor remove for ballast or other purposes any stone or other material composing such works: Provided, That the Secretary of War may, on the recommendation of the Chief of Engineers, grant permission for the temporary occupation or use of any of the aforementioned public works when in his judgment such occupation or use will not be injurious to the public interest.

SEC. 18. That it shall not be lawful to tie up or anchor vessels or other craft in navigable channels in such a manner as to prevent or obstruct the passage of other vessels or craft; or to voluntarily or carelessly sink, or permit or cause to be sunk, vessels or other craft in navigable channels; or to float loose timber and logs, or to float what is known as sack rafts of timber and logs, in streams or channels actually navigated by steamboats in such manner as to obstruct, impede, or endanger navigation. And whenever a vessel, raft, or other craft is wrecked and sunk in a navigable channel, accidentally or otherwise, it shall be the duty of the owner of such sunken craft to immediately mark it with a buoy or beacon during the day and a lighted lantern at night, and to maintain such marks until the sunken craft is removed or abandoned, and the neglect or failure of the said owner so to do shall be unlawful; and it shall be the duty of the owner of such sunken craft to commence the immediate removal of the same, and prosecute such removal diligently, and failure to do so shall be considered as an abandonment of such craft, and subject the same to removal by the United States as hereinafter provided for.

SEC. 19. That every person and every corporation that shall violate, or that shall knowingly aid, abet, authorize, or instigate a violation of the provisions of sections 16, 17, and 18 of this act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $2,500 nor less than $500, or by imprisonment (in the case of a natural person) for not less than thirty days nor more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court, one-half of said fine to be paid to the person or persons giving information which shall lead to conviction. And any and every master, pilot, and engineer, or person or persons acting in such capacity, respectively, on board of any boat or vessel who shall knowingly engage in towing any scow, boat, or vessel loaded with any material specified in section 16 of this act to any point or place of deposit or discharge in any harbor or navigable water, elsewhere than within the limits defined and permitted by the Secretary of War, or who shall willfully injure or destroy any work of the United States contemplated in section 17 of this act, or who shall willfully obstruct the channel of any waterway in the manner contemplated in section 18 of this act, shall be deemed guilty of a violation of this act, and shall upon conviction be punished as hereinbefore provided in this section, and shall also have his license revoked or suspended for a term to be fixed by the judge before whom tried and convicted. And any boat, vessel, scow, raft, or other craft used or employed in violating any of the provisions of sections 16, 17, and 18 of this act shall be liable for the pecuniary penalties specified in this section, and in addition thereto for the amount of the damages done by said boat, vessel, scow, raft, or other craft, which latter sum shall be placed to the credit of the appropriation for the improvement of the harbor or waterway in which the damage occurred, and said boat, vessel, scow, raft, or other craft may be proceeded against summarily by way of libel in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction thereof.

SEC. 20. That the Department of Justice shall conduct the legal proceedings necessary to enforce the foregoing provisions of sections 11 to 18, inclusive, of this act; and it shall be the duty of district attorneys of the United States to vigorously prosecute all offenders against the same whenever requested to do so by the Secretary of War or by any of the officials herein-after designated, and it shall furthermore be the duty of said district attorneys to report to the Attorney-General of the United States the action taken by him against offenders so reported, and a transcript of such reports shall be transmitted to the Secretary of War by the Attorney-General; and for the better enforcement of the said provisions and to facilitate the detection and bringing to punishment of such offenders the officers and agents of the United States in charge of river and harbor improvements, and the assistant engineers and inspectors employed under them by authority of the Secretary of War, and the United States collectors of customs and other revenue officers, shall have power and authority to swear out process and to arrest and take into custody, with or without process, any person or persons who may commit any of the acts or offenses prohibited by the aforesaid sections of this act or who may violate any of the provisions of the same: Provided, That no person shall be arrested without process for any offense not committed in the presence of some one of the aforesaid officials: And provided further, That whenever any arrest is made under the provisions of this act the person so arrested shall be brought forth with before a commissioner, judge, or court of the United States for examination of the offenses alleged against him; and such commissioner, judge, or court shall proceed in respect thereto as authorized by law in case of crimes against the United States.

SEC. 21. That whenever the Secretary of War shall have good reason to believe that any railroad or other bridge now constructed, or which may hereafter be constructed, over any of the navigable waterways of the United States is an unreasonable obstruction to the free navigation of such waters on account of insufficient height, width of span, or otherwise, or where there is difficulty in passing the draw opening or the draw span of such bridge by rafts, steamboats, or other water craft, it shall be the duty of the said Secretary, first giving the parties reasonable opportunity to be heard, to give notice to the persons or corporations owning or controlling such bridge so to alter the same as to render navigation through or under it reasonably free, easy, and unobstructed; and in giving such notice he shall specify the changes recommended by the Chief of Engineers that are required to be made, and shall prescribe in each case a reasonable time in which to make them. If at the end of such time the alteration has not been made, the Secretary of War shall forthwith notify the United States district attorney for the district in which such bridge is situated, to the end that the criminal proceedings hereinafter mentioned may be taken. If the persons, corporation, or association owning or controlling any railroad or other bridge shall, after receiving notice to that effect, as hereinbefore required, from the Secretary of War, and within the time prescribed by him willfully fail or refuse to remove the same or to comply with the lawful order of the Secretary of War in the premises, such persons, corporation, or association shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000, and every month such persons, corporation, or association shall remain in default in respect to the removal or alteration of such bridge shall be deemed a new offense and subject the persons, corporation, or association so offending to the penalties above prescribed: Provided, That in any case arising under the provisions of this section an appeal or writ of error may be taken from the district courts or from the existing circuit courts direct to the Supreme Court either by the United States or by the defendants.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I know how ungracious it is to take the time of the Senate just at this hour of the day. I was not aware that the Senator from Maine intended to sit out the bill until just now, but I am not going to detain the Senate very long. As I am going to vote against the whole bill, with the Nicaragua proposition in it, I want to state in a very few words why.

In the first place, it is the most remarkable thing that I have ever seen in a legislative body in my legislative experience. As I said a few moments ago, we have a provision here that everybody admits is crude and unsatisfactory. I have not found a single Senator who did not admit when approached on the subject that that is true. I do not know whether that argues that the Senate is incapable of drafting a proper provision of law or not, but I want merely to have the attention of the Senate for a moment in justification at least of my vote on this subject, so that I shall not be charged, because I voted against this, as being hostile to that great enterprise—an enterprise that I know is to be consummated some time, and that in the course of reasonable time.

You authorize the President of the United States to acquire property. How is he to acquire it? Is he to buy it? You authorize him to pay whatever he chooses to pay for it. There is no limit upon that. When he has bought it—and the term "purchase" is used here—when he has purchased the property, he is authorized to go on and make a canal—just exactly such a canal as he sees fit. Who knows what the canal will be? It seems to me a statement that we propose to turn over to the President of the United States the exercise of such extraordinary power ought to be enough without amplifying it or wasting the time of the Senate. When that is done, you authorize the Secretary of War to make any amount of contracts he sees fit, up to a thousand million dollars, if in his judgment it is necessary. Such a statement as that, if it is truthful—and I think it can not be denied—is enough to mark this whole proceeding as one of remarkable character at least.

The President of the United States has not any power, and we have no power to authorize him, to purchase and make him our agent to buy real estate. He has the power, without any authority from us, to enter into negotiations with these powers for the privileges we propose he shall secure. He has not any power then to expend the public money. We can not authorize him justly and rightfully under the Constitution to expend the money of the United States unless the Senate of the United States shall ratify that agreement or contract or whatever it may be.

Then the appropriation here is $115,000,000, a practical tying up of $115,000,000, when everybody knows that under the circumstances there can not be used in the next year, if the canal is attempted to be constructed, more than one-tenth of that sum. The assumption is that the canal will cost $150,000,000. As I said the other day, there is not a man living who knows what the canal is going to cost, nor is there a man living with the data before him who can, before an intelligent body like this, declare that he knows. There is no unit upon which he can base the calculation of cost. You do not know what the unit of quantity is. You do not know anything about it. You do not know what the character of the canal must be or what it will cost. It may cost three or four hundred million dollars.

The expenditure is sufficiently large and the whole enterprise is of sufficient character and importance to demand of us a businesslike proceeding. There is no such demand made by the people of the United States upon us that we shall without proper safeguard and without proper attention to our public duties put into a bill of this character a provision of this kind full of loopholes and dangers.

I have no doubt a canal will be built, but I do not know, nor does anyone here, whether it is better to build it on the Nicaragua route or the Panama route. There is no one here who knows whether it should be built upon the Lull route or the Childs route. I have myself examined those surveys with a good deal of care, and yet I say that no one in this country would risk his reputation a moment by saying that there are sufficient data there to say that one route is preferable to the other.

I agree with the Senator from South Dakota that in all probability the Panama route is the better route. When the congress of engineers met some years ago to determine which route should be adopted, there was a general consensus of opinion that that was the best route if it was to be a lock route, and that that was the only possible route if it was to be a water-line route, except that the American engineers thought the expense of it was too great, and that therefore the other route must be taken.

There has already been expended on the Panama route about $75,000,000, as near as I can learn. It will probably take from fifty to a hundred million dollars more to build the canal. If it does not take more than a hundred million dollars, it is the cheaper route of the two and infinitely the better one, because it has not these great and dangerous dams which are to be found on the Nicaragua route—dams, as I said the other day, and I repeat, which have no precedent in canal building.

There is not a canal in the world that ever had such dams on it. The locks proposed never have been built by any engineer on the face of the earth; and I say that any good engineer, a man fit to deal with this question, would say they are of very doubtful feasibility. Yet this whole thing is to be done in a hurry. This whole question is to be settled because the Senator from Maine is in a hurry to have the pending bill passed.

I can take the data here and, I think, prove to any intelligent board of engineers that this canal is not a feasible canal, as proposed now to be built, by any plan that has ever yet been submitted to the American people; and yet, in my judgment, a feasible route can be found and the canal can there be built. However, it will take time to determine that, and the President of the United States—I do not speak of him as a man—has no data before him which will enable him to say what kind of a canal should properly there be built; whether there should be four locks or six, whether the locks should be a thousand feet or fifteen hundred feet long, or whether they should be eighty feet wide or a hundred feet wide.

There are no data. We are going into this matter absolutely blind. For that reason I propose to enter my protest against this class of legislation by voting "nay." Whenever any feasible and decent and respectable scheme comes before the American Senate for this purpose, I am prepared to vote for it. I am prepared to vote for it not because it is going to carry the commerce of the world through it, but I am prepared to vote for it because it brings the Pacific coast and the Atlantic coast nearer together.

It will never be, in my judgment, a great profitable investment like the Suez Canal, for the reason the Senator from South Dakota stated. All the prophecies which have been made of profit and return must be received, I believe, with a great deal of allowance. And yet, Mr. President, if it ever returns anything, in my judgment the time will come, and it is not far distant, when the American people will believe it is to their interest to build this canal, not with the expectation, in my opinion, if they are intelligently informed on it, that it is to be a paying investment, but an investment that will be of interest to us, and that we can afford to put our money in the canal just as we put it out in very many other things that make no financial or cash return to the people of the United States.

Every time since this question has been debated in the last few months those of us who have not been willing to accept the crudest and worst form for the building of the canal have been charged with being hostile to the canal. But for that I should have contented myself with letting this provision—which I think some day will rise up before us to make us trouble if the President should go on under it—pass in silence. I do not believe that the President of the United States will ever build a canal under this kind of an authority. I do not believe this kind of legislation hastens progress toward building the canal. On the contrary, in my judgment, it hinders and delays.

Now, Mr. President, I have said all I care about saying to-night. The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will proceed with the reading of the bill.

Mr. SULLIVAN. Mr. President, on this subject I desire to say but one word—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will suggest that Senators are proceeding by unanimous consent. There is nothing before the Senate. The Senator from Mississippi will proceed.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I desire to discuss the question which was under consideration.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire if I was speaking by unanimous consent?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that the amendment submitted had been agreed to. Of course the reading of the bill would have been in order.

Mr. TELLER. I was speaking to the bill. I was not speaking to the amendment, and if I had been I suppose I would have been in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi is recognized.

Mr. SULLIVAN. I shall make my remarks in response to the suggestion of the Senator from Colorado a little later on.

The Secretary continued the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section [7] 12, page 98, line 12, after the word "section," to strike out "six" and insert "eleven;" and in line 21, after the word "interfere," to insert the word "with;" so as to read:

That under emergency, in the case of any vessel, boat, water craft, or raft, or other similar obstruction, sinking or grounding, or being unnecessarily delayed in any Government canal or lock, or in any navigable waters mentioned in section 11, in such manner as to stop, seriously interfere with, or specially endanger navigation, in the opinion of the Secretary of War, or any agent of the United States to whom the Secretary may delegate proper authority, the Secretary of War or any such agent shall have the right to take immediate possession of such boat, vessel, or other water craft, or raft, so far as to remove or to destroy it and to clear immediately the canal, lock, or navigable waters aforesaid of the obstruction thereby caused, using his best judgment to prevent any unnecessary injury; and no one shall interfere with or prevent such removal or destruction.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary read to the end of section 12, line 17, on page 97.

Mr. FRYE. In line 14, I move to strike out the words "this section or the preceding section" and insert "the foregoing sections;" so as to make the paragraph read:

That all laws or parts of laws inconsistent with the foregoing sections of this act are hereby repealed: Provided, That no action begun or right of action accrued prior to the passage of this act shall be affected by this repeal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued. The next amendment was, on page 98, line 16, before the words "Point Wilson," to strike out "Pinol" and insert "Pinole;" so as to make the clause read:

Channel between the straits of Carquinez and the Golden Gate, off Point Pinole, Point Wilson, and Lone Tree Point, with a view to obtaining a channel 300 feet in width, of a depth of 30 feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 98, after line 18, to insert: Harbor of South San Francisco, San Mateo County.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 99, to insert:

St. Jones River, Delaware, from a point 60 yards above the drawbridge crossing said river at the town of Lebanon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 99, after line 23, to insert:

GEORGIA.

Brunswick, Ga.: Inner harbor, with a view of determining what improvement thereof is desirable in the interest of commerce and the cost thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 100, after line 12, to insert:

Waukegan Harbor, with a view to obtaining a channel 300 feet wide and 20 feet deep.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to the end of page 100.

Mr. FRYE. At the bottom of page 100, at the end of line 25, I move to insert:

And the aforesaid depth of 21 feet is hereby adopted as the project depth for the improvement in lieu of that fixed by the act of June 3, 1896: Provided, That all the work of removing and reconstructing bridges and piers and lowering channels necessary to permit a practicable channel with said depth to be obtained shall be done or be caused to be done by the city of Chicago without expense to the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, on page 101, after line 6, to insert:

Survey of the Mississippi River between Station 1840, as established by Government survey reported in Executive House Document No. 111, third session Fifty-third Congress, and the railroad embankment at the railroad bridge crossing in front of Quincy, Ill., with a view to preventing the filling up of Quincy Bay by sediment carried by the river in times of high water.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 102, to insert:

LOUISIANA.

Survey of Atchafalaya Bay from the mouth of Atchafalaya River to deep water in the Gulf of Mexico, 12 feet deep at mean low water and 200 feet wide, with an estimate of the cost of said improvement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, after line 9, to insert:

Parkers Head Harbor and Channel, Kennebec River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, after line 10, to insert:

Bucksport Harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, after line 11, to insert:

Kennebec River between Gardiner Bridge and Augusta Dam, with a view to securing a channel equal in capacity to that below said bridge.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. I move to insert, after line 14, page 102:

Kenduskeag River, at its mouth, with a view to securing a channel 2 feet at extreme low tide for the entire width of the river.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, under the head of "Maryland," page 102, line 19, before the word "Bay," to strike out "Brittons" and insert "Brettons;" so as to read:

Brettons Bay, on the Potomac River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, after line 19, to insert:

Elk River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, after line 20, to insert:

Tyaskin Creek.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 102, after line 21, to insert:

Rockhall Harbor, with a view to obtaining a channel through Swan Point Bar 150 feet wide and 12 feet deep and a channel in the inner harbor of the same width and depth; also for a channel 190 feet wide and 12 feet deep across the bar.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, for survey of New Bedford Harbor, Massachusetts, on page 103, line 7, after the word "Bridge," to insert "and also of removing the bar in the channel of New Bedford Harbor about 800 feet southerly from Fish Island;" so as to make the clause read:

New Bedford Harbor: To remove the bar between the present channel and the northerly terminus of the proposed channel on the northerly side of the New Bedford and Fairhaven Bridge, and also of removing the bar in the channel of New Bedford Harbor about 800 feet southerly from Fish Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Winthrop Harbor," on page 103, after line 18, to insert:

Piers and breakwater at Rockport.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading was continued to line 24 at the bottom of page 103.

Mr. FRYE. At the bottom of page 103, after line 24, I move to insert:

Cohasset Harbor, with a view to deepening the same and its channel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment, was for surveys in Michigan, on page 104, after line 11, to insert:

Mackinac Harbor: For the protection of the harbor by breakwaters.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 104, after line 18, to insert:

Copper Harbor: To obtain a depth of 18 feet.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 105, after line 4, to insert:

Long Prairie River and Lakes Carlos, Darling, Le Homme Dieu, and Geneva, Minnesota: With a view to the construction of reservoirs for the improvement of the navigation of the Mississippi River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 105, after line 8, to insert:

Two Islands or Saxton, Minnesota, situate about midway between Two Harbors and Grand Marais, Minn.: With a view of making a harbor of refuge at that point.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 105, after line 11, to insert:

Red River of the North, Minnesota and North Dakota: With a view of ascertaining what improvements, if any, should be made to govern and repress the floods of the river, and to prevent the undue erosion of the banks.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 106, after line 4, to insert:

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Pull-and-be-damned Point, Portsmouth Harbor: With a view to its removal, so far as the same is an obstruction to navigation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 106, after line 8, to insert:

Isles of Shoals: With a view to building a breakwater from Smutty Nose Island to Cedar Island.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, for surveys in New Jersey, on page 106, after line 13, to insert:

Maurice River, Oldmans Creek.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, for surveys in New York, on page 107, after line 15, to insert:

Patchogue River: With a view to deepening the channel from Fire Island Inlet to Patchogue to a depth of 8 feet, with a channel 80 feet in width.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 107, after line 21, to strike out:

East Chester Creek.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 107, after line 24, to insert:

Port Chester Harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 108, line 4, before the word "in," to strike out "the mouth of the Grand Ronde River" and insert "Pittsburg Landing;" so as to make the clause read:

Snake River: That portion of the Snake River extending from the town of Asotin, in the State of Washington, to Pittsburg Landing, in the State of Oregon.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 108, after line 5, to insert:

Lower Willamette and Columbia rivers below Portland, Oreg.: Survey and estimate of the cost of obtaining a channel depth of 25 feet at low water from Portland to the mouth of the Columbia River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 108, after line 13, to insert:

Mouth of Columbia River, Oregon and Washington: Survey and estimate with a view to obtaining a channel of 35 feet depth at lowest low water, and a report as to the desirability of such improvement.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, for surveys in Pennsylvania, on page 108, after line 21, to insert:

Pittsburg Harbor: With a view to ascertaining the means necessary to preserve it from unauthorized encroachments and other damage, the dredging required, the marking of harbor lines, and patrolling harbor, and the probable expense thereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRYE. On page 109, under the head of "Rhode Island," I move to strike out from line 2 to line 5, inclusive, in the following words:

Pawtucket River: Cost of straightening the channel between the mouth of Ton-Mile River and Bucklins Island, intending to use so much of the old channel as might be found advantageous.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment was, for surveys in Tennessee, on page 110, after line 7, to insert:

Richland River: From its mouth to Dayton.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 110, line 12, before the word "River," to strike out "Ocoee" and insert "Ocoee;" so as to make the clause read:

Hiwassee River: For its survey from its mouth to the mouth of the Ocoee River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, for surveys in Texas, on page 111, after line 8, to insert:

For a canal 10 feet deep and 100 feet wide around the raft in the Colorado River, in Matagorda County.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 111, after line 10, to insert:

Red River, from the mouth of the Kiamitia River to the mouth of Blue River.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 112, after line 2, to insert:

WASHINGTON.

Neah Bay: With a view to its improvement as a harbor of refuge.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. SPOONER. Mr. President—

Mr. FRYE. One moment. The amendments of the committee are not completed. There were two or three items passed over. The first one is on page 29, in the clauses for Conneaut and Fairport, Ohio. Neither of those amendments was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 5, after the word "improvement," strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Conneaut, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 7, after the word "improvement," strike out "one hundred" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Fairport, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $75,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 13, before the word "thousand," strike out "eighty" and insert "sixty;" so as to read:

Improving harbor at Sandusky, Ohio: Continuing improvement in accordance with plans submitted February 23, 1896, $60,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 36, line 23, after the word "reported," strike out "by Capt. James G. Warren;" and on page 37, line 1, after the word "reported," strike out "by Capt. George A. Zinn;" so as to read:

Improving harbor at Racine, Wis., according to the project reported January 13, 1890, and the project for widening and deepening said harbor and correcting the funnel-shaped entrance thereof, reported January 27, 1897, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 3, after the word "dollars," strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said projects, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $67,650, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated—

And insert:

Of which $3,000 may be used for maintenance.

Mr. FRYE. The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] has satisfied me that the proviso should not be stricken out. I ask that that committee amendment striking out the proviso be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FRYE. Now, let the amendment of the committee, at the end of the proviso inserting the words "of which $3,000 may be used for maintenance," which are in italics, be agreed to.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. The next amendment of the committee passed over is, on page 37, line 14, after the word "ninety-eight," to strike out "by Capt. George A. Zinn;" so as to read:

Improving harbor at Sheboygan, Wis.: For maintenance, $3,400; for improving said harbor according to the project for a breakwater reported July 23, 1893, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. On page 37, line 15, after the word "dollars," strike out the following proviso:

Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate the sum of $22,000, exclusive of the amount herein and heretofore appropriated.

Mr. FRYE. Let that be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin was recognized. Does he desire the floor?

Mr. SPOONER. I am through.

Mr. FRYE. That is all that I have to present in the bill.

Mr. LODGE. I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. After line 11, page 5, insert:

For the repair of the sea wall at Marblehead, Mass., made necessary by the great storm of November, 1898, $1,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War.

Mr. FRYE. That is all right.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask the attention of the chairman of the committee to page 31. The local engineer at Chicago asks that the full amount there in reference to Calumet Harbor be given, stating that it is necessary to complete the work. I will state to the Senator that the amendment I propose only makes a slight difference in the amount of the appropriation. I move to strike out "$800,830" and insert "$903,740."

Mr. FRYE. I think the Senator has not got it right. That appropriation is exclusive of the appropriation in another part of the bill, and the Senator is now proposing to put in the full amount.

Mr. CULLOM. The engineer says:

Calumet outer harbor requires $903,740 for the completion of the work estimated for February 9, 1898.

Mr. FRYE. But there is $100,000 appropriated in the bill itself, which takes off part of that amount.

Mr. CULLOM. If the chairman is sure of that, I am satisfied.

Mr. FRYE. Of course I am sure of it. There is not any question of it.

Mr. CULLOM. On that statement I withdraw the amendment.

Mr. GEAR. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The SECRETARY. On page 82, after line 6, it is proposed to insert:

That the sum of $50,000 be appropriated to construct a levee along the west bank of the Mississippi River from the mouth of the Iowa River, in Louisa County, to the city of Muscatine, in Muscatine County, Iowa: Provided, That the right of way shall be donated for said purpose.

Mr. FRYE. I am afraid I shall have to make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. GEAR. I do not think so.

Mr. FRYE. Why not?

Mr. GEAR. This is a river and harbor bill for the general improvement of rivers and harbors; and that being so, the amendment is certainly in order.

Mr. FRYE. There is no estimate for it.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment submitted by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. GEAR].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEAR. I offer another amendment, to come in after the amendment just adopted.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after the amendment just adopted:

That the sum of $50,000 be appropriated to construct a levee along the west bank of the Mississippi River, from the bluff above the city of Fort Madison, Lee County, Iowa, to the mouth of Skunk River, in said county, State of Iowa: Provided, That the land be donated for the right of way for said levee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 40, after line 7.

The SECRETARY. On page 40, after the word "dollars," at the end of line 7, in the appropriation for "Improving Everett Harbor, Washington: Continuing improvement, $50,000," it is proposed to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of War may enter into a contract or contracts for the materials and work necessary for the completion of said project, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, $342,000.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 53, after line 24. The chairman of the committee is familiar with the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 53, after line 24, it is proposed to insert:

Improving Town Creek, Brunswick County, N. C.: To make a channel 40 feet wide at bottom and 5 feet deep at mean low water from the mouth to Upper Bridge, and to snag and remove obstructions from the creek from the mouth to The Rocks: Provided, That no work be done until Upper Bridge is provided with a proper draw, $8,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANTLE. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk, to come in on page 82, after line 22.

The SECRETARY. On page 82, after line 22, it is proposed to insert:

To repair the south bank of the Missouri River at the town of Judith, Mont., $5,000.

To repair the levee at the town of Fort Benton, Mont., and confine the river within its present limits, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. When the river and harbor bill was under consideration, I was unavoidably detained from the committee. There are three or four amendments regarding California matters which I desire now to call to the attention of the Senate.

On page 39, line 6, in the appropriation for "Improving harbor at San Luis Obispo, Cal.," I move to insert the word "five" after the word "fifty," so as to make the appropriation $55,000 instead of $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. On the same page, in line 4, in the appropriation for "Improving harbor at San Diego, Cal.," I move to strike out the word "fifty," before "thousand," and insert "sixty-five," so as to make the appropriation $65,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. On page 98, after line 10, where the surveys are provided for, I move to insert after line 10, under the head of "California:"

Inner harbor, San Pedro.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE. Returning to page 39, at the end of line 2, I move to insert:

Improving Alviso Harbor, Santa Clara County, Cal., in accordance with project reported December 11, 1896, $48,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I believe the Senator from Maine, in charge of the bill, is now willing to accept the amendment which I offered a while ago. On page 31, line 15, I move, after the word "hundred," that the words "and fifty" be restored to the bill; and on the same page, line 30, that the words "and fifty-nine" be restored.

Mr. FRYE. The committee amendments will be disagreed to.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 31, in the clause making appropriations for "improving Calumet Harbor, Illinois," in line 15, the words "and fifty" were stricken out, so as to make the amount of the appropriation $100,000; and in line 20, after the word "hundred," the words "and fifty-nine" were stricken out, so as to make the amount $800,830.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendments of the committee striking out the words named.

The amendments were rejected.

Mr. McBRIDE. I move to amend, on page 108, line 16, in the appropriation for "Mouth of Columbia River, Oregon and Washington," before the word "feet," by striking out "thirty-five" and inserting "forty," so as to provide for obtaining a channel 40 feet deep.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PENROSE. At the request of my colleague [Mr. QUAY], who is unavoidably absent, I offer an amendment reported by him from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, on page 72, the following:

Improving Ohio River: Continuing improvement for dam No. 7, $25,000, to be used for the local survey, acquisition of site, and improvement of construction of said dam: Provided, That a contract or contracts may be entered into by the Secretary of War for such materials and work as may be necessary to complete said improvement, to be paid for as appropriations may from time to time be made by law, not to exceed in the aggregate $900,000, exclusive of the amount herein appropriated.

Mr. FRYE. I make the point of order against that amendment. It has never been referred to the Committee on Commerce.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The Chair must sustain the point of order.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended; and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in. The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

Mr. PETTIGREW. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BURROWS (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY]. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FRYE. So would he.

Mr. CARTER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. ALLEN], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. GALLINGER (when his name was called). I have a standing pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. MILLS], who does not seem to be in his seat; but I understand he is in favor of the bill, and so I take the liberty of voting. I vote "yea."

Mr. GEAR (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], but I will transfer that pair, by permission, to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. BURROWS], who has been paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY], and I vote "yea."

Mr. HANSBROUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL]. That Senator being absent, I withhold my vote.

Mr. PRITCHARD (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. McLAURIN], but as I am informed he would vote for the bill if he were here, I vote "yea."

Mr. WHITE (when Mr. VEST's name was called). The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] asked me to state that he was paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], but if he were present, he would vote "nay" and the Senator from Rhode Island would vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Washington [Mr. TURNER], but I have been voting to-day, as I understand he favors this bill. I therefore feel authorized to vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the senior Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], who is necessarily absent.

Mr. BACON. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. WETMORE]. I am informed, however, that if present, he would vote "yea."

I desire to say that, while there are some things in this bill which I do not approve of, and especially anything which indicates the power of the President to acquire territory other than by treaty, generally upon the bill I would vote "yea."

Mr. BATE. I do not know that I have any right to explain my position during the taking of the vote, and before that time I was out of the Chamber engaged in official business in the Military Committee. As I can not properly make a statement of my position at this stage of the proceedings, I content myself with voting "yea."

Mr. BURROWS. I transfer my pair with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. CAFFERY] to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. FORAKER], and vote "yea."

Mr. BERRY. My colleague [Mr. JONES of Arkansas] is absent sick. If he were present, he would "yea." He is paired generally with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. PERKINS (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. ROACH], but upon this vote I think we would agree, and so I will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 50, nays 3; as follows:

YEAS—50.

Bacon,	Faulkner,	McMillan,	Ross,
Bate,	Frye,	Mallory,	Sewell,

So the bill was passed.

REORGANIZATION OF THE ARMY.

Mr. HAWLEY. I ask consent at this time to report from the Committee on Military Affairs a bill for increasing the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes. There is great unanimity on the part of the committee in this report, and we confidently believe the bill will pass the Senate.

The bill (S. 5378) for increasing the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. HAWLEY. I move that the bill (H. R. 11029) for the reorganization of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes, be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs, and also the bill introduced by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. COCKRELL. I understand the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] to include in his motion the bill (S. 5516) to provide for the discharge of volunteers for the war with Spain, and for the continuance of the permanent military establishment on a war footing, and for other purposes, which was introduced by himself.

Mr. HAWLEY. I include that bill in my motion.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Connecticut that the two bills which have been indicated be recommitted to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUR OF MEETING.

Mr. CARTER. I move that when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet at 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The motion was agreed to.

MRS. LETITIA TYLER SEMPLE.

Mr. SHOUP submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1776) to increase the pension of Mrs. Letitia Tyler Semple, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives and agree to the same.

GEORGE L. SHOUP,
M. A. HANNA,
WILLIAM LINDSAY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
G. W. WEYMOUTH,
T. W. SIMS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

GEORGE HUGHES.

Mr. GALLINGER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1154) for the relief of George Hughes, of Portland, Oreg., having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 1 of the House of Representatives, and agree to a new amendment, as follows: Strike out the word "twenty" and insert the word "twenty-five;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to amendment numbered 2 of the House of Representatives.

J. H. GALLINGER,
J. C. PRITCHARD,
W. N. ROACH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,
G. W. WEYMOUTH,
T. W. SIMS,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

ENGROSSED AND ENROLLED BILLS.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives; which was read:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That during the last six days of the present session of Congress the engrossing and enrolling of bills and joint resolutions by printing, as provided by act of Congress approved March 2, 1895, may be suspended, and said bills and joint resolutions may be written by hand.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think the resolution may be referred or lie on the table.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. Rather than to act upon it now?

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I think it ought not to be acted upon at this time.

The VICE-PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will lie on the table for the present.

CITY AND SUBURBAN RAILWAY COMPANY.

The VICE-PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the joint resolution (S. R. 189) to promote the relocation of certain tracks of the City and Suburban Railway Company, of the District of Columbia.

Mr. GALLINGER. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendment made by the House of Representatives and ask for a committee of conference on the bill and amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the Vice-President was authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. McMILLAN, Mr. PROCTOR, and Mr. FAULKNER were appointed.

Mr. PLATT of Connecticut. I move that the Senate adjourn. The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 25, 1899, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 24, 1899.

The House met at 12 o'clock m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. HENRY N. COUDEN.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill I send to the Clerk's desk.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I gave notice yesterday that immediately upon the reading of the Journal I would move to go into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. Will the gentleman withhold his motion for a moment. This is a right-of-way bill and I have been waiting a week.

Mr. HULL. I have been appealed to by so many members of the House that I do not feel like granting indulgence to anyone until we get through with this appropriation bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. This is an important bill and it will not take but a moment, and I have been waiting for a week, and I appeal to the gentleman to let me in.

Mr. HULL. I can not yield to any member this morning.

GEORGE HUGHES.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I have a conference report on the bill (S. 1154) for the relief of George Hughes.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill S. 1154, "An act for the relief of George Hughes, of Portland, Oreg.," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to amendment numbered 1 of the House of Representatives, and agree to a new amendment, as follows: Strike out the word "twenty" and insert the word "twenty-five;" and the House agree to the same.

That the Senate agree to amendment numbered 2 of the House of Representatives.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,

G. W. WEYMOUTH,

T. W. SIMS,

Managers on the part of the House.

J. H. GALLINGER,

J. C. PRITCHARD,

W. N. ROACH,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, a motion to reconsider the vote agreeing to the conference report was laid on the table.

LETITIA TYLER SEMPLE.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I have another conference report, on the bill S. 1776, "An act to increase the pension of Mrs. Letitia Tyler Semple."

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill S. 1776, "An act to increase the pension of Mrs. Letitia Tyler Semple," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House of Representatives, and agree to the same.

H. C. LOUDENSLAGER,

G. W. WEYMOUTH,

T. W. SIMS,

Managers on the part of the House.

GEORGE L. SHOUP,

M. A. HANNA,

WILLIAM LINDSAY,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House agree to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. LOUDENSLAGER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

SUSPENSION OF ACT RELATING TO ENGROSSED BILLS.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I am informed that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAGER] has a resolution which it is very important should be now considered, in view of the necessary business of the House during the last days of the session.

Mr. HAGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring). That during the remaining days of the present session of Congress the engrossing and enrolling of bills and joint resolutions by printing as provided by act of Congress approved March 2, 1895, may be suspended, and said bills and joint resolutions may be written by hand.

Mr. DOCKERY. The law provides for that to be done during the last six days of the session, and I hope the gentleman will change the resolution so as to conform to the law.

Mr. SULZER. If the law provides for it, what is the use of adopting this resolution?

Mr. DOCKERY. The law authorizes the two Houses by concurrent resolution to do exactly what the gentleman from Iowa proposes to do by this resolution, except that the resolution provides for "the remaining days" of the session while the law authorizes the change to be made during the last six days of the session.

Mr. HAGER. But it requires a resolution.

Mr. DOCKERY. Certainly; and I suggest it should be made to apply only to the last six days.

Mr. RICHARDSON. That is time enough, too.

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, that is time enough; and it ought not to be done if it can be avoided.

Mr. HAGER. I am willing to accept the amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "remaining" and insert the words "the last six;" so that it will read "during the last six days of the present session."

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. HAGER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

EXTENDING POWERS OF COMMISSION OF FISH AND FISHERIES TO GAME BIRDS AND OTHER WILD BIRDS.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I present the following conference report on the bill H. R. 3589, "An act to extend the powers and duties of the Commission of Fish and Fisheries to include game birds and other wild birds useful to man."

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill H. R. 3589, "An act to extend the powers and duties of the Commission of Fish and Fisheries to include game birds and other wild birds useful to man," having met, after full and free conference report that they have been unable to agree.

GEO. D. PERKINS,

SERENO E. PAYNE,

W. JASPER TALBERT,

Managers on the part of the House.

GEO. F. HOAR,

A. O. BACON,

H. M. TELLER,

Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move that the conference report be accepted, and that the House request a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The conference report needs no action on the part of the House.

Mr. PERKINS. But I ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa moves to insist on the disagreement to the Senate amendment and ask for a further conference.

The motion was agreed to.

The Chair appointed as conferees on the part of the House Mr. PERKINS, Mr. PAYNE, and Mr. TALBERT.

OLIVIA WORDEN.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, there are two pension bills on the Speaker's table on which the Senate has disagreed to the amendments of the House and asked a conference. I ask that those bills be taken up, that the conference asked by the Senate may be agreed to.

The bill (S. 2919) granting a pension to Olivia Worden, widow of the late John L. Worden, United States Navy, was read, with the amendments.

Mr. RAY of New York. I move that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. RAY of New York, Mr. HENRY of Connecticut, and Mr. DRIGGS as conferees on the part of the House.

GEORGE W. NEVINS.

The bill (S. 1968) granting an increase of pension to George W. Nevins was read, with the amendments.

Mr. RAY of New York. I move that the House insist on its amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. RAY of New York, Mr. SULLOWAY, and Mr. CASTLE as conferees on the part of the House.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

By unanimous consent, the Committee on Foreign Affairs was discharged from the further consideration of the joint resolution (S. R. 61) for the relief of August Bolten and Gustave Richelieu; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

ADMISSION TO THE FLOOR.

The SPEAKER. The Chair desires to call attention to the fact that at fifteen minutes before 12 o'clock each day persons not entitled by the rules of the House to the privileges of the floor are called upon to leave the Chamber. The Chair hopes that members will not detain their friends on the floor after that time, as it is difficult in the closing days of the session to keep the House in order and enforce the rules, and the more so if unprivileged persons are upon the floor. The Chair calls special attention of members to this rule.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HULL. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for consideration of the bill (H. R. 12106) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900. Before that motion is put, I ask unanimous consent that all general debate in Committee of the Whole be limited to five hours, two hours and a half to be controlled by myself and two hours and a half by the gentleman from New York [Mr. SULZER].

Mr. SULZER. We are satisfied with that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL]? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that the session this afternoon be continued until half past 5 o'clock, so that the general debate may be closed to-day. I think we can get through by that time.

Mr. RAY of New York. A parliamentary inquiry. Would that interfere, Mr. Speaker, with taking the recess this evening for pension business?

The SPEAKER. It would not. In the absence of objection, the request of the gentleman from Iowa will be considered as agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. SULZER. I ask unanimous consent that all gentlemen who may speak on this bill may have leave to extend their remarks in the RECORD.

There was no objection; and leave was accordingly granted.

Mr. SULZER. I ask unanimous consent that there be a session to-morrow night.

Several MEMBERS. For what?

Mr. SULZER. To debate this bill.

Mr. HULL. I must object to that for the present.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. HULL, that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of the Army appropriation bill, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole (Mr. HOPKINS in the chair) and proceeded to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HULL. I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

There was no objection.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the Committee on Military Affairs, in the preparation of this bill for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, have been confronted with some difficulties. The estimates submitted by the War Department were on the basis of 160,000 men, and, as I remember, required in round numbers about $145,000,000 for the support of the Army.

It was evident to the committee, Mr. Chairman, that a reduction would be made in the Army before the close of the present fiscal year, for which appropriation is already made. Taking as a basis what is known as the Hull Army bill for the ensuing year, it will make the Army, substantially, to consist of 100,000 men. We have therefore framed the appropriation bill on that basis and on the lines of that bill, believing that it will not be possible to reduce the number below the number provided for in the bill during the next fiscal year.

We called for supplemental estimates from the Department, and we have had before us the officers of the various departments of the Government connected with the military establishment—men dealing with the pay, subsistence, and care of the Army—and the result of the investigation is the bill which is now presented to the House for its approval, carrying a total appropriation of $79,038,229.66.

There will be an addition to that of $50,000, which will be offered by the committee as an amendment with reference to the Ordnance Department, and that is the only amendment the committee recommends which will make a net increase. There is $25,000 authorized to be offered for the hospital service, including the care and maintenance of the hospital at Hot Springs, Ark., and $9,700 to replace the power house recently burned at Rock Island Arsenal. On the other hand, some reduction will be made in the total for the expenditures of the Commissary Department, in accordance with a supplemental estimate from the Commissary-General, which will about equalize these sums.

It has been stated by a very distinguished authority on appropriations that there will be a deficit, if the bill carries only the sum named, of at least $45,000,000. But let me state, in my judgment, Mr. Chairman, that if the bill passes as reported by the committee, framed as it is substantially on the lines of the Hull bill—and that seems to be pretty nearly what the Army will be for the ensuing year, if the reports in the newspaper press of the country are to be trusted—there will be no deficit at all.

The War Department, as all members know, in dealing with estimates are liable to make very liberal estimates for the expenditures of that Department; and we have deducted from their estimates the sum only of $5,277,495.00 from the total amount asked, which is as small a reduction in proportion as has ever been made in the preparation of bills for this Department.

Another thing, I think it is better to have a small deficiency than to have a large surplus to be carried over. I think it better legislation to get as near the absolute demands of the service as can be reached and appropriate under rather than over these estimates, for the reason that before harm could come from a shortage of the appropriation a session of Congress will intervene and supply what may be required. A too liberal appropriation leads to extravagance. But, in my judgment, the amount that we are appropriating is ample.

Now, I will call attention to various reductions that have been made, so the Committee of the Whole may know exactly. There is $200,000 taken from the contingencies for the Army. We gave them a very large increase over what has been given heretofore, and, in my judgment, we have given all that there is any reasonable probability of being expended. There is a $776,000 cut in the pay of the officers of the line, and there is a possibility that there may be a little deficiency in that when the results are finally reached. But we cut it out on the theory that all of the officers can not be appointed promptly enough to draw full pay for the entire fiscal year. It would take some time to organize the new force and get the officers mustered in so that they will be placed on the pay rolls of the Government and draw compensation.

We have deducted from the pay of the men $1,625,484. The estimate submitted to us was for the entire number of men provided for by the bill and for the full fiscal year, while as a matter of fact there has never been a time when all of the men authorized by our law were enlisted in the Army. We took about the average of what is shown by the records to have been the enlistment heretofore in proportion to the total force authorized, and on that made the calculation. We believe the amount to be sufficient and ample. All know that it would be almost impossible for the next fiscal year, at least, to have an army of 100,000 men—that is to say, an army enlisted up to the maximum. And so, while the maximum of the officers authorized under the law may be more nearly reached than in reference to the men, yet in the judgment of the committee there will be no deficiency in this regard.

Another proposition was considered by the committee and adopted, and that is to cut the amount of $125,000 from the appropriation for the subsistence of the Army. That was done on the suggestion of the Commissary-General that the reduction could be made, and we have taken $181,000 from the amount appropriated to pay the Cubans after the 30th of June next. We still leave $100,000 for that purpose, and the committee thought, and, so far as I am concerned personally, I wish to say that I am of the opinion, that we ought not to appropriate a single dollar after that time, for after the 30th of June the inhabitants of Cuba should be able to maintain themselves entirely independent of all expenditures for charity on the part of the people of the United States. But we left $100,000 for rations for Cubans, which, to say the least, is generous.

On the subject of horses for the Army, we deducted $770,000. The Quartermaster-General proposed to mount every cavalryman and every artilleryman in the Army within the next fiscal year. The committee believe that that would not be necessary; that it was an unusual state of affairs which would require an entire remount during the next fiscal year. We have purchased a large number of horses for the Volunteer Army for the service, and own them now, but many of them are in bad condition, it is true, many of them unfit for service; but still the Army is well supplied, as well as it has ever been, and we have simply taken off one-half of the amount, leaving enough money to remount one-half of the entire Army during the next fiscal year; so that, I believe, in place of a deficit in the appropriations there will be a surplus.

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that we can not hear.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee will be in order.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, the next item on which a reduction is made is barracks and quarters. We cut off one million there. The Department estimated for four millions; an enormous increase over any appropriation ever made before, and an increase that we can conceive is necessary in large part from the fact that we are building barracks and quarters on territory not heretofore in the jurisdiction of the United States; but we still leave them $3,000,000, which is more than four times as much as ever appropriated in any session of Congress since I have been a member.

We can not conceive how it will be necessary to use more than the three millions allowed by the committee.

The next reduction is $600,000 for medical and hospital supplies. We give them $1,500,000 in the bill. The testimony of the Surgeon-General was that he had a large amount of supplies on hand; and after the civil war closed the Medical Department was selling supplies for some time in place of purchasing more. We have increased this appropriation largely over what was contained in the last bill, and in my judgment it is absolutely ample for all the demands of the service.

Mr. VANDIVER. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. HULL. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose, if it is on this line.

Mr. VANDIVER. When the chairman of the committee speaks of reduction on a given point, I wish to know whether he refers to a reduction from the estimates of the Secretary of War or a reduction from the previous expenditures.

Mr. HULL. It is a reduction from the revised estimates that are not published, but were given to the committee.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call attention to one other thing in the bill, and that is to the new legislation. There is some new legislation in the bill.

On page 2, lines 9 and 10, we have inserted the words "including the purchase of law books, books of reference, periodicals, and newspapers." That is done at the request of the Adjutant-General's Department and, we think, is necessary for the public service. It is a small item of expense, and if you will remember, after the war commenced, the House passed a bill making this item on an appropriation bill available for the present fiscal year.

The next new legislation will be found on page 3, and it is a question in my mind whether it is really new legislation or not, for this reason: The law now provides for clerks and messengers at department headquarters and at Headquarters of the Army. The committee has increased the number of clerks made necessary by the larger number of departments and by the demands of the service, and has further than that increased the salaries of the clerks in some of those places.

Mr. GAINES. How much does this bill propose to appropriate?

Mr. HULL. Seventy-nine million thirty-eight thousand two hundred and twenty-nine dollars. I think the appropriation, when it is finally filled out, will be in the neighborhood of $79,080,000.

Mr. MOODY. These are not clerks in the departments?

Mr. HULL. These are clerks that have been provided for, but we have increased the number. They are not in the departments. There is no law fixing the number except on appropriation bills, and it is a question in my mind whether the point of order will lie against it, but I want to call attention to it.

On page 3, again, in line 25, and over in line 1, page 6, the committee has changed the language from "to departments and headquarters" to the words "to the offices and positions;" so that in place of reading as it does now, "assigned by the Secretary of War to the departments and headquarters in which they are to serve," it will read: "assigned by the Secretary of War to the offices and positions in which they are to serve." That has been done at the request of the Department, and we felt satisfied that it was reasonable.

On page 9 all the provision with regard to the Record and Pension Office could be construed to be new legislation, from the fact that it provides for the pay of a brigadier-general and an assistant in the office with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, whereas the law as it stands to-day would only provide for a colonel. But I think the committee will recognize the fact that the bill that passed the House and every bill that has been reported to the Senate provide for substantially just what we have in this bill.

Mr. BARTLETT. Is the gentleman explaining the provision on page 9?

Mr. HULL. Yes; it is simply an appropriation for the Record and Pension Office. It appropriates for a brigadier-general and for an assistant with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, while the present law only provides for a colonel; and I was stating as a reason for that, that I have no doubt before this Congress closes some law will pass, substantially as indicated in this appropriation.

Mr. MOODY. And in case the rank is not created the money will not be expended.

Mr. HULL. Oh, certainly not.

Mr. GAINES. Now, will the gentleman answer one question? Is this appropriation based on the assumption that our Regular Army will be a hundred thousand men, or what number?

Mr. HULL. A hundred thousand, officers and men. It is based on what is known as the Hull bill. I will say very frankly that that is what it was figured on, all through. Now, Mr. Chairman, on page 11, in line 8, the committee inserted the words in regard to mileage for contract surgeons. Under the present law contract surgeons may be paid, but there is no law really providing for it. This gives them the same rights that a surgeon has when traveling for the Government.

The proviso on page 11 is all new legislation. It is in regard to the payment and settlement of mileage accounts of officers, and is in the following words for the first proviso:

Provided, That the payment and settlement of mileage accounts of officers shall be made according to distances computed over routes established and by mileage tables prepared by the Paymaster-General under the directions of the Secretary of War, and all payments made by paymasters on account of mileage previous to the passage of this act shall be settled in accordance with the mileage distances as above provided.

That was put in at the request of some of the officers of the War Department. I will not say at the request of the Department, and was put in for the reason that there is constant friction between the Treasury and the War Department as to the mileage of officers. Frequently a paymaster settles on a basis approved by the War Department, and the account goes to the Treasury, and on some other tables prepared there the Treasury Department may raise or lower the amount. It seemed to the committee that some one Department should be responsible for figuring the mileage by the nearest usually traveled route, and that that should be final.

I will say to the committee that some officers of the Treasury Department do not like this proviso and would prefer, if it is to be enacted into law, that the Treasury in place of the War Department should do the figuring on mileage. There is another proviso right here on the same page which reads as follows:

Provided further, That actual expenses only shall be paid to officers when traveling to and from our island possessions in the Atlantic and Pacific oceans.

That is subject to a point of order, but I do not believe that any member of this committee would raise it. At present officers traveling on duty without troops get 7 cents a mile. That law was passed when we had only our own interior lines to take care of. To-day an officer going from San Francisco to Manila or from New York to Porto Rico, traveling without troops, would be entitled to 7 cents a mile, even if he should go on a Government transport. This proviso makes it so that hereafter all these officers shall receive only their actual expenses when so traveling, and I believe that it is just to the officers and absolutely just to the Government. So that I do not believe any man in the House will raise the point of order on the last proviso.

Mr. TODD. Would the gentleman allow me a question regarding the tables which it is proposed to have the Secretary of War make—the mileage tables? I understand the gentleman to say that the War Department will make those mileage tables over the shortest and most direct route.

Mr. HULL. The law requires that.

Mr. TODD. All right.

Mr. HULL. Now, Mr. Chairman, on page 16 you will find new legislation under the head of "Incidental expenses," commencing after the word "soldiers," in line 16, as follows:

And that in all cases where they would have been lawful claims against the Government, reimbursement may be made of expenses heretofore or hereafter incurred by individuals of burial and transportation of remains of officers, including acting assistant surgeons, not to exceed what is now allowed in the cases of officers and for the reimbursement in the cases of enlisted men of what is now allowed in their cases, may be made out of the proper funds appropriated by this act, and that the disbursing officers shall be credited with such reimbursements heretofore made.

This is in regard to officers or men who have been killed in action or who die on duty when in the field or at a military post. The amendment extends that, so that if they are killed or die at a place where there is no quartermaster, and the amount is paid, it shall be a claim against the Government, to be reimbursed by the Treasury. I will not take time upon it further, except to say that to-day, unless the quartermaster himself pays the bill, the charge can not be paid. The provision applies to all officers of the Army and enlisted men.

On page 24 there is a little amendment in line 10, inserting the words "National Home of Washington, D. C." That is in regard to supplying ammunition for burials. Heretofore the law has limited the ammunition furnished for burials to the National Homes for Volunteer Soldiers. We believe that the same thing should be supplied to National Homes for the regulars here adjoining Washington. And the same amendment was put in on page 25, lines 5 and 6, and the proviso on page 25, beginning after the word "manufacture," in line 13, is new legislation. That is as follows:

Provided, That on application of the governor of any State or Territory the Secretary of War is authorized to replace the ordnance and ordnance stores which the volunteers from said State or Territory carried into the service of the United States Army during the recent war with Spain, and which have been retained by the United States, $300,000.

The National Guard, as you remember, were taken into the Army as organized under the bill passed last spring. There was no proviso in that bill that when they were mustered out they could take their arms back to their States. The result is that a large number of States, probably all of them, are now short of arms, and there is no authority in the Government to reissue them. This proviso meets that emergency and authorizes the United States Government to return the arms and equipments on the application of the governors of the different States.

I think, Mr. Chairman, that is all the legislation in this bill which would under any circumstances be subject to a point of order. The committee has, however, inserted a proposition in the bill which we think to be exceedingly valuable, to commence the manufacture of small arms at the arsenal at Rock Island. That arsenal is designated in the law as a "national arsenal and armory," and there has been built at the arsenal heretofore a row of buildings especially designed for the manufacture of small arms. This bill simply provides for the machinery and fixtures to commence the manufacture. The provision is on page 25, commencing on line 20 and ending at line 23. I do not believe that this is subject to a point of order, but I call attention to it because it is the beginning of the manufacture at another armory of the small arms for the Government.

There is a universal demand over this country for arming and equipping of the National Guards, or State organized militia, if you want to call it so, to arm and equip them in the same manner that the Regular Army is armed and equipped. They should be so armed and equipped. They are entitled to learn to use the best arms the Government can furnish them, so that, in the event of their services being required, they could feel that they were familiar with the arm they were using. Unless we commence to manufacture the arms as suggested in this bill, those of us that are now living would not live to see the day come when the Government of the United States could arm the National Guard with what is now, I believe, called the United States service gun—the old Krag-Jorgensen.

Mr. GAINES. What kind of arms do you propose to manufacture?

Mr. HULL. The Krag-Jorgensen gun, fixtures, and ammunition. We propose to commence the manufacture on the same lines that we are now manufacturing them at Springfield, Mass.

Mr. GAINES. When were these buildings erected there?

Mr. HULL. The gentleman from Illinois can perhaps give the gentleman the information. They have been there some time.

Mr. GAINES. The gentleman thinks it is time the United States commenced the manufacture of their arms from the raw material?

Mr. HULL. I do, indeed.

Mr. GAINES. Then I hope we shall soon have an armor-plate manufactory.

Mr. HULL. Now, it has been suggested to me repeatedly that the committee had no right, and that the House would not indorse the theory of proceeding on the line of a bill carrying with it provision for 100,000 men. We have had other propositions before us; there have been substitutes offered to the bill. When it was before the House, especially the one offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. HAY] providing for 80,000 men, 50 regiments of volunteers and 30 of infantry, making 80,000 officers and men, that was voted down in the House. There has been discussion in the newspapers as to what would be done in this Congress in regard to the military bill, and a great many of my friends on the other side insist that we should not appropriate in this bill for more than the law now provides for.

A section of the bill provides that the appropriation shall be available not only for the payment of the regulars, but of any volunteers in the service during the next fiscal year. So the amount could be applied to whatever troops may be in the service. If what I saw in the press last evening had been true, we would expect a large reduction in this bill when it reaches the Senate. But, Mr. Chairman, a fuller investigation of the situation convinces me that the press was entirely wrong in the estimate of what would be the probable action of the Senate in regard to the Army legislation. It is true that that body at least proposes to make something of a compromise.

The statement has been published that this measure follows the lines laid down by the Senator from Missouri; and there is no doubt in my mind that that Senator is the cause of the change of front in regard to army legislation. He has been strong enough, evidently, to compel the Senate of the United States—the majority of it, I suppose—to agree to a proposition which a few days ago it would not have agreed to. I do not know whether the statement published is true or not; but one of my friends in this House said to me this morning that he could supplement the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLARK] by a later one—that "the Democratic party had taken the Republicans by the scruff of the neck and compelled them to go into war," and that now another leading Democrat had taken the whole party by the scruff of the neck—

Mr. GAINES. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of inquiring whether the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa are in order when he refers to a Senator from Missouri and makes comments upon what that Senator has said. I remember that a few days ago remarks of that kind were ruled out of order—

Several MEMBERS. Let him go on.

Mr. GAINES. I think myself that was a wrong ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. HULL. I am through that part of my remarks. I was saying, however, that it appeared another distinguished Democrat had "taken the Republican party by the scruff of the neck" and compelled it to accept what the Democrats were willing to give us on army legislation.

Mr. GAINES. Who has had your President by the nape of the neck?

Mr. COX. Who was it said that?

Mr. HULL. I do not know that I need name him.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. HULL. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. This is not exactly a question; but I do not want the gentleman from Iowa to put those latter words in my mouth, because I never said them.

Mr. HULL. Oh, no; you did not; you are not the man. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, I now send to the Clerk's desk, that it may be read in my time, a full copy of a bill that I understand is to be presented in the Senate and which probably this House will have an opportunity to vote for.

Mr. BLAND. What bill is that? Is it the Army reorganization bill?

Mr. HULL. If the gentleman will listen, he will find out what it is. It is a bill which I think the gentleman will vote for.

Mr. COX. Will the chairman of our committee [Mr. HULL] yield for one question?

Mr. HULL. Most certainly.

Mr. COX. The gentleman sends up this bill, and he says to the House that it is a proposition from the Senate which we shall probably have to vote on. Now, I thought we were going to vote on the gentleman's bill.

Mr. HULL. I think that question answers itself in connection with what I have said. We have voted upon and passed my bill. Let the bill—or, rather, paper; I will not call it a bill—be read.

Mr. COX. Then your bill is all "out of fix," and you have adopted the Senate bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill for increasing the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes—

Mr. SULZER (interrupting the reading). Before the Clerk reads further this proposed bill, I desire to say to the gentleman from Iowa that all points of order on this appropriation bill have been reserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. HENDERSON. May I ask my colleague what is the bill which he is proposing to have read?

Mr. HULL. I am proposing to have read a proposition that is pending before Congress, or will be pending, in regard to the organization of the Army, and I ask that it be read in my time.

Mr. HENDERSON. Do you mean the Senate proposition?

Mr. HULL. I do not know whether you would call it "the Senate proposition." I understand it to be what was arranged by a distinguished conference that I heard of yesterday.

Mr. HENDERSON. Is this to be offered here in the House to-day?

Mr. HULL. I think it will be introduced after it is read. It is in my hands to do what I please with it.

Mr. HENDERSON. Will it be offered on this Army appropriation bill?

Mr. HULL. No, sir; I am asking that it be read as showing the reason why we want to appropriate for substantially 100,000 men.

Mr. SULZER. I understand that this paper is one—

Mr. HULL. I decline to yield further, if this is to come out of my time.

Mr. SULZER. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understand that this paper which the gentleman from Iowa has sent up to the desk is to be read simply as a part of his remarks in his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa has so stated. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12176) for increasing the efficiency of the Army of the United States, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That from and after the date of the approval of this act the Army of the United States shall consist of 3 major-generals, 6 brigadier-generals, 10 regiments of cavalry, 7 regiments of artillery, 25 regiments of infantry, an Adjutant-General's Department, an Inspector-General's Department, a Judge-Advocate-General's Department, a Quartermaster's Department, a Subsistence Department, a Medical Department, a Pay Department, a Corps of Engineers, an Ordnance Department, a Signal Corps, 80 chaplains, to be assigned to regiments or posts in the discretion of the Secretary of War, the officers of the Record and Pension Office, the officers and enlisted men of the Army on the retired list, the professors, corps of cadets, an army-service detachment and band at the United States Military Academy, and such other officers and enlisted men as may hereinafter be provided for.

SEC. 2. That each regiment of cavalry shall consist of 1 colonel; 1 lieutenant-colonel; 3 majors; 14 captains, 2 of whom shall be available for detail as adjutant and quartermaster; 16 first lieutenants, of whom 1 shall be available for detail as commissary and 3 for detail as squadron adjutants; 12 second lieutenants; 2 veterinarians; 1 sergeant-major; 1 quartermaster-sergeant; 1 commissary-sergeant, who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a regimental quartermaster-sergeant of cavalry; 3 squadron sergeant-majors, who shall be senior to and have the pay and allowances of first sergeants of cavalry; 1 band, and 12 troops organized into 3 squadrons of 4 troops each: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as abolishing the office of chaplain in each regiment of colored cavalry. Each cavalry band shall consist of 1 chief musician; 1 chief trumpeter; 1 principal musician; 1 drum major, who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a first sergeant; 4 sergeants; 8 corporals; 1 cook, and 11 privates.

Each troop of cavalry shall consist of 1 captain; 1 first lieutenant; 1 second lieutenant; 1 first sergeant; 1 quartermaster-sergeant, who shall have the pay and allowances of a sergeant; 6 sergeants; 6 corporals; 2 cooks; 2 farriers and blacksmiths; 1 saddler; 1 wagoner; 2 trumpeters, and 43 privates, the commissioned officers to be assigned from among those hereinafter authorized. Of the veterinarians provided for in this act, one shall have the pay and allowances of a second lieutenant of cavalry and one shall have the pay of $75 per month and the allowances of a sergeant-major: Provided, That the veterinarian appointed to the first grade shall not be so appointed until he shall have passed an examination, to be prescribed by the Secretary of War, as to his physical, moral, and professional qualifications: Provided further, That the veterinarians now in the service who do not pass such competitive examination shall be eligible to the positions of the second class under such rules as are now prescribed by the regulations. The regimental sergeant-major and the regimental quartermaster-sergeant provided for in this section shall have the pay and allowance of an ordnance sergeant.

SEC. 3. That each regiment of artillery shall consist of 1 colonel; 1 lieutenant-colonel; 3 majors; 16 captains, 2 of whom shall be available for detail as adjutant and quartermaster; 16 first lieutenants; 14 second lieutenants; 1 sergeant-major; 1 quartermaster-sergeant; 1 band, and 14 batteries, of which 2 may be organized as field artillery.

Each artillery band shall consist of 1 chief musician; 1 chief trumpeter; 1 principal musician; 1 drum major, who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a first sergeant; 4 sergeants; 8 corporals; 1 cook, and 11 privates.

Each battery of heavy artillery shall consist of 1 first sergeant; 1 quartermaster-sergeant, who shall have the pay and allowances of a sergeant; 8 sergeants; 12 corporals; 2 musicians; 2 mechanics, who shall have the pay and allowances of sergeants of artillery; 2 cooks, and 52 privates.

Each battery of field artillery shall consist of 1 first sergeant, 1 stable sergeant, 1 quartermaster-sergeant, 6 sergeants, 12 corporals, 4 artificers, 2 musicians, 2 cooks, and 51 privates.

In addition to the enlisted men specified there shall be 1 electrician sergeant to each post garrisoned by coast artillery having electrical appliances, who shall have the pay and allowances of an ordnance sergeant.

SEC. 4. That each regiment of infantry shall consist of 1 colonel; 1 lieutenant-colonel; 3 majors; 14 captains, 2 of whom shall be available for detail as adjutant and quartermaster; 16 first lieutenants, of whom 1 shall be available for detail as commissary and 3 for detail as battalion adjutants; 12 second lieutenants; 1 sergeant-major; 1 quartermaster-sergeant; 1 commissary-sergeant, who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a regimental quartermaster-sergeant of infantry; 3 battalion sergeant-majors, who shall be senior to and have the pay and allowances of a first sergeant; 1 band, and 13 companies, organized into 3 battalions of 4 companies each: Provided, That nothing herein contained shall be construed as abolishing the office of chaplain in each regiment of colored infantry.

Each infantry band shall consist of 1 chief musician; 1 principal musician; 1 drum major, who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a first sergeant; 4 sergeants; 8 corporals, 1 cook, and 12 privates.

Each infantry company shall consist of 1 captain; 1 first lieutenant; 1 second lieutenant; 1 first sergeant; 1 quartermaster-sergeant, who shall have the pay and allowances of a sergeant; 4 sergeants, 6 corporals, 2 cooks, 2 musicians, 1 artificer, and 48 privates, the commissioned officers to be assigned from among those hereinafter authorized: Provided, That the limits of age for original enlistments in the Army shall be 18 and 35 years.

SEC. 5. That all vacancies created or caused by the provisions of this act above the grade of second lieutenant in the line of the Army shall be filled by promotion according to seniority in the several arms, subject to the examinations now prescribed by law: Provided, That the additional second lieutenants now attached to each regiment of artillery shall be absorbed in the artillery or transferred to other arms where vacancies exist without loss of relative rank, leaving but 1 second lieutenant in each battery.

Vacancies in the grade of second lieutenant shall be filled as now provided by law, except that no person shall be appointed from civil life before he shall have reached the age of 21 years nor after he shall have reached the age of 27 years, nor until he shall have passed a satisfactory examination as to his moral, physical, and educational qualifications.

SEC. 6. That upon a declaration of war by Congress or a declaration of Congress that war exists the enlisted strength of the Army may, in the discretion of the President, be increased to not exceeding 65,000 enlisted men, to be distributed by the President among the several branches of the service according to the needs of each: Provided, That the President is authorized to continue the Army at the war strength as prescribed herein until July 1, 1901.

SEC. 7. That the Adjutant-General's and Inspector-General's departments shall consist of the number of officers now in those departments, respectively: Provided, That vacancies in the grade of major occurring in either department shall hereafter be filled from captains in the line of the Army: And provided further, That all such captains who have evinced marked aptitude in the command of troops shall be reported by their regimental commanders to the War Department and shall be entitled to compete for any such vacancy under such system of examination as the President shall prescribe.

SEC. 8. That the Judge-Advocate-General's Department, Quartermaster's Department, Subsistence Department, Medical Department, Pay Department, Corps of Engineers, Ordnance Department, and Signal Corps shall consist of the officers and enlisted men now provided by law: Provided, That the battalion of engineers, and the officers serving therewith, shall constitute a part of the line of the Army: Provided, That in time of war retired officers of the Army may, in the discretion of the President, be employed on active duty, other than in the command of troops, and when so employed they shall receive the full pay and allowances of their grades.

SEC. 9. That the Chief of the Record and Pension Office of the War Department shall hereafter have the rank, pay, and allowances of a brigadier-general; and there shall be an assistant chief of said office, who shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a major, and who may be appointed from civil life: Provided, That whenever a vacancy shall occur in the office of Chief of the Record and Pension Office subsequent to the first appointment made under this act, said grade shall cease and determine, and thereafter the chief of said office shall have the rank, pay, and allowances of a colonel.

SEC. 10. That the cooks authorized by this act shall have the pay and allowances of sergeants of infantry.

SEC. 11. That the corps of cadets shall consist of 1 from each Congressional district, 1 from each Territory, 1 from the District of Columbia, 2 from each State at large, and 20 from the United States at large. That they shall be appointed by the President, and shall, with the exception of the 20 cadets appointed at large, be actual residents of the Congressional or Territorial districts, or of the District of Columbia, or of the States, respectively, from which they purport to be appointed.

SEC. 12. That so much of the acts approved July 7, 1898, as authorizes the assignment of certain officers of the Quartermaster's and Subsistence Departments with increased rank and the continuance in service of certain volunteer officers of those departments for a period of one year after the close of the present war is repealed.

SEC. 13. That to meet the present exigencies of the military service the President is hereby authorized to raise a force of not more than 35,000 volunteer infantry, and to form the same into not more than 30 regiments organized as infantry regiments of war strength in the Regular Army: Provided, That each regiment shall have 1 surgeon, with the rank of major; 2 assistant surgeons, one of whom shall have the rank of captain and one that of first lieutenant; and 3 hospital stewards.

No person other than an officer of the Regular Army who has passed the age of 45 years shall be appointed as a field officer in said force, nor as a company or staff officer therein if he be past the age of 35 years; neither shall any person not a Regular Army officer be so appointed until he shall have demonstrated his moral, physical, and professional fitness for the grade in which he is to be commissioned to the satisfaction of an examining board: Provided, That the field officers of the force herein authorized be appointed from officers of the Regular Army or from persons who served as officers of volunteers in the war with Spain.

All enlistments for the force herein authorized shall be for the term of two years and four months, unless sooner discharged: Provided, That no part of said force shall be continued in service beyond the last day of July, 1901.

SEC. 14. That the President shall have power to continue in service or to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, brigadier-generals of volunteers, at a rate of not more than one for every 3,000 enlisted men actually in service, and major-generals of volunteers at a rate not more than one for every 9,000 enlisted men: Provided, That Regular Army officers continued or appointed as general officers or as field or staff officers of volunteers, under the provisions of this act shall not vacate their Regular Army commissions: And provided further, That no general officers appointed under the provisions of this section shall be continued in service as such beyond July 1, 1901.

SEC. 15. That the President is hereby authorized to continue in service or to appoint, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, officers of the volunteer staff as follows:

One assistant adjutant-general with the rank of colonel, 2 assistant adjutants-general with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and 6 assistant adjutants-general with the rank of major.

Three inspectors-general with the rank of lieutenant-colonel and 6 inspectors-general with the rank of major: Provided, That officers continued or appointed under this section in the Adjutant and Inspector General's departments of the volunteer staff shall be selected from officers of the Regular Army.

One judge-advocate with the rank of colonel, 4 judge-advocates with the rank of lieutenant-colonel.

Four quartermasters with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 16 quartermasters with the rank of major, and 30 assistant quartermasters with the rank of captain.

Two commissaries of subsistence with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 4 commissaries of subsistence with the rank of major, and 12 assistant commissaries of subsistence with the rank of captain.

Four surgeons with the rank of lieutenant-colonel and 30 surgeons with the rank of major.

Thirty additional paymasters with the rank of major.

One signal officer with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, 3 signal officers with the rank of major, 9 signal officers with the rank of captain, 9 signal officers with the rank of first lieutenant, and 9 signal officers with the rank of second lieutenant: Provided, That no person not an officer of the Regular Army shall be appointed an officer of volunteers who has passed the age of 45 years: And provided also, That all the volunteer staff officers herein authorized to be appointed or retained in the service shall be honorably discharged on July 1, 1901; or sooner if their services are no longer required.

SEC. 16. That as soon as practicable after the approval of this act the officers and enlisted men of the Volunteer Army not herein authorized to be retained in service shall be mustered out of the military service of the United States and discharged: Provided, That enlisted men of volunteers who desire to remain in the military service, either in the Regular Army or the temporary force authorized by this act, may, if found qualified therefor, be transferred to and enlisted in such batteries, troops, or companies as may be below the maximum authorized strength, and when so transferred and enlisted shall be credited on their new enlistment with the periods of service rendered by them, respectively, as volunteers.

SEC. 17. That all laws or parts of laws which conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed; and nothing in this act shall operate to cause the discharge from the service of the United States of any commissioned officer now in the Army.

During the reading of the preceding the following took place:

Mr. HULL (interrupting the reading). I do not care, Mr. Chairman, for the reading beyond the point the Clerk has now reached. What has been read refers to the line of the Army, and is substantially on the same line as the other bill. It reduces the number in one sense and not in another—

Mr. SULZER. Let it all be printed.

Mr. HULL (continuing). It makes an army of 65,000 native Americans for a little over two years, up to July 1, 1901, and authorizes the President to enlist 35,000 additional—

Mr. SULZER. I ask unanimous consent that the entire bill be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HULL. I do not yield to the gentleman now for that request. I was going on to say that it authorizes 35,000 additional enlistments for service in the islands, who may be inhabitants of the islands or Americans.

Mr. BROSIUS. At the discretion of the President?

Mr. HULL. Yes; but discretion is taken from the President as to size of the Army. Instead of fixing a minimum to which, in the judgment of the President, the Army should be reduced, this bill fixes the limit of enlistment at a certain point, which may be far beyond the time when this service would be needed.

Mr. BROSIUS. But does it allow discretion on the part of the President as to the enlistment of this additional force, whether they shall be from the islands or elsewhere?

Mr. HULL. Oh, yes; I think so, entirely. But the reduction comes absolutely July 1, 1901.

Now, so far as the staff is concerned, the lines of what is called the Hull bill have been pursued; and it provides for continuing the volunteer staff until the date which is named. So, taking the bill as a whole, it complies with the organization which the bill we are now considering was framed to appropriate for. So I presume that no objection would be raised on the theory that we are appropriating for more men than there are in the service, or ought to be.

But for myself, Mr. Chairman, let me say, I should not be willing to accept a compromise at the dictation of a minority composed of any people on earth. [Applause on the Republican side.] I believe in the Republican and Democratic theory, that a majority should rule, and a minority—a confessed minority—should not be allowed to dictate to the Government of the United States what the Government should do in any manner, or say to it, "You must take this or take nothing!" If that alternative were offered to me, I would say, "Take nothing, and trust to the wisdom and patriotism of the people of the United States." [Applause on the Republican side.]

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. SIMPSON. Before the gentleman takes his seat, I would like to ask a question for information.

Mr. HULL. Certainly.

Mr. SIMPSON. I would like to ask if the gentleman has any figures to give to the committee of the total appropriations by this Congress for the Army during the continuance of the war?

Mr. HULL. I think between three hundred and four hundred millions of dollars. I can not be exact in reference to the matter. All of these extra appropriations, over and above the amounts covered by the Army bill, do not come through my committee, and I have not kept strict track of them.

Mr. SIMPSON. Then about $350,000,000, I understand—

Mr. HULL. I think so, for the volunteers and all. But the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] can tell better than I.

Mr. MORRIS. I would like to ask the gentleman a question, to see if I understand his statement. I understand him to say that the 35,000 volunteers provided for by the bill will be enlisted for a term of three years—

Mr. HULL. No.

Mr. MORRIS (continuing). And can not be discharged at any time prior to that?

Mr. HULL. No. Their term of service expires on the 1st of July, 1901. It is practically a two years' enlistment.

Mr. MORRIS. Are they obliged to be kept in the service, whether they are needed or not, for that length of time?

Mr. HULL. I have stated exactly what the provision is, and gentlemen can draw their own conclusions.

Mr. MORRIS. But the point is, if these men are enlisted, under the law, will it be obligatory upon the Government to keep them in the service, or to discharge them if they are not needed?

Mr. HULL. The bill makes no such provision, and gentlemen can judge as to that matter as well as I can.

I want to say to the gentleman from Kansas, by way of correcting my former statement, that the total amounts appropriated for the Army were $235,218,187 as a deficiency and $23,193,000 as the regular appropriation.

Mr. BROWN. I would like to ask the gentleman as to a matter of detail in the bill—whether there is a provision for the payment of physicians for the treatment of soldiers outside of the military organizations?

Mr. HULL. There is not, I will state; but there is a bill which the committee have on the Calendar that provides for this.

Mr. BROWN. I was desirous of getting the information, because I have a great many inquiries respecting it.

Mr. HULL. I should not object myself to such a provision as an amendment to this bill; but it is clearly subject to the point of order.

Mr. BROWN. I understand that.

Mr. SULZER. With the consent of the gentleman from Iowa, we should like to have the alleged compromise bill which he had partially read in his time printed in the RECORD to-morrow in full.

Mr. HULL. The gentleman asks to print that part that was not read—the part in regard to the staff.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa provided for that. It will appear in the RECORD to-morrow, as the Chair understands.

Mr. SULZER. I yield thirty minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] is recognized for thirty minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, a few evenings ago the Home Market Club, of Boston, Mass., gave a banquet, at which the President of the United States was the principal guest. Judging from the newspaper accounts of the affair, it was an exceedingly elaborate one in all of its details. We are told that the number of plates laid at the table was largely in excess of that usually laid at such entertainments and that the hall was decorated with great profusion, the table at which the Chief Executive sat in particular being loaded down with rare and fragrant flowers. It appears, too, that sweetest music lent its charms to the occasion; that an ode to the President was sung by the banqueters to the tune of "America," and that a vast concourse of people looked down from the galleries upon the festal board.

The Secretary of War was in attendance, he whom the Boston populace had hissed upon the street a few hours before, ere they turned to greet with rapturous applause the chief who had bestowed upon him his official character. We can hardly blame them though for this, Mr. Chairman, for they were only following the precedent set them by some of the leading Republican newspapers of the country, which, for months past, have been fiercely attacking the Secretary, and yet have lacked the courage to lay their ax to the root of the evil and censure the gentleman who, to reward him for his political services and disbursements in the campaign of 1896, appointed him to his present position, and has maintained him these ever since, notwithstanding his incompetency and against the righteous complaints that have been made against him.

The Secretary of the Navy, sir, also graced the occasion with his presence, and so far forgot his usual courtesy, so far belied his New England training and associations, as to repeat the stale and untruthful charge that those who opposed the ratification of the infamous treaty of peace with Spain were responsible for the bloodshed that occurred in the Philippines.

When the Chief Magistrate had ceased speaking, another member of his official family, the gentleman who presides over the Post-Office Department, arose in his place and proceeded to load his chief down with an eulogy so fulsome and extravagant, so absolutely given over to hyperbole, that no individual not wholly eaten up with vanity could possibly have endured it without nausea and disgust.

The newspapers further inform us, Mr. Chairman, that among the decorations there were suspended over the entrance to the banquet hall three portraits, one of Washington, one of Lincoln, and one of the President himself, and that beneath these was inscribed in letters so bold and plain that even a blind man could read it with ease the single, significant word, "Liberators."

Now, George Washington, Mr. Chairman, fought with his sword for eight long and bloody years to establish the right of a people to govern themselves, and in his farewell address he counseled his countrymen to live on terms of amity with all nations and to enter into entangling alliances with none.

Abraham Lincoln's whole political life, God bless his memory, was a contention for the rights of man; and it was his kindly hand which penned the immortal emancipation proclamation that struck the shackles from the limbs of millions of bondmen. One would think, sir, that the gentleman who was just then, as the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, engaged in the prosecution of a bloody war against a poor and defenseless people in the Orient, with a view to forcing upon them a government against their will, who was employed in the unsavory task of Christianizing them with the sword and civilizing them at the mouths of cannon, would naturally have felt some little embarrassment as he gazed upon these portraits and read the significant inscription below.

Possibly His Excellency did not see them. He may have turned his back upon them just as he has turned his back upon the Declaration of Independence and upon the cardinal principles of liberty, upon which the Republican party was founded forty-three years ago. If he did see them, possibly there may have passed through his mind the faintest suspicion as to the bona fides of the hospitality extended to him. He may even have caught a transient glimpse of the satire which hung these three pictures in juxtaposition and wrote that word of bitter irony beneath. Be this as it may, sir, the President does not appear to have been at all abashed by this incongruous circumstance, but to have arisen from his seat and there, within the shadow of the monument on Bunker Hill, where Warren fell fighting for liberty, and within a stone's throw of Faneuil Hall, where time and again the true sons of the old Bay State have sent forth to the country their messages of freedom, he delivered perhaps the most remarkable, certainly the most disingenuous, address that ever fell from the lips of an American President.

This address, together with certain prefatory matter and a synopsis of the remarks of the Secretary of the Navy and of the Postmaster-General as they were published in the Washington Post of this city, I shall take the liberty of incorporating into the RECORD along with my remarks.

The address, Mr. Chairman, divested of its verbiage, considered apart from its platitudes and the ostentatious professions of virtue with which it was interlarded, was nothing more nor less than a carefully devised and studious misstatement of the issue between the Chief Executive and those of his own party who are opposed to his wretched policy in the Philippines. It was an effort to befog the subject and to mislead the public judgment. We are told, sir, that this speech was received with enthusiastic applause by those who heard it, but we who read it in cold print and in the light of the indefensible tragedy now being enacted near the shores of Asia involuntarily think of that creation of Charles Dickens who was accustomed to roll his eyes piously to heaven and exclaim with great ostentation to those about him, "My friends, let us be moral!" and who was the father of two daughters, one of whom he named Charity and the other Mercy.

His Excellency declared upon this occasion, if not in so many words, at least in effect, that he had never entertained any policy with respect to the Philippines up to the time the treaty of peace was ratified, but that he had simply held them as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, leaving the question as to their disposition and control to be determined thereafter by Congress. This, sir, is precisely the same plea that was made for him by his mouthpiece upon the floor, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], in the speech which that gentleman made here while the Army bill was pending, in answer to some remarks which I had previously submitted in the debate. The President, however, was not so candid in his Home Market utterance as was the gentleman from Ohio, for he made no profert therein of his proclamation to the Philippines, issued immediately after the signing of the treaty of peace at Paris, whereas the gentleman from Ohio inserted that document in full in the RECORD when he came to revise his remarks, where it can easily be discovered, by those who might read it, that it is as an entirety directly at variance with the construction which the gentleman placed upon it while reading fragmentary portions of it during his speech.

If the Chief Executive really feels, as he declared at this banquet, that the disposition of the Philippines is a matter to be determined by Congress, why does he not call a special session of Congress to settle the matter at once, and then keep his hands off the legislative branch of the Government and not attempt to influence it while the subject is being discussed and decided? Heaven knows there is need of action and of speedy action. If he is sincere, why did he permit his supporters in the Senate to vote down the other day the Bacon resolution, which distinctly declared that the United States entertained no intention of permanently holding these islands, but that it would, when the people there had established their government firmly, withdraw and leave them to govern themselves?

Why did he insist that the McEnery resolution should be passed—a resolution which is a fraud, a delusion, and a snare, a shameful evasion, which, like a Christmas tree, has something upon it for everybody—a resolution which is all things to all men and which can be construed to suit the predilections of the man who reads it, whether he be for or against the permanent holding of the Philippines? That resolution, Mr. Chairman, is intended simply to quiet the conscience of the American people, to lull all opposition to sleep while the President goes ahead waging relentless and merciless war against the Filipinos and laying deep and secure the foundations for a permanent American colony in their territory. No Representative, sir, who is opposed to such a policy as this can vote for this resolution without self-stultification and the loss of self-respect. Its passage is precisely what the advocates of imperialism in the East most earnestly desire.

But, Mr. Chairman, the Chief Executive of this nation had scarcely hidden himself behind the plea of a simple holding of the Philippines as the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, had scarcely disavowed that he had entertained any policy as to their disposition, until, with an inconsistency that would have been impossible in anyone save himself, he gave his whole case away by declaring that the islands came into our possession by circumstances beyond anyone's control and by launching out into a labored defense of the very terms of the obnoxious treaty of peace itself.

Hesitated further that we had been obliged to take the Philippines to ourselves because to withdraw from them would have been, first, to abandon the Filipinos to anarchy because of their incapacity for self-government; second, to leave them exposed to the renewed oppression and tyranny of Spain; and third, to abandon them to absorption by the great powers of the Old World. If, sir, by the statement that the Philippines came into our possession through circumstances which no man could control, the Chief Executive referred to the temporary possession of them which came as a result of the victory of Admiral Dewey and his gallant tars, I have no issue to make with him. But if, in the use of that expression, he seeks to convey to his countrymen the idea that their present permanent acquisition by us was beyond control, I utterly deny it, and think I will be able to fix this responsibility, before I am through, where it properly belongs.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am determined that the President of the United States shall neither befog the issue between himself and those of the Republican party who oppose his Philippine policy, nor mislead the public judgment, nor escape responsibility for the gross official blunder which he has committed in connection with this Eastern problem. If this war for subjugation of an alien race, waged without the declaration of Congress, the permanent acquisition of their territory to our own domain, the creation of a great standing army and navy, the loading down of our people with grievous taxation, the departure from the policy of nonintervention in European affairs, under which we have outstripped in progress and development any nation on the face of the globe, is right, then the President is entitled to the glory of the accomplishment, and no man should be permitted to snatch a single laurel from his brow.

If, on the other hand, the policy is wrong and fraught with grave menace and serious danger to the American public, the President is alone responsible for it, and he must bear the whole burden of the fearful responsibility. I assert that the entire policy is not simply an error, but that it is a crime, and that the Chief Executive of this nation is the one who has precipitated upon us the embarrassments and the difficulties by which we are now confronted. I insist that he did not simply hold the Philippines as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, leaving the question of the disposition and control of them to Congress, but that he formulated and put into execution an affirmative and aggressive policy, that of their permanent annexation to this country, and forced it through the Senate of the United States with all the power and influences which his high office enabled him to employ.

Let us see whether I am right in this. When Spain sued for peace, it became not simply the right, but also the duty of the President to take the initiative in determining what should be the terms of the peace. The Constitution expressly conferred the treaty-making power upon him, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Right then and there, Mr. Chairman, was the Presidential opportunity. He could insert in that treaty whatever terms he pleased. He could omit from it whatever terms he desired, acting always, of course, within the limits of his constitutional powers. True, the instrument would be of no validity until Spain agreed to it and it was ratified by the Senate; but Spain would have consented to anything. She was defeated, disheartened, and impotent.

Not a nation on earth was willing to come to her rescue. The Senate would have ratified anything which the President had seen fit to submit to it. The Chief Executive was popular with the people. Whether he deserved that popularity I shall not stop to inquire. I simply stated as a well-known fact that he possessed the entire confidence of the country, and therefore he had no reason to fear to do what was right. The occasion was one calling for the exercise on his part of intelligence, sound judgment, patriotism, and wise statesmanship. His first impression was to demand of the Filipinos simply a coaling station, a measure amply sufficient for all of our legitimate purposes, and the evacuation of the island by Spain without compensation by the taxpayers of the United States.

Had he adhered to this view of the matter, all would have been well. The whole nation would have followed him cheerfully, and to-day we would have been at peace with the Philippine republic, and our Army and Navy, which is now waging war against our former friends and allies, would have been disbanded. No Army bill for a standing army of 100,000 men would have been pending or necessary, and we could now be getting ready to reduce instead of getting ready to greatly increase the burden of our taxation. But the President changed his original intention. He committed a fatal error. He wrote into that treaty the absolute transfer of Spanish sovereignty over the Philippines to ourselves, and the payment of $20,000,000 out of the United States Treasury as a consideration for the cession.

He sent this treaty to the Senate of the United States for ratification. Then he issued to the people of the Philippines that proclamation in which he informed them that the United States had succeeded to the title of Spain, declared that the government and control of their territory belonged to us, ordered them to pay their taxes to the military government which he established over them, and blandly made known to them that our mission in their midst was one of "benevolent assimilation." They were further assured by him, as he took their islands without their consent and established government over them against their will, that we came in order that we might confer inestimable advantages and blessings upon them, and that if they accepted our control without remonstrance they would be protected, but that if they failed to do so they would be coerced.

Then sir, turning again to the treaty which he had negotiated, he drove it through the Senate of the United States by the unlimited exercise of all those powers and influences which the great office he holds makes possible.

Mr. Chairman, these facts which I have stated are true; they are now known to all intelligent men. They can not be successfully denied. What, then, did the Chief Executive mean by telling those who gathered around the banquet board at Boston that up to the ratification of the Paris treaty he had simply held the Philippines as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy without any policy of his own, leaving the whole matter to be determined afterwards by the Congress of the United States? Was he foolish enough to believe that his mere statement would be allowed to pass unchallenged? Was he vain enough to imagine that his ipse dixit would conclude the matter, with the damning proof of its falsity so near at hand?

Mr. Chairman, why did the President change his original intention as to the terms to be incorporated into the treaty? What were the influences that brought the change about? I have heard it stated that the applause of the people who greeted him just about this juncture of public affairs, while he was on his tour in the West, was the reason for it. Was it, then, the condition of public sentiment rather than the right or wrong of the matter which influenced the Presidential mind? Does the Chief Executive regard his great prerogatives to be so supinely representative that he must needs abdicate them at every popular wind that blows? Does he feel that his high office gives him no latitude for the exercise of individual judgment and of independent action? Did he make no allowance for transient ebullitions of public enthusiasm and excitement, overlook his opportunity to save the people from themselves, lose sight of all the sacred traditions of the country, and fear to make his appeal to that ultimate tribunal which has so often in our national history vindicated those who have fearlessly stood for the right in public affairs—the sober, second thought of the great American people?

And is His Excellency quite sure that he properly gauged the condition of the public mind on the subject of Philippine annexation? Is he absolutely certain that one swallow really makes a whole summer? It would seem so, for in this Home Market address he exultingly declared that the annexation treaty had passed the Senate by over two-thirds majority of that body and was sanctioned by the judgment of nine-tenths of his countrymen. How that treaty finally got its two-thirds majority in the Senate—the tremendous pressure necessary to secure it there—where its fate hung doubtful and trembling in the balance until the very latest moment, and was then only saved by the votes of Senators who had most of them spoken against it, no man knows better than William McKinley, the President of the United States. Every Representative upon this floor knows that it is doubtful whether the treaty could secure a two-thirds vote in this House if the test were to be made here to-day.

Judging, then, by the opinion of their Representatives, sir, only two-thirds, and not nine-tenths, of the American people are inclined to ratify this treaty. Adulation has indeed sorely blinded the Chief Executive to the truth if he imagines that even the majority of his countrymen approve of this permanent holding in the Orient. Let him not pin his faith too securely to the sordid interests which clamor so loudly in his hearing, to those who so confidently and recklessly assume to speak for the whole of our mighty population. If he will but quiet the noisy throng which surrounds him long enough to put his ear to the ground and listen he will distinguish the premonitions of a coming storm; he will hear the steady tread, not of the 100,000 men whom he demands for a crusade against liberty, but of a mighty army of free people who are beginning to move in defense of their cherished traditions and their violated honor.

We have been told further that the President yielded up his first-blush impressions at the importunity of Admiral Dewey, who urged that the Philippines should be retained. Ah! Mr. Chairman, the Chief Executive can not screen himself behind the gold lace of the hero of Manila. No one can honor more profoundly than I do the officers of our Regular Army and Navy. They have ever been the mainstay of the nation in the hour of battle. Their heroic achievements have shed imperishable glory upon our arms and will be the priceless legacy which we will bequeath to our posterity, but their predilections are naturally for arms.

They have imbibed, of course, the prejudices and the preferences of their calling. We can not blame them for desiring to magnify the size and importance of the Army and Navy; for advocating the expansion of our territorial limits and the taking on of a colonial policy. Such a departure will open up to them opportunities for promotion and for honorable service and distinction which they could not otherwise enjoy. For this very reason, sir, their advice as to our national policy should be received with caution, and the President, who is not merely the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, but is also the Chief Executive of 75,000,000 of peaceful and liberty-loving people, whose happiness and prosperity have been achieved by a rigid adherence to their own affairs, should have been quick to recognize and prompt to act upon these considerations to which I have adverted.

Again, we have been assured that the demand of our peace commissioners at Paris to hold the Philippines is what induced the President to yield. So far as one of the commissioners is concerned, we know that this is false. This commissioner, the Senator from Delaware, whatever may be his opinion upon the matter now, wrote earnestly from abroad protesting and arguing against the annexation policy of the Administration. But even if this statement were true, it furnished not the shadow of a justification for the conduct of the President. The constitutional power to negotiate the treaty was his, not the commissioners. They were simply his instruments, appointed to carry out his will. They were utterly powerless to resist. No, Mr. Chairman, this plea, like all the others, will not avail. The truth is that these commissioners got their inspiration and their instructions from the White House. Those instructions once changed, the action of the commissioners would have been different. The wrong was with the Chief Executive. He alone is responsible.

Mr. Chairman, in my humble opinion the reason for the change in the Presidential policy in the Orient is to be sought for and found in quite another direction from any of those already referred to. It was his concession to the selfish capitalists of the country, his surrender to their demands. These are the gentlemen who furnished the money for his nomination and election and who, I doubt not, have pledged him a renomination and a reelection. These are the gentlemen who are already seizing upon valuable franchises in China, in connection with the English syndicate, with a member of Parliament from Wales at its head. These are the gentlemen whom Lord Beresford has in mind in his cordial but not wholly disinterested invitation to an alliance in China with Britain, Germany, and Japan against Russia and France, the old-time enemies of his country and the old-time friends of ours.

These are the gentlemen who are already grasping after special privileges in the Philippines, in Cuba, and in Porto Rico. It was, I imagine, for their especial benefit that the President created his advisory board to the War Department, composed of three American citizens, the object being to farm out valuable privileges and immunities which should belong to the people of those islands themselves, and in whose disposition they should have a voice, if their government is to be free and their rights maintained. Do not misunderstand me. I have no fault to find, sir, with the spirit of legitimate American commerce. It should be fostered, encouraged, and extended. My contention is against the spirit of American greed which cares nothing for the spirit of American liberty and still less for the freedom of an alien people, which would trample ruthlessly upon the most sacred rights and count life and human happiness for nothing, as against the power to plunder under the plausible pretense of legitimate trade.

And what do these gentlemen propose? To amass colossal fortunes in the islands by virtue of their franchises and upon the cheap labor of the native population, not one dollar of which will ever find its lodging place in the pockets of the American people. To enable them to do this, our whole population is to purchase their field of operations for them in the Philippines for the round sum of $20,000,000, and is to be taxed interminably and excessively for the creation and maintenance of a great army and navy, which is to conquer and hold the Philippines in subjection and defend the islands after they have been expensively fortified against the assaults of the great European nations, with which our new foreign policy will be certain to bring us into frequent contention.

What else is upon the programme of these gentlemen? The open door in the Philippines, making it forever totally impossible to discriminate in tariff duties there in favor of the products of the American farm and the American shop.

What is the other sacrifice that is required? That the annexation of Cuba, Porto Rico, and the Philippines, absolutely sure to come at an early day, for they have registered it in their vows, shall precipitate the sugar, tobacco, hemp, and other cheap products of these islands and Hawaii upon the American market in free and unrestricted competition with the agricultural and laboring elements of our own country.

This policy, sir, would be free trade in William Jennings Bryan. What is it in William McKinley?

Where, now, Mr. Chairman, is the masterful champion of protection, the author of the McKinley bill, the man who advocated protection in season and out of season and earnestly contended that it shed its blessings, "as the gentle rain from heaven," upon all classes of our people, alike upon the farmer, the laborer, and the manufacturer? Has he changed his views upon the tariff also? Has he recanted his old faith? Has he resolved to abandon the farmer and the laborer to unrestricted competition with the pauper labor of the Old World and of the Tropics? Let the Senator from Ohio, Mr. FORAKER, whom I much like and admire, and the Senator from Minnesota, who recently nominated him for reelection in their post-prandial speeches at the Dayton banquet, and who seek to forestall the choice of the next Republican national convention many months in advance of its assembling, answer this question; answer it, not merely to the party bosses who make nominations, but to the great, honest, and liberty-loving masses of the Republican party, without whose ratification at the polls their work will all have been done in vain.

Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States, as I have said, told his auditors at Boston that the Filipinos were incapable of governing themselves. It is a complete answer, sir, to this to say that at the very moment he made this statement the Filipinos were governing themselves on every inch of their territory which we had not wrested from their possession? They were not only governing themselves, but they were also fighting desperately for the right to do so in the future. At the very instant those words fell from the Presidential lips there was only one native government in the Philippine Islands. This was the Philippine republic, loyally supported by all the people. It had a written constitution, a president, cabinet officers, a legislative body, a seat of government, and an army officered and in the field and equipped with munitions of war. It has possession and control of all the territory except the city of Manila and, perhaps, one other seacoast city, which we held ourselves. This government, too, was in existence the very day the treaty of peace was signed at Paris. It was then capable of maintaining itself against Spain. Her power to overthrow it was gone, and gone forever. This is the report rendered to our Chief Executive by our own consul abroad. This Philippine republic was entitled to recognition under the laws of nations. Spain's title, sir, was destroyed. How could she convey to us a sovereignty which she had irretrievably lost?

The Filipinos incapable of self-government, Mr. President? Liable to fall into anarchy, you say, if left to themselves? Have you observed, sir, that they publish and read newspapers in Manila? Did you see in the Washington Post, not long ago, the high tribute paid to them by the two United States naval officers who, by permission of Aguinaldo, traveled extensively in the interior of the islands? Have you failed to note the intelligence of Agoncillo and the other Philippine representatives recently within our borders? Are you aware that Admiral Dewey made use of this language in his communication to the Secretary of the Navy on the 29th day of last August:

The population of Luzon is reported to be something over 3,000,000, mostly natives. These are gentle, docile, and, under just laws and with the benefits of popular education, would soon make good citizens.

In a telegram sent to the Department on June 23 I expressed the opinion that "these people are far superior in their intelligence, and more capable of self-government than the natives of Cuba, and I am familiar with both races." Further intercourse with them has confirmed me in this opinion.

Do you know, Mr. President, that in the "Notes on the Philippines," issued by the Adjutant-General's Office of the War Department last September, the following language occurs:

The Philippine Malays are a superior race to many other Asiatic peoples. Orderly, amiable, courteous, honest, and exceedingly superstitious, they are easily influenced upon professions of Christianity. Like most tropical people, their efforts are intermittent rather than steady, their wants are readily provided for, and they take life easy. * * * The inhabitants are generally tractable and amenable to government, and generally not hostile to foreigners.

Has it escaped your notice that the United States consul-general at Hongkong, China, made use of the following language in his communication to Mr. Moore, of the Department of State, in his letter of July 18, 1898?—

I have lived among the Malays of the Straits Settlements and have been an honored guest of the different sultanates. I have watched their system of government and have admired their intelligence, and I rank them high among the semicivilized nations of the earth. The natives of the Philippine Islands belong to the Malay race, and while there are very few pure Malays among their leaders, I think their stock has rather been improved than debased by admixture.

I consider the forty or fifty Philippine leaders, with whose fortunes I have been very closely connected, both the superiors of the Malays and the Cubans. Aguinaldo, Agoncillo, and Sandico are all men who would all be leaders in their separate departments in any country, while among the wealthy Manila men, who live in Hongkong and who are spending their money liberally for the overthrow of the Spaniards and the annexation to the United States, men like the Cortes family and the Basa family, would hold their own among bankers and lawyers anywhere.

Let me call your attention still further, Mr. President, to another paragraph in this consul-general's communication, which reads as follows:

In conclusion, I wish to put myself on record as stating that the insurgent government of the Philippine Islands can not be dealt with as though they were North American Indians, willing to be removed from one reservation to another at the whim of their masters. If the United States decides not to retain the Philippine Islands, its 10,000,000 people will demand independence, and the attempt of any foreign nation to obtain territory or coaling stations will be resisted with the same spirit with which they fought the Spaniards.

Mr. President, you are mistaken, sadly mistaken. The Philippine people are capable of self-government. Take your mailed hand from their throats, sir, and give them a chance to demonstrate this fact still further. Cease sending our brave soldiers to meet death in an ignoble war. What right have you to demand such a sacrifice as this? Stop wasting our national resources in an effort to belie all the professions of sympathy which we have made in times past for the downtrodden and oppressed. You are maligning the national character. You are bringing reproach upon the greatest Republic of modern times. There is serious danger ahead, too, if you do not desist. You were warned in the concluding paragraph of our consul-general's communication, which I have just read, that the Filipinos were a spirited people, and that they would not be deterred by overwhelming odds from resisting any nation which might assail their independence as bravely as they had resisted Spain, and yet you insisted on undertaking the experiment. You have gotten us into our difficulties. Now, sir, you must do your full share in extricating us from them.

Stand back, Mr. President, and accord to these people who by their valor have earned the right to be free the privilege of establishing such a form of government as they themselves prefer. It will not, of course, be nearly so perfect a government as ours, for they are of an inferior race to our own. But though it may be somewhat crude, especially at the outset, it will answer all their needs well enough, and will bring to them peace and happiness.

You can not command public sympathy, aye, you will soon forfeit public respect, if you keep on exclaiming, as you did in your speech to the Home Market Club, "It is not a good time for the liberator to submit important questions concerning liberty and government to the liberated while they are engaged in shooting down their rescuers." The inhabitants of the Philippines are not liberated; they are oppressed. We are not liberators; nor are we rescuers. We are inflicting upon them a grievous wrong. The spirit of liberty is not yet dead in the breasts of your countrymen, and the time is near at hand when such sentiments as those you have uttered will, from the lips of any public man, however high his station, be everywhere received with manifestations of dissent rather than of approbation.

The Chief Executive's declaration, Mr. Chairman, that we were forced to take the Philippines in order to save them from again falling under the domination of Spain is a pretext, not a fact.

When the treaty was signed at Paris, the Philippine republic was in the condition which I have already described—firmly established, cordially supported by all of the people, occupying all the islands, except the city of Manila, which was held by us, and the city of Iloilo, which soon thereafter passed into their possession. It has a good-sized army in the field, well officered and equipped.

On the other hand, Spain's soldiers were scattered or imprisoned; her ships antiquated, crippled, or at the bottom of the sea; her finances disordered; her treasury well-nigh bankrupt, and her people in despair.

How, sir, could she thus situated have regained her ascendancy over 10,000,000 people in the Philippines, 12,000 miles from her borders, when before these misfortunes befell her, with an army of 150,000 men and a great fleet at her command, she had signally failed to subdue a million or two of Cubans only 3,000 miles distant?

Mr. Chairman, Spain not only could not have accomplished this task, but she never would have undertaken it, especially had the President required her to evacuate the Philippines, without compensation from the Federal Treasury, and leave the people of these islands to manage their own affairs.

Again, His Excellency told his Home Market auditors that we were obliged to commit grand larceny of the Philippines in order to prevent the great European nations from committing the crime.

Mr. Chairman, the Presidential defense seems to be summed up about as follows: First, I never had any policy with respect to the Philippines prior to the ratification of the treaty of peace—I only held them ministerially to preserve the peace; second, no one is responsible for our having determined to hold them permanently and by force—we have possession of them by virtue of circumstances beyond anyone's control; third, we take them because the Filipinos are not capable of self-government; fourth, we take them to prevent Spain from recovering them; fifth, we take them in order to prevent the great European nations from parceling them out among themselves.

The gentlemen in this Chamber who follow the profession of law, sir, will not fail to observe the marked resemblance between this Presidential answer and the answer permitted to be filed in cases at law in those States of the Union which have adopted what is generally known as the "reformed system of code pleading." One of the distinguishing features of this system is that defenses which are totally inconsistent and irreconcilable with each other are allowed to be set up in different paragraphs of the same answer. In some of the States, however, the provision is practically done away with by requiring the defendant to verify his answer under his oath.

Mr. Chairman, what a dilemma the Chief Executive would be in if this latter rule were applied to his defense in the case of the Philippines! What would be his confusion, too, if instead of giving to him the boundless universe to defend in he was suddenly required to elect upon which paragraph of his answer he would rely?

When the President, sir, of 75,000,000 of free people assigns as a reason for overthrowing the liberty of an alien race that other nations would have committed the wrong if he had not, I submit that we have certainly reached a pretty low ebb in our national existence. Far nobler, sir, to have left to nations less humane than ourselves a monopoly of such wrong. It is not in line with our traditions or our practices. We could at least have kept our hands clean and our honor unsullied. We owed to the Filipinos no duty of protection. They neither desired nor asked it of us. We never promised it to them. What they demanded was absolute independence—independence of us as well as of Spain, and of all the world besides. They entertained no fear of other nations. Why, then, should we have feared for them? They ask our permission, aye, they demand their right, to run the risk. We only deny it because we have designs upon them.

Mr. Chairman, no nation on earth manifested any disposition to lay violent hands upon the Philippines, unless it was Germany, and she was inspired to whatever course she pursued by the belief that we were intending to appropriate them to ourselves. Had we compelled Spain to evacuate, and then recognized the Philippine republic and given it a helping hand, the example would not have been lost upon Europe, and the full measure of our duty would have been righteously performed. To say that our example would not have been followed and that the Philippines would have been appropriated by other nations is, to say the least, to deny to them that which is theirs of right—the opportunity to try the experiment.

Mr. Chairman, our treatment of the Filipinos is among the saddest and most disgraceful incidents of all our national history. It is incapable of defense, though not yet, thank heaven, beyond our power of reparation. This people have been cruelly oppressed by Spain for years. Their sufferings have been extraordinary. Time and again they have risen against their oppressors and struggled to be free. They were fighting for their independence when our war with Spain commenced. We sought and accepted their aid against the common enemy. We brought Aguinaldo back from China, supplied him with arms and ammunition, and sent him to lead his countrymen against the Spanish army in the Philippines. We did not ask his submission to us. He did not agree to accept our domination. We encouraged him and his people to believe that their rights should be zealously regarded. They had heard of the great Republic beyond the sea. They knew of Washington and of Lincoln, of our struggle for our independence, and of the representative character of the Government which we have established. They knew that we had proclaimed a holy war to emancipate in Cuba a people who were the victims of the same relentless master who had been the author of all their woes.

They had heard the positive declaration of the President that our war was not being waged for the forcible annexation of territory; that this, according to our code of morals, would be criminal aggression and was not to be thought of for one moment. They thought that he spoke the truth; they believed in us; they trusted us. They looked upon our flag with glad eyes and with hopeful hearts. Never did it occur to them for one instant that we were capable of deception, that we could by any human possibility cherish designs against their liberties. So they assembled their army; they attacked the common foe. They drove the Spanish outposts into Manila and besieged Spain there by land, while Dewey's victorious fleet menaced her by sea. They were our faithful friends and our loyal allies. Gentlemen may deny this if they please. They may stickle for technicalities. They only add to our record of shame when they do so, for part 1 of Senate Document No. 62 and current history also attest the truth of what I declare. In the days which immediately succeeded the destruction of the Spanish fleet we had no American soldiers to land, capture Manila, and occupy the soil, but Aguinaldo and the insurgents were our army of occupation.

Then these people created a government in order that they might enjoy the blessings of liberty. It was a free government, too; a republic modeled largely after ours. I need not describe it. I have done that already; but I repeat once more—indeed, it can not be emphasized too strongly—that it was a government which was acceptable to all the people and that it was supreme and powerful over all the territory except the city of Manila, and, perhaps, one other city, since passed into Philippine possession. The sentiment which this people cherished toward us, Mr. Chairman, was made manifest by a simple incident which occurred when a consul-general of the United States paid a visit to Manila. The consul informs us that he was received with the utmost enthusiasm, that he was cheered to the echo, and that the people of all ages and conditions and of both sexes pressed eagerly upon him, and, in their anxiety to grasp his hands in welcome, impeded his progress for blocks through the city.

But the Administration, which had at first been perfectly willing to receive the aid of the Filipinos against Spain, and had actually done so, began early to ignore them. Dispatches were then sent calling down our consuls in the Orient who had spoken well of them and had helped to enlist their services in our behalf. We commenced to treat them with coldness and neglect, to separate ourselves from them. Possibly the President then contemplated turning them back to Spain when peace should come, and therefore thought that he had better not recognize them too far; that such a course might create embarrassment in negotiating a treaty of peace—an event then just ahead. Soon, however, came his resolution to deprive them of their liberty and take them unto ourselves. They heard Spain sue for an armistice. They witnessed the signing of the protocol, leaving the disposition of their territory a subject for future determination. They had by this time learned to suspect us, to doubt our integrity. They were filled with anxiety and alarm. They drew apart from us, and unto themselves. They soon saw with indignation that President who not eight months before had declared to the world that the Spanish war was not waged for the forcible annexation of territory negotiate a treaty which robbed them of their soil and annexed it to our own domain, and send it to the Senate of the United States for its approval. They listened with heavy hearts and kindling resentment to the same President's proclamation, couched in language as cruel as it was diplomatic, and in his honeyed phraseology they read the death knell of all their long-cherished aspirations to be free.

In this their great emergency they dispatched to our shores a representative, whose mission was one of amity, and who came only to intercede with the Chief Executive and to implore him and us to do them no wrong. In what manner, Mr. Chairman, did the President receive this intelligent and inoffensive man, this messenger from our friends and allies? He ignored him entirely. His respectful petitions were treated with silent contempt. When he knocked mildly and respectfully at the doors of the Department of State the silence within was like unto that of the grave; they were barred against him. Spies were set to watch him at his hotel, as though he were a common malefactor. When he walked out into this city his footsteps were dogged by the detectives of the secret service. He was denounced, misrepresented, and mistrusted. Finally he was threatened with arrest, and then, when to avoid so great an indignity he fled our domain, we added insult to injury by falsely charging that he had telegraphed to Aguinaldo to attack our troops at Manila as a means of preventing the ratification of the treaty of peace in the Senate, and had left us to escape punishment for that offense.

How, sir, could this innocent man have sent such a telegram and escaped prompt detection here, when his every act was under our constant surveillance, when we had established a strict censorship over all that he said or did? What man not a driving idiot believes that Agoncillo was fool enough to precipitate bloodshed in the Philippines when he knew only too well that peace there was the only hope for the defeat of the treaty here?

Then we ratified this unjust treaty, voted down in the Senate the Bacon resolution, which disavowed any intention of holding these islands permanently, refused even to consider a similarly worded resolution in this House, and, having provoked this unhappy people to attack us at Manila by our menace of them, we now find ourselves waging against them at all points not only a defensive, but an aggressive and bloody war to reduce them to our arbitrary wills; and now comes the Chief Executive of this nation, the one person responsible above everyone else for the whole wretched business, and in inglorious accents informs his Boston audience that every red drop of blood around the trenches of Manila, whether of an American soldier or of a "misguided" Filipino, brings anguish to his heart.

How it must augment the agony of the great sufferer to reflect that his own hand has precipitated his all-absorbing grief upon him! Let him reflect upon unaffected sorrow—the sorrow that dwells in the breast of the heart-broken wife or child as the terrible message is flashed to them over the ocean cable that a loved one has fallen far off in the East, under the hot skies of the Tropics. Let him turn his face to the Orient, and there in the lurid glare of their burning homes behold in the jungles the dusky bodies of the lifeless Filipinos, whose sightless orbs turn upward, as though mutely appealing to high heaven for the justice which he has denied them.

And all of these wrongs to which I have made reference, Mr. Chairman, have been committed in the name of a people who boast of their free institutions, and who live under a written Constitution, every line of which fairly bristles with guaranties for the liberties of the citizen.

Mr. Chairman, these remarks of mine will be certain to be followed, both in and out of Congress, by a prolonged howl of denunciation from a particular class of persons. Notwithstanding the fact that I announced over two years ago to many persons in my district that I would never again be an aspirant for Congress, and was not a candidate either for renomination or reelection to this House, we will hear it stated and published that my constituents have "retired" me from public life. My motives will be aspersed, my purpose misrepresented, and my conduct unjustly assailed. The vocabulary of epithets will be exhausted upon me.

I will, of course, be accused of having made a vindictive and unjustifiable attack upon a great and noble President. I will be stigmatized as a coward and as a traitor to my party. It was so when I arraigned the Chief Magistrate for his faithlessness to public duty on a former occasion from this floor. It will be so again. In this peculiar style of warfare, sir, you will find the gentlemen who have been incapable of contributing anything in the way of argument in support of the policy of the Administration taking most conspicuous rank. They will have the cordial cooperation of the gentlemen who are more anxious to be popular than they are to be right.

The gentlemen who are grateful for patronage already received and stimulated by the lively anticipation of patronage yet to come will also attune their voracious voices to the general chorus. Only a blind and unreasoning acceptance of the doctrine of Presidential infallibility and a supine acquiescence in the Presidential ipse dixit can commend a Representative to these kind of individuals. With them independence in thought and action is a crime. To their minds "the king can do no wrong," even though the king is caught in the very perpetration of a wrong. They load the Chief Magistrate down with eulogies—a common trick of mediocrity—surrender up their independence and judgment to his keeping, and thus encouraging him in his errors, follow him uncomplainingly, even though he is leading them and the party into danger and the country into serious difficulty and embarrassment. These gentlemen, who demonstrate their own bravery by rushing at the head of what they conceive to be an overwhelming public sentiment to assail a Representative who is making his fight single-handed and alone, so far as this side of the Chamber is concerned, would do well to reflect before they impeach any man's devotion to the Republican party.

I was a Republican, sir, long before these debates arose. I am a Republican still. I expect to remain a Republican, though I trust I may be pardoned for declaring that no political organization deserves support which proves recreant to the fundamental principles of liberty upon which it is founded and surrenders both its conscience and its traditions to the demand of greed and avarice. Those who charge me with party disloyalty would do well to specify with particularity wherein I have been guilty instead of confining themselves to wholesale charges and vague generalities.

Mr. Chairman, it is the President and those who are particeps criminis to his wrong, either by giving him their active support or by quietly submitting to his aggressions while he is leading the party into pitfalls, who are lacking in party fealty, not I. The time for earnest Republicans to make their fight is here and now, before the organization is irretrievably committed to a policy which will, if adhered to, assuredly lead to overwhelming defeat.

The President seems fatally bent on giving the Democratic party the right side of a great moral issue, which will take an abiding hold upon the consciences of the American people in the next campaign. He is determined to commit it to the championship of oppression, violence, and excessive taxation—to appeal to a free people for indorsement upon an unsavory record, in which an abandonment of our most cherished traditions, the enslavement of an alien people, and the creation of a large and expensive standing army and navy shall be the most prominent feature.

To this, sir, as a Republican, I am unalterably opposed.

Mr. Chairman, it is not simply in the matter to which I have already referred that the President has failed to discharge the high duty which he owes to his party and his country. He has not lived up to the full measure of his responsibility in the administration of the civil service of the nation. Of what avail is it, sir, that he stands for the integrity of the classified service as it already exists if he is to aid in turning over the census, a work of vital importance, requiring the highest degree of accuracy and efficiency for its proper execution, to the sacrilegious hands of the spoilsmen? How can he predicate an appeal to the friends of civil service for their support when over and over again, both during and since the war, he has violated the spirit and essence of the reform in his appointments to the Army and in the civil and military administration of our newly acquired territories? What of the shameful appointments of incompetents who have brought scandal and reproach upon the service and which no amount of whitewashing can possibly conceal?

What of the appointments of the sons, relatives, and retainers of Senators, Representatives, and public men who have had political "pulls," to the neglect in many instances of American citizens of merit who would have honored the service, but who have been passed over in cold neglect? Will the cause of civil service be advanced, sir, by the establishment of a colonial policy which vastly augments the power of appointment and makes it easy to confer office upon unworthy applicants that, in distant climes, away from the restraining influence of a watchful public sentiment which operates here, they may plunder and oppress the helpless victims of our system, just as Clive and Hastings plundered and oppressed in British India?

Sir, let the friends of civil service throughout the entire country reflect upon all of this.

And there, too, Mr. Chairman, is the revision of the banking and currency system of the nation. Every thoughtful man who has investigated the subject knows that our currency is lacking in simplicity, uniformity, and elasticity; that it hampers commerce, impedes business, and arrests development; that it plunders the gold reserve, discriminates unjustly against our rural population, and oftentimes keeps the business interests of the country in a state of feverish anxiety and alarm and entails loss upon the people. We are running along now, sir, I grant you, with apparently little friction; but have we forgotten the dark days of '93? Have we no care for the future? Do we not know that the gold standard will never be really assured until we have reformed it with a banking and currency system which will do away with the demand for free coinage of silver by giving to those who insist upon such coinage a cheap, safe, and elastic paper money, which will subserve all of their legitimate wants?

Mere patching up of the present old machine, Mr. Chairman, will not suffice. Such a makeshift will serve only as a pretext to put off indefinitely the genuine reform in the currency which is so much required. To this reform, sir, the Republican party has pledged itself to the country. The President has declared for it in his letter of acceptance, his inaugural address, and in one or two of his messages to Congress. Is he sincere in this? Does he mean it? Is the pledge to be faithfully kept? If so, what means the talk of postponing the whole subject of banking and currency reform until the next regular session of Congress? What is the significance of the following, which appeared in this morning's issue of the Washington Post, an ably conducted and accurate newspaper of this city, in relation to the compromise just agreed upon in the Senate with respect to the Army bill, recently passed by this House?

A WHITE HOUSE CONFERENCE.

This was the situation until yesterday morning, when a conference was held at the White House, in which Senators ALLISON, HAWLEY, HANNA, SPOONER, and CARTER participated, and at which the compromise with the Democrats was agreed upon. Senators ALLISON, SPOONER, and HANNA have always favored any step which would render an extra session unnecessary. Senator HAWLEY, on the other hand, only two days ago proclaimed publicly in the Senate that he would accept nothing but "unconditional surrender" from the opponents of the bill, and Senator CARTER insisted that the reorganization measure must be passed pure and simple. These Senators were, however, willing to agree to a compromise yesterday. The reasons which operate against an extra session are mainly two, as follows:

"The discussion of the financial question, which would be precipitated, is avoided.

"By a recess of Congress the President is given nine months of unrestricted power to operate in the Philippines and solve the problems of expansion."

Ah, Mr. Chairman, a discussion of the financial question is to be avoided, is it? And this is why the President consents to the compromise of his Army bill, which a few days ago he declared must be pushed through, even if it required a special session of Congress to do it. And here, too, we find the gentleman who told the Home Market Club that Congress was the proper tribunal to settle the Philippine question now asking that he be given "nine months of unrestricted power to operate in the Philippines and solve the problem of expansion." Verily, sir, our noble President is the embodiment of sincerity and good faith! Give him an army of 100,000 men, the American Navy, the purse strings of the nation, and "nine months of unrestricted power to operate in the Philippines," and I submit to you, sir, that there will be mighty little left for the Congress which assembles next December to do in the way of solving "the problem of expansion."

Mr. Chairman, if a special session of Congress is not called; if banking and currency reform is postponed until Congress assembles in regular session next December, when that time arrives the Presidential and Congressional elections will be just ahead of us. Both the Chief Executive and the Representatives will then be afraid to undertake the revision. They will contend that it is dangerous to tamper with the greenbacks for fear of exciting the opposition of certain powerful elements at the polls. Thus the policy of procrastination will prey upon opportunity, and banking and currency reform will indeed be dead.

Now is the time, sir, for the President to act, if he is in favor of this legislation.

Let him call at once a special session of Congress. Both branches will be safely Republican. Let Congress take up, consider, and pass with reasonable promptness a bill properly revising the banking and currency system. This will give ample time for the legislation to indicate itself in the judgment of the people before the next general election occurs. By this course we will give adequate relief to all classes of our population, keep our just pledges as a party, and reap the reward of our fidelity by the popular approval at the elections.

The President, as I have said, declared several days ago that he would call a special session of Congress if the present session failed to pass this Army bill giving him a great army with which to wage war for the subjugation of the Filipinos. He doubtless intended at that time to do so, although just now—

The native hue of resolution
Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought.

Will he persist in refusing to call a special session for the reformation of our banking and currency law?

Mr. Chairman, let the friends of this great and much-needed reform, including the hard-money Democrats who gave him their support in the campaign of 1896, fasten their eyes upon the President and await his answer.

The world of civilization and of letters, Mr. Chairman, was still lingering under the charm of Rudyard Kipling's great poem, the "Recessional," when he again arrested its attention with another product of his pen entitled "The White Man's Burden." The appearance of this latter poem called forth from some writer to me unknown a parody entitled "The Brown Man's Burden," which recently appeared in the paper of Henri Labouchere. This parody, sir, could with great propriety have been dedicated to the President of the United States, for it is in effect a severe and caustic arraignment of his policy in the Orient. I can not, of course, arrogate to myself the right of dedication. That is the exclusive privilege of the author. But I will take the liberty of concluding my remarks by reading a part of it to the House and commending it to the Chief Executive's most thoughtful and earnest consideration. That portion of the poem which I desire to read is as follows:

Pile on the brown man's burden
To gratify your greed;
Go, clear away the "niggers"
Who progress would impede;
Be very stern, for truly
'Tis useless to be mild
With new-caught, sullen peoples,
Half devil and half child.

Pile on the brown man's burden,
And if ye rouse his hate,
Meet his old-fashioned reasons
With Maxims up-to-date;
With shells and dum-dum bullets,
A hundred times make plain
The brown man's loss must ever
Imply the white man's gain.

Pile on the brown man's burden,
Compel him to be free;
Let all your manifestoes
Reek with philanthropy,
And if with heathen folly
He dares your will dispute,
Then in the name of freedom
Don't hesitate to shoot.

Pile on the brown man's burden,
Nor do not deem it hard
If you should earn the rancor
Of those ye yearn to guard;
The screaming of your eagle
Will drown the victim's sob—
Go on through fire and slaughter,
There's dollars in the job.

Pile on the brown man's burden,
With equity have done,
Weak, antiquated scruples
Their squeamish course have run;
And though 'tis freedom's banner
You're waving in the van,
Reserve for home consumption
The sacred "Rights of man."

Address of the President of the United States before the Home Market Club, of Boston, Mass., together with certain prefatory matter and synopsis of remarks of the Secretary of the Navy and the Postmaster-General, as published in the Washington Post:

The President's table was made conspicuous by immense bouquets of American Beauty roses and pinks. Over the stage, under an arch of bunting and electric lights, were large portraits of Washington, Lincoln, and McKinley, and underneath was the word "Liberator" in large letters. Each balcony was draped with bunting and shields, and from the roof hung long streamers. Over the speaker's platform were large pictures of Speaker Reed and ex-President Harrison, and between them the banner of the Home Market Club, under which both Presidents Harrison and McKinley were nominated at the national convention.

DEWEY'S PICTURE PROMINENT.

Upon the balcony was a picture of Admiral Dewey, with the motto, "To the captain of a German ship: You must not sail by the United States flag without seeing it," and his famous command at Manila: "You may fire, Gridley, when ready." On either side of this portrait were those of Grant and McKinley. On the rear balcony were portraits of Governor Wolcott and War Governor Andrew.

The menus were handsome. Each was an eight-page book, containing a life-like portrait of the President, the names and positions of the guests at the tables, the names of all the marshals, the dinner menu, the toasts to which the guests were to respond, the musical programme, and an ode to the President, written by Sam Walter Foss to the music of "America," and which was sung by the audience after the President concluded his speech.

At the President's plate the menu was satin bound, with an elaborate hand-painted cover.

President McKinley sat at the front of the platform, and among those at his table were Bishop Mallalien; Mayor Quincy, of Boston; Secretary Long; Secretary Alger; Governor Wolcott; Secretary Gage; Postmaster-General Smith; Secretary Bliss; Governor Rollins, of New Hampshire, and ex-Mayor Strong, of New York.

The invocation was pronounced by Bishop Mallalien.

There was great enthusiasm when the dinner had been concluded and some of the tables removed to make way for chairs. President Plunkett introduced Governor Wolcott and then Mayor Quincy, who made brief addresses welcoming the President. President McKinley was then introduced, and spoke as follows:

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY'S ADDRESS.

"Mr. TOASTMASTER AND GENTLEMEN: The years go quickly. It seems not so long, but it is in fact six years since it was my honor to be a guest of the Home Market Club. Much has happened in the intervening time. Issues which were then engaging us have been settled or put aside for larger and more absorbing ones. Domestic conditions have improved and are generally satisfactory.

"We have made progress in industry and have realized the prosperity for which we have been striving. We had four long years of adversity, which taught us some lessons which will never be unlearned and which will be valuable in guiding our future action.

"We have not only been successful in our financial and business affairs, but have been successful in a war with a foreign power which added great glory to American arms and a new chapter to American history.

"I do not know why in the year 1899 this Republic has unexpectedly had placed before it mighty problems which it must face and meet. They have come and are here, and they could not be kept away. Many who were impatient for the conflict a year ago, apparently heedless of its larger results, were the first to cry out against the far-reaching consequences of their own act. Those of us who dreaded war most, and whose every effort was directed to prevent it, had fears of new and grave problems which might follow its inauguration.

FATE BROUGHT THESE PROBLEMS.

"The evolution of events which no man could control has brought these problems upon us. Certain it is that they have not come through any fault on our own part, but as a high obligation, and we meet them with clear conscience and unselfish purpose, and with good heart resolve to undertake their solution.

"War was declared in April, 1898, with practical unanimity by the Congress, and, once upon us, was sustained by like unanimity among the people. There had been many who had tried to avert it, as on the other hand there were many who would have precipitated it at an early date. In its prosecution and conclusion the great majority of our countrymen of every section believed they were fighting in a just cause, and at home or on sea or in the field they had part in its glorious triumphs. It was the war of an undivided nation.

"Every great act in its progress, from Manila to Santiago, from Guam to Porto Rico, met universal and hearty commendation. The protocol commanded the practically unanimous approval of the American people. It was welcomed by every lover of peace beneath the flag.

"The Philippines, like Cuba and Porto Rico, were intrusted to our hands by the war, and to that great trust, under the providence of God and in the name of human progress and civilization, we are committed. It is a trust we have not sought; it is a trust from which we will not flinch.

CAN NOT FORESEE RESULTS OF WAR.

"The American people will hold up the hands of their servants at home to whom they commit its execution, while Dewey and Otis and the brave men whom they command will have the support of the country in upholding our flag where it now floats, the symbol and assurance of liberty and justice.

"What nation was ever able to write an accurate programme of the war upon which it was entering, much less decree in advance the scope of its results? Congress can declare war, but a higher power decrees its bounds and fixes its relations and responsibilities. The President can direct the movements of soldiers on the field and fleets upon the sea, but he can not foresee the close of such movements or prescribe their limits. He can not anticipate or avoid the consequences, but he must meet them.

"No accurate map of nations engaged in war can be traced until the war is over, nor can the measure of responsibility be fixed till the last gun is fired and the verdict embodied in the stipulations of peace.

"We hear no complaint of the relations created by the war between this Government and the islands of Cuba and Porto Rico. There are some, however, who regard the Philippines as in a different relation, but, whatever variety of views there may be on this phase of the question, there is universal agreement that the Philippines shall not be turned back to Spain.

DARE NOT SHIRK OUR RESPONSIBILITIES.

"No true American consents to that. Even if unwilling to accept them ourselves, it would have been a weak evasion of manly duty to require Spain to transfer them to some other power or powers and thus shirk our own responsibility. Even if we had had, as we did not have, the power to compel such a transfer, it could not have been made without the most serious international complications.

"Such a course could not be thought of. And yet had we refused to accept the cession of them we should have had no power over them, even for their own good. We could not discharge the responsibilities upon us until these islands became ours, either by conquest or treaty. There was but one alternative, and that was either Spain or the United States in the Philippines.

"The other suggestions—first, that they should be tossed into the arena of contention for the strife of nations, or, second, be left to the anarchy and chaos of no protectorate at all, were too shameful to be considered. The treaty gave them to the United States. Could we have required less and done our duty?

"Could we, after freeing the Filipinos from the domination of Spain, have left them without government and without power to protect life or property, or to perform the international obligations essential to an independent state? Could we have left them in a state of anarchy and justified ourselves in our own consciences or before the tribunal of mankind? Could we have done that in the sight of God and man?

CONCERN FOR THE FILIPINOS.

"Our concern was not for territory or trade or empire, but for the people whose interests and destiny, without our willing it, had been put in our hands. It was with this feeling that from the first day to the last not one word or line went from the Executive in Washington to our military and naval commanders at Manila or to our Peace Commissioners at Paris that did not put as the sole purpose to be kept in mind, first, after the success of our arms and the maintenance of our own honor, the welfare and happiness and the rights of the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands.

"Did we need their consent to perform a great act for humanity? We had it in every aspiration of their minds, in every hope of their hearts. Was it necessary to ask their consent to capture Manila, the capital of their islands? Did we ask their consent to liberate them from Spanish sovereignty, or to enter Manila Bay and destroy the Spanish sea power there? We did not ask these; we were obeying a higher moral obligation which rested on us and which did not require anybody's consent.

"We were doing our duty by them with the consent of our own consciences and with the approval of civilization. Every present obligation has been met and fulfilled in the expulsion of Spanish sovereignty from their islands, and while the war that destroyed it was in progress we could not ask their views. Nor can we now ask their consent.

FILIPINOS SHOOTING THEIR RESCUERS.

"Indeed, can anyone tell me in what form it could be marshaled and ascertained until peace and order, so necessary to reign of reason, shall be secured and established? A reign of terror is not the kind of rule under which right action and deliberate judgment are possible. It is not a good time for the liberator to submit important questions concerning liberty and government to the liberated while they are engaged in shooting down their rescuers.

"We have now ended the war with Spain. The treaty has been ratified by more than two-thirds of the Senate of the United States and by the judgment of nine-tenths of its people. No nation was ever more fortunate in war or more honorable in negotiations in peace. Spain is now eliminated from the problem. It remains to ask what we shall do now.

"I do not intrude upon the duties of Congress or seek to anticipate or forestall its action. I only say that the treaty of peace, honorably secured, having been ratified by the United States, and, as we confidently expect, shortly to be ratified in Spain, Congress will have the power, and, I am sure, the purpose, to do what in good morals is right and just and humane for these people in distant seas.

"It is sometimes hard to determine what is best to do, and the best thing to do is oftentimes the hardest. The prophet of evil would do nothing, because he flinches at sacrifice and effort, and to do nothing is easiest and involves the least cost. On those who have things to do there rests a responsibility which is not on those who have no obligations as doers.

FUTURE OF PHILIPPINES OUR CHARGE.

"If the doubters were in a majority, there would, it is true, be no labor, no sacrifice, no anxiety, and no burden raised or carried; no contribution from our ease and purse and comfort to the welfare of others, or even to the extension of our resources to the welfare of ourselves. There would be ease, but, alas, there would be nothing done.

"But grave problems come in the life of a nation, however much men may seek to avoid them. They come without our seeking. Why, we do not know, and it is not always given us to know; but the generation on which they are forced can not avoid the responsibility of honestly striving for their solution. We may not know precisely how to solve them, but we can make an honest effort to that end, and if made in conscience, justice, and honor, it will not be in vain.

"The future of the Philippine Islands is now in the hands of the American people. Until the treaty was ratified or rejected the executive department of this Government could only preserve the peace and protect life and property. That treaty now commits the free and enfranchised Filipinos to the guiding hand and the liberalizing influences, the generous sympathies, the uplifting education, not of their American masters, but of their American emancipators.

"No one can tell to-day what is best for them or for us. I know no one at this hour who is wise enough or sufficiently informed to determine what form of government will best subserve their interests and our interests, their and our well-being.

SOME PEOPLE KNOW EVERYTHING.

"If we knew everything by intuition—and sometimes I think there are those who believe that if we do not, they do—we should not need information; but unfortunately most of us are not in that happy state. The whole subject is now with Congress, and Congress is the voice, the conscience, and the judgment of the American people. Upon their judgment and conscience can we not rely? I believe in them; I trust them. I know of no better or safer human tribunal than the people.

"Until Congress shall direct otherwise, it will be the duty of the Executive to possess and hold the Philippines, giving to the people thereof peace and order and beneficent government, affording them every opportunity to prosecute their lawful pursuits, encouraging them in thrift and industry, making them feel and know that we are their friends, not their enemies; that their good is our aim; that their welfare is our welfare, but that neither their aspirations nor ours can be realized until our authority is acknowledged and unquestioned.

"That the inhabitants of the Philippines will be benefited by this Republic is my unshaken belief; that they will have a kinder government under our guidance, and that they will be aided in every possible way to be self-respecting and self-governing people is as true as that the American people love liberty and have an abiding faith in their own Government and in their own institutions.

OUR PRINCIPLES UNCHANGED.

"No imperial designs lurk in the American mind. They are alien to American sentiment, thought, and purpose. Our priceless principles undergo no change under a tropical sun. They go with the fiat:

"Why read ye not the changeless truth—
The free can conquer but to save?"

"If we can benefit these remote peoples, who will object? If in the years of the future they are established in government under law and liberty, who will regret our perils and sacrifices? Who will not rejoice in our heroism and humanity? Always perils, and always after them safety; always darkness and clouds, but always shining through them the light and the sunshine; always cost and sacrifice, but always after them the fruition of liberty, education, and civilization.

"I have no light or knowledge not common to my countrymen. I do not prophesy. The present is all-absorbing to me, but I can not bound my vision by the blood-stained trenches around Manila, where every red drop, whether from the veins of an American soldier or a misguided Filipino, is anguish to my heart, but by the broad range of future years, when that group of islands, under the impulse of the year just past, shall have become the gems and glories of those tropical seas, a land of plenty and of increasing possibilities, a people redeemed from savage indolence and habits devoted to the arts of peace, in touch with the commerce and trade of all nations, enjoying the blessings of freedom, of civil and religious liberty, of education and of homes, and whose children and children's children shall for ages hence bless the American Republic because it emancipated and redeemed their fatherland and set them in the pathway of the world's best civilization."

HON. EMORY SMITH'S REMARKS.

Postmaster-General Smith, the next speaker, began with a eulogy of the President, and then entered upon a summary of the work accomplished by the Administration in the revision of the tariff, the restoration of business confidence, the routing of the North and South. He continued:

"Whatever the doubts and differences of this hour, I see the darkened peoples who are liberated from oppression looking back to the Administration of William McKinley and blessing it for the humanity and freedom which go with American rule, while our own people, with faith confirmed by fruits, will honor that Administration as dating a new epoch in the advancement and development of the Republic.

"Four days ago we celebrated the birthday of Lincoln. Six days hence we shall celebrate the birthday of Washington. Neither Washington nor Lincoln started for what became the ultimate necessity and object, but neither hesitated to accept the obligations and consequences of their glorious deeds.

"Lincoln emancipated 4,000,000 of beings; McKinley has lifted 10,000,000 into new light and freedom, and the devoted President, who, of all American leaders, is most like Lincoln in his moral attributes and his popular sympathy, is keeping touch with the popular heart as he fulfills his lofty mission of taking the flag of American liberty where Lincoln has left it, pure and stainless, and carrying it forward to wider sway and influence in the world."

OVATION TO SECRETARY LONG.

Secretary of the Navy Long was then introduced. He received an ovation second only to that of the President. He was cheered to the echo, and even President McKinley rose and waved his napkin in salute with the audience. Some one in the balcony called for three cheers for "Dewey's friend."

Secretary Long said, in part:

"The treaty of peace with Spain, thank Heaven, has been ratified; and while, unfortunately, the delay in its ratification may be accountable for the recent bloodshed at Manila, the discussions which preceded it have not been without their value in an honest presentation of all phases of the situation and in holding the country to the highest ideals of national duty and honor. It is certainly cause for congratulation that the extreme imperialists who resisted the treaty have been signally overthrown. By resisting its ratification they have been insisting upon the extremest imperialism and have out-heroded Herod.

"They not only would have prolonged the war with Spain, but would have taken out of the hands of the people and put into the hands of one man, the President, absolute authority over the Philippines, limited only to the indefinite scope of what is called the war power, wielded by a purely military arm holding a naked sword. Think of that for imperialism. It is a great credit to the President that, like those two other modest candidates, Julius Caesar and George Washington, he has refused this offer of 'a kingly crown.'"

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, I rise to ask unanimous consent to have read at the Clerk's desk that part of President McKinley's Boston speech which defines his Philippine policy.

Mr. SULZER. I object to that.

Mr. HAMILTON. Very well; then I ask that it be read in my own time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I have no objection to the whole address being read.

Mr. HAMILTON. I ask the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL] to grant me time enough in which to have it read.

Mr. HULL. All right.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I object.

Mr. HULL. You can not object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I ask that the whole address be read.

Mr. HAMILTON. The American people have read it and understand it.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Yes; they have read it, and the time will come when they will damn it, as they ought to.

Mr. SULZER. I hope the Republicans over there will not quarrel. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAMILTON. Republicans are not quarreling.

Mr. SIMPSON. Do not muddy the water.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. Put in the whole document.

Mr. SULZER. Put the President in.

Mr. HAMILTON. He is in.

Mr. SULZER. You can bet he is in.

Mr. LOW. Perhaps the gentleman from New York would like to get in.

Mr. SULZER. We will get in if it is necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

McKINLEY'S PHILIPPINES POLICY.

The Philippines, like Cuba and Porto Rico, were intrusted to our hands by the war, and to that great trust, under the providence of God and in the name of human progress and civilization, we are committed. It is a trust from which we will not flinch.

There is universal agreement that the Philippines shall not be turned back to Spain. No true American would consent to that.

The suggestions that they should be tossed into the arena for the strife of nations or be left to the anarchy or chaos of no protectorate at all were too shameful to be considered. The treaty gave them to the United States. Could we have required less and done our duty?

Our concern is not for territory, or trade, or empire, but for the people whose interests and destiny were put in our hands.

It is not a good time for the liberator to submit important questions to the liberated while they are engaged in shooting down their rescuers.

The future of the Philippine Islands is now in the hands of the American people.

I know of no better or safer human tribunal than the people.

Until Congress shall direct otherwise it will be the duty of the Executive to possess and hold the Philippines.

That the inhabitants of the Philippines will be benefited is my unshaken belief.

No imperial designs lurk in the American mind. They are alien to American sentiment.

Mr. HULL. I ask the other side to consume a portion of its time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD in its entirety the President's address at Boston.

Mr. WALKER of Massachusetts. I object.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I ask to insert it as a part of my remarks, and I think I have that right.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to print the speech of the President at Boston in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. A parliamentary inquiry. By virtue of the general leave given by the House to extend remarks in the RECORD in the debate, have I not the right to put the whole of the address that the President of the United States delivered before the Home Market Club at Boston, in the RECORD with my speech?

Mr. PERKINS. I think not.

Mr. MARSH. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that unanimous consent will be given to the gentleman from Indiana to insert as a part of his remarks the President's speech at Boston.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. That is all I ask. I have the right to do it anyhow.

Mr. MARSH. It will be an embellishment to the gentleman's speech.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I know, from the gentleman's standpoint, it will.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to say to the gentleman from Indiana—and the Chair hopes the gentleman will give his attention—that the House and not the committee gave gentlemen who address the committee on this bill the privilege to extend their remarks in the RECORD. Each gentleman can exercise his judgment upon that, and it is a matter for the House to determine when those remarks are printed, and not for the Chairman of the committee.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I have always intended to, and will incorporate the address of the President at Boston in my speech and publish it in the RECORD.

Mr. MARSH. I will say—

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I prefer that it should be printed as a whole, and not merely a part of it.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Chairman, while I think the consent asked for by the gentleman from Indiana would vastly improve his speech, at the same time I think the consent granted by the House was to extend remarks, and it has always been held that no gentleman under privilege to extend his remarks had the right to go outside and incorporate as a part of his remarks any speech or document or book that might be on hand.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state to the gentleman from Iowa that that is a matter for the House to determine after the gentleman from Indiana exercises his supposed privilege to extend his remarks.

Mr. PERKINS. I want to say a word further. I understand the Chair to be deciding this matter upon authority granted by the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair decides nothing. The Chair has just stated to the gentleman from Indiana that the House, before it went into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, authorized any gentleman who addressed the committee on the bill pending to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PERKINS. Did I understand the Chair to say—

The CHAIRMAN. One moment. The gentleman from Indiana asked the Chair if under that authority he had the privilege to incorporate in his remarks the address of the President at Boston. The Chair stated to him that each gentleman must exercise his own discretion as to the proper construction of that authority, and it will be for the House hereafter to determine whether that authority has been abused or not.

Mr. BOUTELLE of Maine. That is the whole of it.

Mr. MAHANY. I rise to suggest that as the gentleman from Indiana addressed his remarks to the speech of the President of the United States, it is eminently fit and proper that he should print that speech as a part of his remarks, especially as no Republican ought to be ashamed of the utterances of the leader of his party.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Why, the gentleman from Iowa is evidently ashamed of the utterances of the President, because he does not want them inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. PERKINS. "The gentleman from Iowa" is not ashamed of, and "the gentleman from Iowa" distinctly stated that he thought that the utterances of the President would vastly improve the gentleman's speech.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Yes; I heard the gentleman indulge himself in that fling at me. I am quite accustomed to that thing from gentlemen of his disposition. [Applause.]

Mr. PERKINS. My contention is, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. HAMILTON. It is a clear deliverance by one of the ablest statesmen of modern times.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I demand the regular order.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, let us have the regular order.

Mr. BAILEY. I simply desire to say, as, in view of what the gentleman from Iowa, the chairman of the Committee on Printing, has stated, he intends, perhaps, to make objection after the gentleman from Indiana has printed the President's speech in the RECORD—I simply desire to say that under the leave the gentleman from Indiana has the right to print anything that he could properly have read during the delivery of his speech. I think the Chair has correctly decided that the question belongs to the House, but I was not willing for it to be closed with the statement of the gentleman from Iowa, because he may claim that he had given fair warning that he intended to object to it.

Mr. PERKINS. Now, I think, in justice to myself, I should be permitted to state one thing. I have never indicated, I believe, that I should have any objection, either by myself or in the committee, on the subject of printing the speech referred to in connection with the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana, and the gentleman from Texas is wrong when he assumes that I will object; but as a matter of precedent it ought to be understood that when the request is to be made it should be separated from the general request that has been submitted, and should be made to the House, because all gentlemen can readily see how great an abuse in printing might be, and it is merely as a matter of precedent that I raise the point.

Mr. SULZER. Will the gentleman from Iowa go on now?

Mr. HULL. I think the gentleman from New York had better occupy a portion of his time now.

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, how much time has the other side occupied?

The CHAIRMAN. One hour.

Mr. HULL. I understand, Mr. Chairman, technically we have occupied fifty-eight minutes. I believe I occupied fifty-seven minutes and I yielded one minute—

The CHAIRMAN. Several minutes have been occupied by disorder on both sides, but I will say to the gentleman in charge of the bill that no injustice has been done.

Mr. HULL. How much has been charged up to the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. The same to both sides, seven minutes each for disorder. [Laughter.]

Mr. SULZER. I object to that. Mr. Chairman, I now yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SETTLE].

Mr. SETTLE. Mr. Chairman, I shall not occupy any of my time in the discussion of the pending bill, for which I expect to vote for the reasons I may give further on in my remarks. But I desire to submit some observations, without regard to their orderly arrangement, upon a subject very closely connected with this bill, and which, I believe, will be closely connected with the legislation of this House for many years to come, and that is the foreign policy of this Government toward the Philippine Islands, to the retention of which, either by forcible or by peaceable methods, I am unalterably opposed.

I confess that I address the House with some reluctance, although I have sought the opportunity to do so. I am reluctant because I fear the House may resent the occupying of so much time in the closing days of the session upon what they may consider a threadbare subject. I am reluctant because I feel that I shall be able to throw very little new light upon it, because I know the ground has been well trodden and well beaten. But I feel impelled by a sense of justice to myself, as well as to the people whom I represent on this floor, that I should not remain silent upon this vital question that is now attracting the attention of Congress and the country.

Equity declares that he who is silent when he ought to speak may not afterwards be permitted to speak, when he ought to remain silent. It is simply for my own satisfaction, that I may define in a positive way my own conviction, and not with the vain hope that I may influence the action of the House or convince its superior wisdom of the truth of my position, that I claim its attention for a brief period this afternoon.

I have been very deeply impressed of late with the truth of the fact that the world moves in spite of our efforts to prevent it; that "there's a divinity that shapes our ends, rough hew them how we will." I have been impressed with the truth of the fact that the mere individual, the mere one man, is an almost unfelt factor in the great problems that are being worked out, or, to put it more accurately, the great problems that seem to be working themselves out, around us and about us. The last year has been a year of surprises to all of us, and of unexpected happenings. Recent events have crowded upon each other thick and fast—so rapidly, indeed, that all the calculations that we may make to-day we find upset on the morrow.

Like some swollen river, this fast-rushing current of events in its onward flow, outrunning its banks, has gathered up many of our pet theories and many of our fond conclusions and borne them away on its broad bosom to the sea, separating us from them forever. I doubt if there is a member on this floor who has not sustained such losses during that time, who has not been compelled to abandon positions that he once deemed unassailable and given up conclusions which he thought were permanently fixed and embedded in his mind, not because we lost faith in the wisdom of our position, not because we doubted the correctness of our conclusions, but simply because we found ourselves face to face with changed conditions, that rendered those theories mere vagaries and those fixed conclusions impracticable for present use and present purposes.

Six months ago I could not have been persuaded to believe that I would, under any circumstances, have voted to pay Spain $20,000,000 or one cent for indemnity on account of the war; but I found myself confronted with a new state of affairs and realized that I had got past that stage. I found myself impelled by what I thought was a sense of national honor to discharge a national debt, and so I voted cheerfully for that appropriation. And so to-day or to-morrow I shall vote for this appropriation bill. Although I voted against the Army bill, although I am opposed to this unusual increase in the Army, yet, having an Army, we must maintain and feed and equip that Army, not starve it to death. [Applause.]

These are some of the theories that I have buried with other friends who have gone before. I believe it is a safe rule for a Representative to adopt that whenever his Government commits itself irrevocably to any line of action—that is to say, to such a course as that to retrace it would involve the impairment of national honor or imperil the national safety—it is the duty of the Representative to stand by his Government, whether it be right or whether it be wrong. [Applause.] It is better to build up than to pull down—to create than to destroy. It is better to put our shoulders to the wheel in the common effort to make successful that which seems to be a questionable proposition and beclouded with doubt than to pose in the future in the attitude of an obstructionist, desirous that the time may come when he can wag his head and say, "I told you so." [Applause.]

But my vote upon the $20,000,000 appropriation and my vote upon this Army appropriation bill do not in any wise commit me to the policy of the acquisition of this foreign territory, either with or without the consent of the inhabitants of those islands. And while these facts do not influence me, neither do the unhappy occurrences of the last few weeks in those islands deter me from that opposition.

Mr. MARSH. Will it disturb the gentleman if I ask him a question?

Mr. SETTLE. I hope not. [Laughter.]

Mr. MARSH. Are not the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico already our territory? If not, whose territory are they?

Mr. SETTLE. I will answer the gentleman in the course of my argument. It would interrupt the natural current of my remarks to do so at this time. I beg the gentleman to believe that I will define my position and give him answer before I conclude.

I deplore as much as any man the loss of the lives of our brave men in the Philippine Islands within the last ten days; and I deplore it on another ground—that it has created a diversion in the minds of the American people from the true question, the abstract right of this Government to acquire that territory and to retain it permanently. I am opposed to the peaceful annexation of those islands; and it is not necessary to elaborate my reasons, for they have been gone over again and again by gentlemen able to maintain their position on this floor.

The remoteness of the islands, the character of the people, their unadaptability to ever becoming American citizens, the danger of foreign entanglements, all these arguments appear to me unanswerable. But when it comes to the proposition to forcibly, against the consent of that people, annex them to this country, it does seem to me that it passes beyond the pale of argument.

We talk about living in a land of freedom, and so we do; but we live in a land of freedom hampered and restrained by law, without which there is no freedom, and without which there is no true liberty.

Nations, like individuals, are subject to law. The principles of equity, of common, fair dealing, that obtain between men obtain also between nations. There may, indeed, be no international court of arbitration in which these complaints may be heard, but there is a forum, and that forum is the forum of conscience and intelligent public opinion, and wherever it resides, in the breasts of whatever people, the American people must there be judged. There is such a thing as the law of estoppel that binds individuals to a certain line of conduct, and equally binds nations.

I want to present in a very brief period a few legal propositions containing this law of estoppel and some kindred legal propositions which in my judgment render the contention of gentlemen who advocate forcible annexation clearly untenable. The law tells us that a man who purchases property that is at the time in the adverse possession of another acquires no title, but that his purchase is absolutely void. The law tells us that no man may by word or act induce a certain line of conduct on the part of a third person and then ever afterwards be permitted to deny the binding force of that act or the facts of that admission.

The law says that if I stand by and permit my property to be sold without objection to an innocent purchaser, I am thereby estopped from thereafter asserting any claim to it. The law says further that parties occupying the position of trustees—such as guardians, executors, and administrators—are forbidden to speculate in the estates of their beneficiaries. So that if any fiduciary should purchase land of his cestui que trust at decretal sale, equity would deem him to hold it as a trustee for the beneficial owner and would set the sale aside. The law says that no man shall by word or act encourage another to buy and be afterwards permitted to set up any claim of title in himself.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would apply some of these general legal principles to the case of the Filipinos, and while I am aware that all analogies are more or less imperfect, yet I am persuaded that a review of our relations to these Filipinos will satisfy any intelligent lawyer, or, for that matter, any intelligent, fair-thinking man, that we are estopped by every consideration of right and justice and good faith from forcibly taking possession of these islands.

When we went to war with Spain we found these people also involved in a war with them. They were in rebellion against the Spanish Government, and we knew it. They had arms and armies in the field, and had fought and were fighting battles. They claimed the right of self-government. They could not buy it with silver and gold, but with their blood, and their treasure, and their sacrifices during many years. We went to war with Spain for one purpose, they for another. Our ends were different, but our common aim was to effect the destruction of the common enemy, the effect of which would be to attain the end sought by each.

We found in these people allies in our war. We said to them, "We are fighting for one thing; you for another; we will make it a common cause, and when we defeat the common enemy we shall each then obtain the relief we have sought."

What right did we recognize in them when we took them into a companionship of this kind with us? What right did we recognize in them when we fought side by side with them against the common enemy and when they helped us to win our most recent victories in the East?

Why, we recognized their right to throw off the Spanish yoke. We recognized their right to be free and independent. We said to them, "You do right to throw off the Spanish yoke. We, too, want to help other people now oppressed by Spain. Help us and we will help you." It is now said that they are rebels. We are estopped to call them rebels, for we have recognized their right to rebel.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. Will my colleague allow me an interruption just there?

Mr. SETTLE. Certainly.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky. I understand my friend to take the position that the Filipinos were the allies of the people of the United States—

Mr. SETTLE. Yes.

Mr. WHEELER of Kentucky (continuing). During the late war; and that we are placed under a sort of moral obligation in relation to them because of their assistance, which we must recognize. Now, I would like to ask my friend to state which obligation is in his judgment the greater on the people of the United States—whether it is greater in respect to the treaty which the Senate of the United States, in accordance with the Constitution, has prepared and ratified with Spain, or the obligation to which he refers in connection with the people of the Philippines.

Mr. SETTLE. I will endeavor to satisfy my colleague from Kentucky on that point. If I correctly apprehend his question, I fail to see that the treaty has anything to do with this question. I do not concede that the treaty commits us to the retention of the islands, or that having voted recently myself for the payment of the $20,000,000 indebtedness to Spain, I am thereby committed to such a policy. I recognize, of course, that he had the right to vote against it, if he so desired, but I do not see that he could give any good reason for such a vote except that he had the constitutional right to cast it. [Laughter.]

Now, I desire to state in connection with this matter, and looking upon it as an independent proposition, that there is not a day that I would not have voted to ratify the treaty for the reason that it would complicate matters much more not to have ratified it. [Applause.] I would have voted to ratify because, as Macbeth says, to return would be more tedious than to go on, and for the reason that it kept us on the high plane upon which we began the war. It freed the islands from the Spanish Crown; it relieved them of a further continuation of the unequal struggle.

I regard it as a voluntary payment by this Government in aid of the Philippines, unasked by them, unsought by them, and, in fact, protested against by the only emissaries they could find to go to Paris during the sitting of the Peace Commission. That is my position on the twenty millions. We had infinitely better lose the twenty millions than to spend hundreds of millions in a fruitless effort to save it. I am willing to trust the moral sense of those people to see that we are paid this money back. If not, let it go. I do not think it requires the exercise of much wisdom for a man to let loose as soon as possible of the red-hot end of a poker. [Laughter.]

Now, gentlemen, you are in this position exactly: These men helped you in your battles in the East, and you knew they were fighting for freedom. You induced them to believe that you would assist them, and what did effectual assistance mean ultimately? It meant the accomplishment of the desire, the long-cherished desire, of their hearts, an independent government of their own. It will not do for us to say to-day, "You are not capable of self-government." Did not we know it at the time we accepted their services? Are we not estopped to-day to say that they can not satisfy us that they are capable of governing themselves?

You might as well meet the question fairly. There is but one alternative. We have either got to turn these people loose or else we have got to keep them. There is no use in pretending to say that we are going to experiment with them. For we know enough about the character of those people to be satisfied now that there is no reasonable time in which either they would become fit citizens of this Government or satisfy us that they are capable of maintaining a government of their own, measured by our high standard of what a government should be.

So that we occupy the position—the absurd, the unjust, the indefensible position—of accepting aid from these men, helping them ostensibly to win their fight, and then hying us off to Paris, if the contention of the gentlemen who favor forcible annexation is correct—hying us off to Paris and negotiating a treaty by which the United States gets all the fruits of victory and these people lose out altogether.

Mr. RAY of New York. May I interrupt the gentleman there?

Mr. SETTLE. Certainly.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, supposing that the United States Government should withdraw its fleets and its armies entirely from the Philippines and leave those people to themselves, do you think for a moment that other nations would leave them alone, leave them to establish such a government as they could and go on and have their liberty and enjoy it peacefully? Do you believe that?

Mr. SETTLE. I do not believe that those people understand liberty in the sense in which the gentleman and I understand it, and the day may not come, and will not, in my judgment, come in our time, nor in the time of our immediate posterity, when they will; but when you accepted their assistance and led them to believe you were for them and were fighting for what they wanted, not what you think they ought to want, you are estopped now to say that they ought not to be permitted to take all the chances of what leaving them alone by us would mean and would involve.

Mr. RAY of New York. I do not think you have answered my question, but I want to put another proposition.

Mr. SETTLE. I understand the question you asked me. It was, if I believed the other nations of the world would leave them alone.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, just let me suggest another thing: The United States Government has interfered there for the benefit of those islands and that people.

Mr. SETTLE. I deny that. We interfered for the benefit of ourselves. The United States interfered right there as a matter of selfishness and policy alone, because when Dewey sunk those Spanish ships he found other work, as he thought, to do, not looking to the acquisition of the Philippines, but to the crippling of the Spanish in their dominions in the Pacific.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now, while I deny your proposition that we interfered there out of selfish motives, the fact remains that we did interfere.

Mr. SETTLE. You did interfere in the sense of going there, but you went on your own account. You did not interfere in their behalf any more than they interfered in yours.

Mr. RAY of New York. We did interfere and we have relieved those islands from Spanish domination. Now, something has got to be done, and it is incumbent, is it not, upon the United States to do what is best and what is the most just thing under all the circumstances.

Now, shall we leave that people to themselves? Shall we sail away, withdraw our armies, and leave them to anarchy—to fight among themselves—leave them a prey to other nations?

Mr. SETTLE. We must do it, if to do otherwise means a surrender of national honor and the violation of the public faith toward those people. [Applause on the Democratic side.] Charity begins at home, I will say to my friend from New York.

Mr. VINCENT. Do you think it would be better to kill them?

Mr. SETTLE. Charity begins at home; and I know of no law, human or divine, that requires us to set ourselves up as a sort of universal Ku Klux Klan or White Leaguers to regulate the morals of the world; no law that requires us to jeopardize the happiness and prosperity of seventy millions of people in the vain and fruitless effort to impart our civilization to these effete people of the East. [Applause.]

It would be far better that the Japanese, the English, or the Germans should take that land, so that they take it without our assistance or without our connivance in any way, than that we should lose national honor and sink ourselves not only in our own self-respect, but in the estimation of the whole world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. If the gentleman would not be inconvenienced by it, I should like to ask him a question.

Mr. SETTLE. All right.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I understand the gentleman to say that the United States accepted the cooperation of the Filipinos. Now, where is that evidence? What fact have you, not your own statements, what facts based upon any order or decree or communication made by this Government or any officer representing this Government—upon what fact do you base the statement that there was any acceptance of Aguinaldo or any cooperation on the part of the Filipinos to lend aid? Is it not, on the contrary, the fact that the first soldier that landed carried with him a proclamation ordering that the armed Filipinos should not enter Manila, and should not fight the Spanish?

Mr. SETTLE. If you ask me the facts, I am not on the inside of this Administration, but I am advised that the records of the State Department do contain facts sufficient to vindicate the position I take to-day—that they did accept them. Does the gentleman mean to deny to the country that the Filipinos did fight side by side with the American troops there?

Mr. GROSVENOR. I do most decidedly.

Mr. SETTLE. That is the first time I have ever heard it denied anywhere. They took Aguinaldo there, who was said to have taken that $400,000, but who actually expended it in the purchase of arms and munitions of war and in the payment of his soldiers.

Mr. GROSVENOR. We invited nobody.

Mr. SETTLE. We seem to have endeavored to mislead him. He was good enough for you then, and you wanted his advice, and accepted it and acted upon it. I do not hold him up as a George Washington, but I do hold him up as a representative Filipino, selected by them as their leader. There is no standard of taste, says moral science. We can point to the complexion of this House and prove that [laughter], and the blacker you make Aguinaldo as a representative Filipino the stronger you make the argument against incorporating any such people as that into this Government of ours.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Who has proposed to incorporate them?

Mr. SETTLE. I have only five minutes left. These Filipinos, as I say, whether you gave them an instrument of writing indicating that you invited them to participate in this campaign or not, entered into this real alliance with you. They purchased guns and they armed their men; they fought side by side with you, and their expert scouts gave our commanders all the information they had of the country that led to these recent victories over there. And now you want to annex them.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I say they were forbidden to take part.

Mr. SETTLE. The gentleman ignores recent history when he says we did not invite them. These men were daily engaging the Spanish forces. We cooperated with them and they with us, and every reasonable inducement was given them to believe that success for one meant success for both. The gentleman from Ohio asks who proposes to incorporate these people into our Government, and intimates that I am fighting an imaginary enemy and that no one advocates the forcible, permanent annexation of the islands.

It is indeed true that only a few are bold enough to openly avow such a policy, but all the signs point that way. The passage of the Army bill indicates it; the generous applause which greets any sentiment on the floor of this House involved in the question "Who will pull down the flag?" and that other sentiment so frequently indulged in of late, "That we ought to retain every foot of ground captured during the war"—these, too, are signs that have but one meaning. Even the ballad mongers have put the sentiment in vaudeville verse: "Hold dem Philippines, McKinley, hold dem Philippines." [Laughter.]

Of course all these patriotic utterances are qualified and mollified with the statement that there is no desire to hold them any longer than is necessary to insure stable government, but it is plain to be seen that the ultimate purpose in view is to enslave these people and to annex them permanently to the United States. But the purpose is concealed for the present. We are to be led up by easy stages to this realization. We are first to endure, then pity, then embrace. [Loud applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SETTLE. I ask unanimous consent that I may have twelve and one-half minutes more. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman ask that general debate be extended that long—fifteen minutes? The House has already fixed the time with reference to general debate, and gentlemen control that on the two sides.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask consent that general debate be extended by fifteen minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will have to say the committee has no power to change the time for debate that was fixed by the House.

Mr. WILLIAMS of Mississippi. I ask that the committee rise informally in order that we may extend the time.

Mr. PAYNE. I object to the committee rising for any such purpose.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HULL].

Mr. HULL. I yield twenty minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, we are told that the President has turned his back on the Declaration of Independence.

We are told that in carrying this war to its legitimate conclusions we are forgetting the traditions of our heroic past, and that under this Administration we are making swift descent toward national destruction.

I propose a brief review of current history.

The United States to-day is foremost among the living, advancing powers of the world, "the heir of all the ages in the foremost files of time."

Since, in the language of Edmund Burke, "party divisions are things inseparable from free government," it happens that national glory is often intimately associated with party success.

A policy which may stand for all time, for national glory or national apology, must be formulated and executed by the party in power, which is responsible to history for the management or mismanagement of the trust reposed in it.

The Republican party, under the splendid leadership of William McKinley, has met the responsibility which the Omnipotent Ruler of the destinies of men and nations has set before us—so well that the onlooking world wonders and applauds, and time will here turn down a leaf in human history to mark the splendid beginning of a new era of human progress.

There never was a time in all our glorious history when every part of our nation was so proud of our whole nation, never a time when our whole nation was so proud of every part of our nation, never a time when every star in our flag was so proud of the whole constellation of stars of which it is one, as now under this Administration.

WHAT WE ARE AND WHAT WE MIGHT HAVE BEEN.

It is perfectly true that it is no more in the power of Congress to make this nation richer by calling 50 cents a dollar than it is within the power of Congress to make this nation bigger by calling half a mile a mile.

It is no more in the power of Congress to make me richer by calling 50 cents in my pocket a dollar than it is in the power of Congress to make me taller by calling 6 inches a foot.

It is no more in the power of Congress to make the farmer richer by calling 50 cents a dollar than it is in the power of Congress to make the farmer's farm bigger by calling half an acre an acre.

But it was within the power of the Fifty-fifth Congress, under the Administration of William McKinley, to make this nation greater than ever before and every American taller than ever before and every star in our flag brighter than ever before by declaring a war, glorious in its inception, glorious in its conduct on land and on sea, and glorious in its probable future results.

I may be prejudiced, but to be perfectly candid, I think we are prouder of ourselves than as if we had cut in two some soldier's or widow's pension.

Than as if we had reduced the purchasing power of a day's work.

Than as if we had cut in two the value of existing life-insurance policies to the injury of widows and orphans.

Than as if we had so legislated that savings deposits and loan investments, slowly and savingly paid to maturity, should be repaid in clipped dollars.

Than as if we had so arranged that guardians, executors, and administrators might file their final accounts and be discharged on payment of depreciated money and thereby lawfully defraud their wards and trust estates.

I think we are prouder of ourselves than as if this great Christian nation, with church spires breaking the horizon line in every direction, where the Golden Rule and the Ten Commandments are taught, had posted notices in the markets of the world that it proposed to cheaply pay its honest debts in depreciated money.

We got down to the intrinsic bullion value of our national morality in the last national election, and we have been thinking pretty well of ourselves ever since.

We have been successful ever since, and have thereby illustrated the truth of the old saying that "Honesty is the best policy."

Now, when we have seen our war bonds taken everywhere by a patriotic people, whose purchase is a pledge of their devotion to our common country and their confidence in its integrity, we stand erect and say, "That is the kind of people we are."

And I do not believe there is a man in this country who regrets or begrudges for a single instant the contribution he has made by stamps or otherwise to thrash the conceit, cruelty, tyranny, and treachery out of Spain, and send our flag like a sunburst of liberty into the medieval twilight of Spain's possessions.

PATRIOTISM.

There are some things above dollars and cents in this world, and one thing is patriotism; that sentiment of the human heart having more than a million homes, but brought under no one roof of human workmanship—which governments and magistrates and granite capitols seek to represent, but can not express—difficult to define, but as much a part of our national life as are the red drops that visit every heart and which nothing can symbolize except the Stars and Stripes.

And yet—and yet—right now—right in the midst of the grand anthem of American glory that is sweeping over the country, there are people going about like patent-medicine advertisements describing liver complaint and dyspepsia and seeking to stir up bitterness, envy, and discontent by political suggestion.

It is a scientific fact that you can make a man sick by telling him he looks sick.

And there are periods in the life of states when popular energy is relaxed into lackluster, shuffling irresolution, bagged at the knee, yellow of complexion, and unsound of reasoning, brought on by political quacks, with lying diagnoses of national liver complaint and municipal paresis.

Some of these political empirics actually take themselves seriously.

Some people think they are pious when they are only bilious.

THE VERDICT OF 1896.

The people of the United States on the day of the last national election, after hearing the arguments on both sides and reviewing the evidence, retired into their election booths to consider of their verdict, and returned the Republican party to power.

By that verdict they pronounced against the clipping of coin by legislative enactment.

Against legalizing the payment of honest debts in depreciated dollars.

In favor of a dollar true to name and true to the value stamped upon it, good the whole world round and the whole year round, and that will not shrink on exposure to salt water in crossing the ocean.

Now, on what grounds do the gentlemen on the other side seek a "new trial?"

Certainly not on the ground of newly discovered evidence.

There has been no evidence discovered since the last national election that does not still further demonstrate the fallacy of supplementing a policy of free trade, based on the theory that things are too high, with the policy of free silver, based on the theory that things are too low.

There is no sentiment about this—nothing but cold, metallic logic.

What do the gentlemen on the other side mean?

For years they have been saying that "the price is increased to the consumer by precisely the amount of the duty exacted," and they have been complaining because things were too high.

Now when they talk about money, they say things are too low. When did they change?

For years you could no more get an orator of the opposite political persuasion to make a speech without quoting Sydney Smith's celebrated speech on taxation, under the impression that he was delivering an original essay, than you could get a boy to go to school by a circus without stopping.

It is a mighty good thing that political oratory does not run the machinery of trade and commerce.

Sometimes it does, and then the machinery does not know which way to turn.

It is a mighty good thing that the same dynamo that operates the halo around the head of some temporary statesman does not control manufacturing plants.

THE NOBILITY OF AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP.

When did it become true that reduction in the price of food, fuel, shelter, and clothes was not a sign of advancing civilization?

The dollar earned in the sweat of your face means nothing until it is converted into food, fuel, shelter, and clothes, and you want that dollar capable of being converted into the largest possible amount of all these things, because you can not eat your dollar.

There is not a single silver-standard nation in the world where a laboring man receives a fair day's pay for a fair day's work.

By reason of man's invention, the cunning of machinery, and division of labor things have been growing cheaper, till the luxuries of a few years ago have become the necessities of to-day and are within the easy reach of all.

Things have been growing cheaper till a parlor carpet is no longer a luxury to be secluded from use except on high days and holidays and then to be trod on in a Sunday hush.

And no young man is too poor to have a suit of clothes with creased trousers.

And as for young women, why, the seal of the sea, the worms of the earth, the birds of the air congregate in furs, silks, and feathers to decorate American beauty without regard to "race, color, or previous condition of servitude."

In its theory of protection to American labor and American industry and American manhood, the Republican party stands in the very vanguard of the unhesitating, unrelenting march of civilization.

For years we have been saying that we wanted no bargains that smelled of the "sweat-shop"—that told the pathetic story of hunger and want and homelessness and hopelessness; and that we could build up behind protection competing industries that would make things cheap without cheapening men and women.

And we have done it, too—not perfectly—nothing is perfect this side of God's Kingdom.

There never will be a time short of the millennium when Hunger in rags will not wait at the outer gate of Plenty, and Dives and Lazarus will not be fellow-citizens.

But things are cheap; and the men and women of America are not cheap, but intelligent, brave, patriotic, and liberty loving, wearing the high front of American citizenship, and able to hold the fort for America in the roughest breach that time and spite can bring against our common country in any time of danger.

And this is why the American citizen, behind the American gun, can knock a hole in a Spanish gunboat at long range and transform the pride of Spain's navy into scrap iron before breakfast.

SOME GLARING INCONSISTENCIES.

But now that things are cheap—and that is what they said they wanted; and now that we are conquering, winning, and annexing the markets of the world—and the markets of the world are what they said they wanted—there are those who say that things are too cheap and that we ought not to annex any more territory until we have introduced the millennium here.

And while claiming that things are too low, they urge free trade because things are too high.

And while urging free trade for low prices, they urge free silver for high prices; and while urging that more money makes higher prices, they urge free trade for low prices.

All this is confusing.

They went to the city in the last national campaign and sympathized with the laboring man because he was paying too much for his bread, and at the very next stop at the first way station out of town, they wept on the neck of the farmer from the rear platform of a special car because he was not getting enough for his wheat, out of which the laboring man's bread was made.

They wanted to unite the mining and farming interests. So they proclaimed that wheat and silver had been going down hill together for years and years, joint victims of the same inexorable law, and lo! in the midst of the campaign, when this fallacy had been blared on rostrums and blazoned in pamphlets, wheat went up and silver went down, and has continued to go down.

They declared that if we should free coin silver at 16 to 1 silver would soon go up to 129 cents an ounce and would therefore not cheapen money, and in the next breath they declared that the crying, excruciating need of the people of the United States was cheaper money.

Announcing opposition to capital, they nominated a multimillionaire for Vice-President.

They have been in the habit of asserting that the wealth of the country is concentrated in the Republican party, but did anyone ever suppose there were no Democrats who had consented to become rich?

Did anyone ever hear of a Populist selling all that he had and giving to the poor, or becoming solicitous lest he should acquire a competency?

The difference in men financially is due to head, heredity, and hustling, not to party; and no party, so far as I know, comes exclusively within the benediction of the beatitudes.

Knowing that it is only money in circulation that affects prices, some one scared money out of circulation two years ago.

Knowing that confidence makes business and business makes prosperity, some one destroyed confidence two years ago.

Naturally a miscellaneous medley of premises and conclusions like all this led to curious results.

Many gentlemen not brilliantly successful in the management of their own affairs became prolific in schemes for governmental management as well as in the disposition of their neighbors' surplus.

For a time a man with a dollar ahead fell into disrepute and the tramp became the ideal citizen.

There were those who actually began to think it wrong for a man to ask for repayment of his debt.

They argued that a creditor was guilty of contributory negligence for letting a man get in debt to him and thereby placing him under inconvenient obligation of repayment.

Subtle distinctions began to creep into our vocabulary. For illustration: Interest is what a man owes you when he borrows your money, but usury is what you owe another when you borrow his money.

THE EXODUS OF 1893.

Finally old battle-scarred Democracy, with whom we had been contending for so, these many years, holding national honor above every other consideration, strode down the political arena and took its stand side by side and shoulder to shoulder with Republicanism, with blade drawn for national integrity.

No party ever took higher political ground than did the followers of Palmer and Buckner in the last national campaign, when without hope of office or political preferment they went to the ballot box and cast their votes for conscience sake.

This is the course of devolution from consistent Democratic policy down to inconsistent, illogical, kaleidoscopic, phantasmagoric, complex decadence, rational in sections in the foreground but inconsistent as a whole, with arabesque conceits, flitting phantasms, and goblin shapes in the background.

And all the time we were warned to tread gently around these inconsistencies because it was said a man who had them was sensitive about it and ought not to be disturbed because he was engaged in reflection.

The residuum of opposition after the exodus of 1893 have been in the habit of claiming some sort of political relationship with Thomas Jefferson, but if Thomas Jefferson could see them now, there is hardly a feature he would recognize.

Why, sir, it has been observed that the very statue of Thomas Jefferson standing out here by the corridor, worn by the feet of generations that have come and gone since his time, wears a pathetic, enduring, and resigned grin as these latter-day disciples pass by to the performance of their official functions in the National House of Representatives!

PERIOD OF DEPRESSION, 1893-1897.

The nation remembers the years from 1893 to 1897 as a man at breakfast remembers a nightmare.

Tramps then walked our highways like squalid specters of a happier time.

Miners swarmed upward out of their pits, to starve in the sunlight or be fed by charity.

Those were the days of empty dinner pails, men out of work, dead ashes, smokeless chimneys, wheels that stood still while the current swept by. Those were the days of soup houses and Coxeyism.

Those were the days when bankruptcy sat upon the ledger of business failure.

Those were the days when Debs came and commanded silence along the rails and the wheels of industry stood still, while naked rebellion with the torch and ax stalked abroad, paralyzed industry, and defied the law.

RETURN OF PROSPERITY.

All that is past now, and yet nothing has happened—nothing but a Republican Administration.

Money is seeking investment at low interest,

Banks are burdened with deposits, and Farmers are paying off their mortgages.

In the two years from July 1, 1896, to July 1, 1898, we increased the money in use and circulation in this country from $1,506,434,968 to $1,843,435,749, an increase of over three hundred and thirty-seven millions, being an average increase of half a million dollars a day, or $20,000 an hour, during that time.

Two years ago gentlemen used to challenge the exhibition of gold, alleging that gold had disappeared from circulation; and it was so—gold had disappeared, hidden away in fear.

But it has reappeared, and in the two years from July 1, 1896, to July 1, 1898, we have increased the gold in use and circulation in this country by over $200,000,000.

So that we have now the largest amount of money in use and circulation, the largest amount of gold in circulation, the largest per capita circulation of money in the history of our Government.

And yet nothing has happened—nothing but a Republican Administration.

Sir, I desire to incorporate as part of my remarks some extracts from the introduction by Mr. Frederic Emory, Chief of the Bureau of Statistics, to the Review of the World's Commerce, under date of April 25, 1898:

The commercial relations of the United States are undergoing a marked and significant change.

The United States is no longer the "granary of the world," merely. While its exports of agricultural products have increased to a remarkable extent during the past year, the sales abroad of manufactured goods have continued to extend with a facility and promptitude of results which have excited the serious concern of countries that for generations had not only controlled their home markets, but had practically monopolized certain lines of trade in other lands.

When we consider that this result has been reached with comparative ease in spite of added impediments to United States exports in the form of discriminations of various kinds, and notwithstanding the fact that organized effort to reach foreign markets for our manufacturers is as yet in its infancy, the ability of the United States to compete successfully with the most advanced industrial nations in any part of the world, as well as with those nations in their home markets, can no longer be seriously questioned.

The secret of the steady advance of United States goods in popular appreciation wherever they are introduced is to be found in their superior excellence at little, if any, difference of cost to the consumer.

Until quite recently it was a common impression in foreign countries, as well as in the United States, that the higher wages paid in the United States would operate to the disadvantage of our exports in the competition for the sale of manufactured goods abroad.

Actual trial, however, seems to have proved that owing to the greater producing capacity of the average American operative with the aid of labor-saving machinery the real cost of United States goods in many lines of manufacture is lower than that of similar products in European countries and that the American exporter is thus enabled to meet his foreign rival on more nearly equal terms or even to undersell him.

In view of what may be termed an American invasion of the markets of the world, the attitude of the leading commercial nations toward each other and the relation which their industrial activities and trade interests bear to the United States become a matter of practical concern.

It may be said that the chief business of European diplomacy at the present day is to secure "new spheres of influence" and widen opportunities for trade, as well as suitable territory for occupation by the overflow of population for the more densely inhabited countries.

China has for some years been one of the most promising fields for American enterprise.

Industry and capital and the entrance of that vast empire upon the path of Western development under conditions which would secure equality of opportunity to the United States would doubtless result in immense gains to our manufacturers in the demand sure to follow.

The solution of the problem of the future commercial conditions of the Chinese Empire has therefore an immediate and most important relation to the expansion of our export trade, especially that of the Pacific slope.

The "international isolation" of the United States, so far as industry and commerce are concerned, has in fact been made a thing of the past by the logic of the change in our economic requirements, and we can no longer afford to disregard international relations now that we ourselves have become a competitor in the world-wide struggle for trade.

Sir, municipal contracts abroad continue to fall into American hands.

The newspapers state that Glasgow and Hastings have lately awarded contracts for water pipes to American bidders against English rivals on their own ground.

American rails are going down in Liverpool streets.

American electric machinery has gone to Plymouth.

American bicycles are seen on every English road.

Foreign feet are shod with American shoes.

American steam engines are going to England, and American locomotives draw the freight of other nations over American rails laid on foreign soil.

We are buying less abroad and selling more than ever before.

We are conquering, winning, and annexing the markets of the world.

NATIONAL EVOLUTION.

But now that we are conquering, winning, and annexing the markets of the world, some gentlemen say we ought not to annex any more territory until we have introduced the millennium here, until there are no more mobs in North Carolina and South Carolina and Illinois, until manifestations of violence like those at Wilmington, Lake City, and Virden are no longer possible.

Sir, if we had waited until there were no poor people starving for fruit in the city of New York, while apples were rotting under the trees of Connecticut orchards; if we had waited until jails had no occupants and police magistrates no business in Philadelphia, the City of Brotherly Love; if we had waited till fools became wise, the drunken sober, the shiftless thrifty, and every man had enough and no man had too much, we would not have consented to the Louisiana purchase in 1803 or the acquisition of our splendid domain along the shores of the Pacific.

With a new century we enter upon a new era of national growth and development.

New territory has heretofore meant new opportunities for American thrift and American energy. Why not now?

National increase has heretofore meant individual opportunity. Why not now?

It is better that Americans should be winning new worlds than that our splendid civilization should fall a victim to class contention, urged on by unscrupulous demagogues, and the heart of energy be eaten out by anarchistic envy.

For purposes of classification, we may be said to be entering upon the fifth period of our political existence.

1. The formative stage and the organization of the centrifugal and centripetal political forces of our Government, which under different names have had control from time to time.

2. The period from 1820 to 1856, which witnessed the rise and fall of the Whig party and the detachment of the United States from the affairs of the Old World.

3. The period of civil war and reconstruction, from 1856 to 1876.

4. The period from 1876 to 1898, when the splendid industrial forces of our nation, left in a measure free to exert themselves, have swept our nation into the front rank of the producing and manufacturing nations of the world.

5. The period of humanity, of trade, and territorial expansion, beginning now, whose splendid history it remains for the men of this day and generation to enact.

History will not wait for the long phrases of little men. Historic events do not happen on human schedule time.

Who can control the currents of destiny?

What man or set of men is there who, by laying hold of any present condition can change the sweep of God's Providence? Sir—

I doubt not through the ages one eternal purpose runs,

And the thoughts of men are widened with the process of the suns.

The tremendous and tireless physical and mental energy of 75,000,000 of the most energetic people on earth is constantly tending to results—results which can only be dimly foreseen by those standing apart in the solitude of thought with the chart of the mighty past before them.

We have lately planted the Stars and Stripes 2,100 miles out in the Pacific by peaceable annexation of Hawaii, and thereby we have posted these islands like sentinels in the midst of the Pacific to guard our western coast.

THE WAR OF 1898.

But recent events have still further remodeled the map of the world.

Spain had for some time been keeping a disorderly house in the international neighborhood.

We had been obliged to patrol our Atlantic coast at some expense to ourselves to prevent the breach of international law by our own patriotic people in their sympathy for Cuba.

Finally the battle ship Maine sailed into the harbor of Havana, proudly flying the Stars and Stripes and bravely manned.

She was piloted to her anchorage of death by a Spanish Government pilot.

She was destroyed by a Spanish submarine mine.

To-day she lies a gaarled, twisted, shapeless mass in the mud and ooze at the bottom of Havana Harbor, never again to sail the seas, the thunder of her guns forever silenced, her gallant crew never again to walk her decks.

Other war ships have gone down since then at Manila and off Santiago—not by the hands of midnight assassins, but before the steady aim of American gunners; not in revenge—we are too great for vengeance—but for humanity.

Early in the morning of May 1, 1898, Commodore Dewey, steaming steadily up the harbor of Manila, quietly issued an order which has become historical: "When you are ready, you may fire, Gridley."

In the harbor of Manila

Lay the admiral's flotilla

Gently rocking at its anchors

In a sort of tropic swoon.

All those shapes of war and slaughter

Slept upon the peaceful water.

That was mixed with molten silver

From the overflowing moon.

As they lay there softly sleeping,

Up the harbor creeping, creeping,

Came our lean and trusty greyhounds

And the little Commodore.

You may say that he was plucky,

You may call him only lucky,

But torpedoes couldn't stop him,

Nor great guns along the shore.

That morning, as tropical night faded into tropical day, America had expanded 7,000 miles westward.

A few days later and the pride of Spain's navy, under Cervera, had been sunk into shot-shattered fragments along the Cuban coast.

The white regulars and the black regulars and the Rough Riders had marched up the hill that led to death and glory at San Juan, and America had expanded again—this time southward.

We had not then marked the metes and bounds of our expansion, but expansion had begun and was inevitable.

Mr. Day, of the Peace Commission, is reported to have said, in effect, that when Dewey failed to sail away from Manila it became impossible for us to give up the Philippines.

Sir, it is no longer a question whether we shall expand; we have expanded.

We went into this war for humanitarian reasons.

The Philippine problem has grown, as a corollary, out of the Cuban problem and remains for America to demonstrate. We can not bring back our flag, trailing in retreat, from duty in the Philippines.

It is within our power to give Spain's former colonies a firm and civilized government, and history will say it was our duty to do it.

EXPANSION—NATIONAL AND INDUSTRIAL.

The general power of annexation has been discussed, adjudicated, settled, and determined long ago.

We have acquired territory heretofore by purchase, by conquest, and by discovery.

We have acquired lands from the Indians time and again by conquest and by treaty, and "city lots are staked for sale above old Indian graves."

The Louisiana purchase in 1803;

The Florida cession in 1819;

The Mexican treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo in 1848; The purchase of Alaska in 1867; The annexation of Hawaii in 1898 are the landmarks of our tremendous territorial growth.

From thirteen colonies along the Atlantic seaboard, struggling through the night of Revolution up to constitutional liberty, we have grown to forty-five States, united now as never before, North, South, East, and West, under one written Constitution, symbolized by one flag known the world over as the Stars and Stripes—we have grown to forty-five States, plus Arizona, New Mexico, Oklahoma, Indian Territory, Alaska, Hawaii, Porto Rico, and the Philippines.

The Mississippi, once, as Goldwin Smith says, "a mental horizon, afterwards a boundary line," is now a central waterway.

From a timber-cutting, grain-growing, cotton-growing, tobacco-growing new country we have become not only the "granary of the world," but a great manufacturing nation.

The necessities of widening business have inspired the dreams of inventors.

One thing accomplished has suggested another thing to be done or overcome.

Thus man has learned to apply his powers of mind and body and brought to use the powers of wind, water, and electricity; and by the mighty force obtained has spanned continents with steel, civilized deserts off the face of the map, strung telegraph and telephone wires that sing in the wind of every latitude, and joined continents by cable.

These are the magnificent verities of the present, and the future no prophet can foretell.

THE TRADE OF THE FUTURE.

Sir, it is no vainglorious utterance to say that in 1950 when America shall have grown to a population of 200,000,000, American purposes and American policy will be to all mankind of controlling importance.

We have passed the period of parochial politics.

The United States is no longer a self-contained country, secure in its own home market.

National bookkeeping has no regard for home-keeping theorists. Our home market, magnificent as it has grown to be under the Republican policy of protection, magnificent as it will continue to be, far surpassing any other market in the world, can not absorb the output and products of the tremendous energy of our increasing population.

In 1899 our imports were $745,000,000 and our exports were $742,000,000, a total of $1,487,000,000; in 1898 our imports were $616,000,000 and our exports were $1,231,000,000, a total of $1,847,000,000. We can not stand still; we must move on.

We are the greatest manufacturing and producing nation on earth and we want more customers.

Where shall we find them?

First, there are the markets of the civilized nations of Europe, into which American products are pushing their way with tremendous energy, notwithstanding the fact that we pay better wages than our competitors.

But in European markets the American manufacturer must always meet his European competitor at a disadvantage, because the European manufacturer is nearer the consumer.

More than a generation ago William H. Seward prophesied that "the Pacific Ocean, its shores, its islands, and the vast region beyond will become the chief theater of events in the world's great hereafter."

It is estimated that more than half the population of the world lives in the so-called Pacific area.

The most thickly settled portion of the world's surface is in eastern and southeastern Asia, and the wants of its people, per head and per body, now are comparatively few and primitive.

The time is fast approaching, however, when the touch of twentieth-century civilization will galvanize into life a demand among those people for the things the world outside makes and produces.

Then, when the Pacific is the chief highway of the world's commerce, Hawaii and Guam and Luzon, strung together by Pacific cable, will be stepping stones for the advance of American ideas and American commerce westward across the Pacific.

Then, when the Nicaragua Canal shall have been dug; then, when our merchant marine shall have advanced in right proportion to our general growth; then, if we shall retain the Philippines or retain controrequisite to a suzerain power, these islands will constitute a bargain counter where American enterprise can exhibit its wares and a vantage ground from which American enterprise can study oriental commercial conditions.

Gentlemen say in effect, "Why, people who live out of doors are not interested in house decorations, and people who wear gunny sacks care nothing for clothes."

But is it to be assumed that things will always be the same? Is it to be assumed that a "cycle of Cathay" will always be a "cycle of Cathay?"

Sir, it is the consensus of opinion of the civilized world that we are approaching a mighty change in the Orient, in which the stratified conditions of centuries will be broken up and a new order prevail.

Ah, but gentlemen say that when that time comes, foreign enterprise will enter and take possession, build factories, employ local cheap labor, and undersell all competitors.

Well, if that happens, we want to be there to get our share of the carrying trade; but before all that happens it is more than likely that the universal drummer will be there offering his wares for sale; it is not impossible, too, that men may not always want to work for nothing a day, and, more than all that, there will always be much wanted there that only the world outside can grow and produce, and American wheat and American cotton will find their way.

THE PHILIPPINE AND RELATED PROBLEMS UNAVOIDABLY INCIDENT TO THE WAR.

Many people would have been satisfied with Luzon alone.

But, sir, what is a self-respecting nation to do?

We could not divide the group, take what we wanted, and leave the rest to anarchy, a prey to the nation whose war ships first pass that way.

We conquered Spain, and, incidentally, we conquered the Philippines.

The Philippines have come to us as an incident of the war with Spain, not by conquest of the Philippines in war waged for that purpose, and all the arguments of gentlemen driven to the necessity of creating an erroneous premise on which to found an erroneous conclusion can not alter this obvious fact of history.

Gentlemen talk of the "consent of the governed" to conquest and occupation.

When New York wants to become Greater New York, a vote is taken. When Chicago annexes a suburb, she asks "consent of the governed."

The "governed" in such case is a civilized, municipal entity. But it is said that not 5 per cent of the inhabitants of the Floridas were willing to see Florida pass from Spain to the United States in 1819, and in 1821 Andrew Jackson was sent there to hold the inhabitants in subjection, clothed with autocratic power.

We did not ask the consent of the Indians beyond the Mississippi nor the mixed population at the mouth of the Mississippi when we purchased Louisiana. We took the territory and the territory was ours.

Sir, it is difficult to believe that what Hawaii has sought so many years should be repulsive to the Filipinos.

It is difficult to believe that if we can give good government to Hawaii we can not give good government to the Filipinos.

It is difficult to believe that if it was constitutional to annex Hawaii and Alaska it is unconstitutional to annex the Philippines.

It is difficult to believe that a few more dialects or a little more race mixture can make what was constitutional for Hawaii unconstitutional for the Philippines.

In a joint resolution recently introduced in the Senate, commonly called the Vest resolution, it is declared that "All territory acquired by the Government, except such small amount as may be necessary for coaling stations, correction of boundaries, and similar governmental purposes, must be acquired and governed with the purpose of ultimately organizing such territory into States suitable for admission into the Union."

But Alaska was not a "small acquisition;"

Alaska was not necessary for a "coaling station;"

Alaska was not necessary for "the correction of boundaries," or for any "similar governmental purpose."

When does "ultimately" mean, and what is the maximum amount of territory the annexation of which would be constitutional?

Is it possible that Alaska was acquired and has been held all these years unconstitutionally?

OUR FUTURE POLICY.

All this applies to our right to take and the necessity of taking the Philippines, but does not apply to what policy shall be pursued after we have taken them.

Then the course to be pursued must rest with Congress under delegated authority from the people.

We solemnly declared when we went into the war with Spain that we did so not to gain Cuba, but to give to the people of Cuba a stable government.

Neither did we wage war to gain the Philippines.

Few thought of them till news from Dewey concentrated the attention of the world on that quarter of the globe.

The solution of the Philippine problem can not be evaded, but must finally rest with the people, who will act through their Representatives in Congress.

In the meantime we shall do our best to give to the people of the Philippines law and social order.

If we shall not do this, who then shall do it?

We shall protect them from rapacity, violence, and anarchy.

If we fail to do this, who then shall do it?

We shall make them secure in their lives, limbs, property, and civil rights.

We shall make them safe in the rights of conscience for which men have fought since Christ gave conscience to humanity.

If we shall not do this, who then shall do it?

Gradually they shall learn the meaning of human liberty under law.

The world moves on toward the "parliament of man, the federation of the world;" slowly, it seems to our finite intelligence, but in the sweep of God's providence, a thousand years are as a day.

Sir, I say, no more glorious opportunity was ever presented to any nation than the humane and splendid opportunity of liberating thousands of mankind from bondage and despotism, and planting a free flag above the altar of free government, free religion, free schools, and free press.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. BROMWELL having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate announced that the Senate had passed bill of the following title; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 5514. An act to amend an act entitled "An act to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Denison, Bonham and New Orleans Railway Company for the purpose of constructing a railway, and for other purposes," approved March 28, 1898, and to vest in the Denison, Bonham and Gulf Railway Company all the rights, privileges, and franchises therein granted to said first-named company.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the following titles:

H. R. 11867. An act to authorize the Georgia Pine Railway, of Georgia, to construct a bridge across the Flint River, a navigable stream in Decatur County, Ga.;

H. R. 11737. An act granting the right of way to the Pensacola and Northwestern Railroad Company over and through the United States naval and military reservations, near Pensacola, in the State of Florida;

H. R. 8816. An act for the relief of the heirs of Minnie Fredrich;

H. R. 4418. An act to remove the charge of desertion from the naval record of Horace G. Reed;

H. R. 2668. An act for the relief of William Henry Johnson;

H. R. 2258. An act granting a pension to Mary E. Taylor; and

H. R. 1417. An act for the relief of Thomas Mullen.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

H. R. 5740. An act to remove the charge of desertion against William Britton; and

H. R. 8730. An act to authorize a resurvey of certain lands in Cheyenne County, in the State of Nebraska, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 5076) authorizing the Sioux City and Omaha Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Omaha and Winnebago Reservation, in Thurston County, Nebr., and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate joint resolution (S. R. 48) granting permission for the erection of a monument in Washington, D. C., for the ornamentation of the national capital and in honor of Samuel Hahnemann.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

S. 5169. An act authorizing the legislative assembly of the Territory of New Mexico to create an additional indebtedness for the completion and furnishing of the Territorial capitol;

S. 5322. An act for the relief of M. B. Buford; and

S. 5543. An act for the erection of a public building at Elizabeth City, N. C.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. HULL. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS].

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to attempt to prolong anything that might be termed a quarrel with my distinguished colleague from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON]. I feel, however, that I should at least say a word or two. While he was speaking I recalled Article X, Chapter I, of the constitution of the revolutionary government of the Philippine Islands, a constitution written by his friend Aguinaldo, which reads as follows:

The president of the government—is the personification of the Philippine people, and in accordance with this idea it shall not be possible to hold him responsible while he fills the office.

Meaning Aguinaldo—

I deny that the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON] "is the personification of the people" of the district which he pretends to represent, but I do sanction the statement that "it is not possible to hold him responsible for anything he says" while he fills the office of Representative on this floor. [Laughter.]

Several days ago, when he and I became embroiled in a colloquy on the floor of this House, he stated, with great emphasis, in answer to some remarks that I made criticising his utterances and branding them as a base betrayal of a sacred trust, that he represented the sentiments of his constituents; that he spoke for them, and that he gave me the privilege of doing the same for the people whom I represent. It occurred to me that possibly I had made a mistake; that possibly I was in error when I charged that he did not represent the true feeling of the people who live in the Sixth Indiana Congressional district. So after that utterance I stopped to the telegraph office and sent a dispatch to the editor of every Republican county-seat newspaper in his Congressional district. That dispatch read as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 30, 1899.

Does Representative JOHNSON, in his attack on the President and in his attitude on the Philippine question, represent the sentiments of your community?

C. B. LANDIS.

Within twelve hours I received messages from every newspaper with which I communicated, except one, and I will read them to this House:

NEWCASTLE, IND., January 31, 1899.

No; decidedly not.

THE COURIER,
By M. O. WATERS.

RUSHVILLE, IND., January 30, 1899.

Mr. JOHNSON's speeches do not reflect the sentiment of this community. JNO. F. MOSES, Editor Republican.

BROOKVILLE, IND., January 30, 1899.

Emphatically no.

L. L. BURK, Editor American.

SHELBYVILLE, IND., January 30, 1899.

They do not.

J. J. WINGATE,
Editor of the Republican.

RICHMOND, IND., January 30, 1899.

The gentleman's home—

JOHNSON's speeches do not represent the sentiment of this community. D. SURFACE, Editor Palladium.

CONNERSVILLE, IND., January 30, 1899.

Notwithstanding Fayette was a strong JOHNSON county in his last race, the Republicans here are a unit in opposition to his utterances of the past few days. We endorse the patriotic course of the President and trust in the wisdom of the Administration and a Republican Congress to settle the Philippine question.

W. F. DOWNS, Editor Republican.

[Applause.]

LIBERTY, IND., January 31, 1899.

HENRY U. JOHNSON's speeches in Congress last week do not represent the sentiments of his constituents in the Sixth district. His attack upon President McKinley is universally condemned, and Republicans repudiate his aspersions with indignation.

C. W. STIVERS, Editor Herald.

As I said, Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to prolong any quarrel with my distinguished colleague. I feel, however, that it is no more than fair that the people of that Congressional district should be heard. These are their messages, these are their words. These words come from the men who, with their fathers, held up the hands of Oliver P. Morton and Abraham Lincoln when copperheads hissed thirty-five years ago. [Applause.] And I want to say to the country for Indiana that the treasonable utterances which the gentleman has made upon the floor of this House this day, when sent over the wires to the loyal people of our magnificent Commonwealth, will be repudiated, will be received with sneers, and any man who returns there backing them up will be crucified by the wrath of our people and spit upon with indignation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. If the gentleman will pardon me, before he sits down I should like to address to him a question. I came in after the gentleman had commenced his remarks. I understand the burden of his song to be that my views on the subject of the Philippine policy of the President are not popular in my district.

Mr. LANDIS. I did not say that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I certainly misunderstand the whole drift of the gentleman's remarks if it is not that I am not in line with the general sentiment in my district.

Mr. LANDIS. I did not say they were not popular; I simply said that the people of your district repudiated them. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Well, that is the same thing. Now, the gentleman, whose contribution to this debate in the way of argument has not been a very great one—

Mr. LANDIS. Possibly not.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana (continuing). Will probably be able to secure an opportunity before Congress adjourns to make an argument on this great public question which so profoundly concerns the people of his country and their posterity, and if he does so I hope he will not discuss the question whether my opposition to the Philippine policy of the Administration is popular or unpopular, but whether my position itself is right or wrong, a matter with which I am more profoundly concerned than I am with being able to keep in line with public sentiment.

Mr. LANDIS. I will say to the distinguished gentleman from my own State that if I do make an argument upon this proposition I would prefer to trust the sentiment and promptings of the people of Indiana than the promptings and utterances of the distinguished gentleman from Atlantic City. [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Oh, well, I have no doubt that the gentleman would borrow his ideas from some source, and it is only a question of choice whether he shall take them from me or some one else. Behold, Mr. Chairman, the diminutive representative of the great Republican party of the mighty Commonwealth of Indiana!

Mr. LANDIS. Behold, Mr. Chairman, him who, in the presence of this House, on the floor of the American Congress, admitted that he was a giant! [Laughter.]

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. SULZER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. RHEA].

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, do I understand that I am denied a hearing?

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule of the House the time is so divided that the Chair is compelled to recognize the gentleman from New York.

Mr. RHEA of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman from Indiana is exceedingly unfortunate in making reference to the expression which I made in the course of debate in this House when the question of civil service was pending. It naturally calls up recollection of the speech which he himself made on this occasion. One would have thought that the gentleman would hesitate to refer to that speech of his, a speech in which he absolutely turned his own batteries mercilessly upon himself, by arguing that the civil-service law was wrong in principle, and attempting to establish that fact by showing that it had been abused in its operation when administered by spoilsmen. The gentleman has only related one-half of what I said in connection with the reference I made to myself as a "giant" in the passage that occurred between us on that occasion. The gentleman had interrupted me over and over again in the argument that I was making.

Mr. LANDIS. Not as much as the gentleman had interrupted me in my remarks.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. His questions had no point to them whatever; but with charity toward him, instead of declining to answer them, I treated the gentleman with the greatest possible courtesy and answered a great many of them. Finally I declined to answer him further, and thereupon the gentleman exclaimed, "The gentleman dare not answer my question," and my response was not simply that I was a "giant." The gentleman has suppressed purposely and willfully the most material part of my reply that he might put me in a false attitude before the House. My entire reply was, "That sounds like the challenge of a pigmy to a giant, and I do not pay myself a very high compliment when I say it." It will thus appear that I spoke of myself with considerable disparagement, instead of being guilty of a piece of monumental egotism, although the gentleman has now sought to convict me of this piece of vanity by intentionally confining his quotation to a fragment of my remark.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. LANDIS. I will simply say the apology of the gentleman is accepted. [Laughter.]

[Mr. RHEA of Kentucky addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from New York will consume the remainder of the time if he desires to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from New York desire to occupy the remainder of his time?

Mr. HAY. Mr. Chairman—

Mr. JETT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York is absent from the Hall for a moment. I understand the remainder of the time is allotted to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr.

PIERCE]. If that is his understanding, I suppose there will be no objection to his consuming the time now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the next gentleman on the committee if the gentleman from New York is not in the Hall.

Mr. HAY. I will yield, then, to the gentleman from Tennessee the remainder of the time.

Mr. SULZER. That is the understanding, Mr. Chairman. I yield the remainder of the time, thirty minutes, to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PIERCE].

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that there is a member of this body who would state that when war was declared between the United States and Spain in the remotest degree any member for a single instant thought that this Government was then entering upon a question of territorial expansion.

But questions have been evolved from the war with Spain; two of them we are called to consider now—one, that the Government of the United States must depart from one of the traditional policies of the Government under which it has grown great and strong, opposition to imperialism; and the other, the establishment of an army of 100,000 men. Against each of these propositions I enter my most earnest protest, because I can see no possible good to come to the American people by the adoption of them. On the contrary, the greatest injury will undoubtedly result.

The policy of expansion, I think, is one that will bring inestimable calamity to the country. One that I believe if pursued and carried out—which seems to be the intention, whatever may be the equivocal position of the Republican Administration—is one that will result only in injury to our people.

Behind that policy appears a determination by the action of the President and his Cabinet to retain the Philippine Islands and to hold them at any cost. With that purpose in view the establishment of an immense army is entered upon, back of which the whole power of the Administration has been thrown.

What need have we for a large standing army—an army of 100,000 men? The Indian question is practically settled. There are only a few thousand of them left in the Western States and Territories, and they are widely separated, and who doubts that the States and Territories, with a few hundred Federal soldiers, can readily quell any trouble the people of those sections may have with the Indians. And the best military authorities we have tell us 20,000 men is ample to garrison our seacoast. Two thousand men, the same authorities tell us, are ample for Porto Rico. Cuba, in a few months at the farthest, should be free of American soldiers, except probably a few hundred to do garrison duty in some of the cities. Peace and good order reign in Cuba, and 20,000 men can at once be withdrawn from there, and upon this question I quote the statement of Mr. Porter, but recently the commissioner of Mr. McKinley to Cuba, who said:

The bulk of the American soldiers must be taken out of Cuba by April 1. * * * Delay in the work will be fatal. * * * There is too much disposition with our people in Cuba to discuss minor details. * * * Our soldiers fully realize the situation. They frankly say their chief occupation is to guard each other. * * * The policing of Cuba should be done by Cubans. Once this is well done, matters will take care of themselves in Cuba. At least, that is my opinion.

And now we come to the consideration of the permanent holding of the Philippine Islands, to do which General Whittier, in his testimony before the Paris Commission, said:

If we attempt the unwise thing of ignoring the natives, an army of 50,000 men will be none too small.—Senate Doc., No. 62, part 1, page 508.

Mr. Chairman, is it not proper in the representatives of the people to pause and consider the results that darkly spread out before us in the purpose of the President to hold the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands as conquered subjects, under military domination and control, as the President in his proclamation to the islanders said his purpose was, and which his party associates in the Senate have so forcibly emphasized when they voted down the Bacon resolution and passed the McEnery resolution, which denies to the Philippines the right to come into the Union as Territories or States?

A resolution that to me is nothing more nor less than a declaration of war against these people. What are we to gain by their subjugation? And when we have subjugated them, at what cost will it be to the taxpayers? In time of peace, here in our own country, Adjutant-General Corbin testified before the Military Committee of the House that each soldier cost $1,000, and that our soldiers abroad would cost $1,500 each. Millions of dollars to be spent and thousands of our citizens' lives to be sacrificed in the subjugation of an alien people 10,000 miles from our shores; and when we have subjugated them, what will be the fruits of our conquest? "What will the harvest be?"

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Mr. CANNON, of Illinois, said on this floor a few days ago, that on the 1st day of July next there would be a deficiency of not less than $159,000,000 in the revenues of the Government. Will the conquest and military possession of the Philippine Islands lessen the burden of taxation resting upon the taxpayers, the great farming and laboring classes of this country? No; for the Department of Agriculture, in a recent report on the imports and exports in the Philippine Islands, states that—

In fifteen years the imports averaged $17,039,044 and exports $20,526,961.

The revenues from the islands were in 1898 $17,474,020, and of this sum $5,600,000 was the cedula or per capita tax levied on every male and female above 18 years old.

Mr. Chairman, from among the farming and laboring classes came the soldiers who fought the Spanish war, and who are now fighting the Filipinos, and these two classes are the ones who in the main pay the taxes that make up the revenues of the Government. The heavy load of Federal taxation is felt in every humble home in this broad land of ours, and the present policy of Mr. McKinley and his party but adds to and makes heavier the burdens that now press down the common people of this land, while the "business interests," the corporations, trusts, and combines who have amassed their millions under the class legislation of the Republican party, are clamorous for the adoption of the imperial colonial policy of England, so that they may, through the numerous "colonial commissions" the President has appointed, exploit all the valuable franchises of the people of our "new possessions," without their consent, as these combines are the ones who put up the money to elect the President. I suppose he thinks the "laborer is worthy of his hire," and these things must be done in the "due course of trade."

A few days ago I clipped from the Washington Evening Star the following:

COLONIAL COMMISSION—WILL LEAVE FOR CUBA AND PORTO RICO ON MR. CURTIS'S ARRIVAL.

As soon as Mr. Henry G. Curtis, of Iowa, reaches Washington the colonial commission, advisory to the President and the Secretary of War, will leave for Cuba and Porto Rico and proceed to study and report upon the economic and other conditions existing there. The commission has now under consideration applications for franchises in Cuba and Porto Rico, aggregating contemplated investments of $75,000,000. These include propositions to construct steam and street railways, electric light and gas plants, and establish loan and trust companies.

We see that the "business interests" are abreast of the times, carrying "republican civilization" with the "advance of Mr. McKinley's colonial commission."

Mr. Chairman, how long will it take the farmers and laborers of this country to realize that in this scheme of colonial expansion they are but the hewers of wood and drawers of water, the pack horses of the "aristocracy?" The distinguished Scotch-English author, Dr. John Watson, "Ian Maclaren," who but a few days ago reached our shores, has given out the following interview:

IAN MACLAREN ON IMPERIALISM—SAYS ENTIRE POLITICAL SYSTEM MUST BE CHANGED TO PROPERLY GOVERN THE NEW POSSESSIONS.

[Special to the New York World.]

NEW HAVEN, February 19, 1899.

Dr. John Watson, Ian Maclaren, the English author, who arrived in this country Friday, delivered his first address here to-day, speaking twice at Yale. On both occasions he gave doctrinal talks.

Dr. Watson in an interview to-day strongly emphasized the dangers to the American Republic from maladministration in the new possessions of the United States. You must train up a new class in order to govern your new possessions, as we have done in England. And you must also maintain a large standing army. Your entire political system must be changed as a result of your conquests of the past few months. The government of your new possessions, and, indeed, of your entire country, must be placed in the hands of the best class of people—an American aristocracy, if you please.

Mr. Chairman, with the adoption of the imperial colonial policy of England by Mr. McKinley, and a large standing army, the American aristocracy, "if you please," can be well provided for by the President in giving their sons and grandsons commissions in the Army and military governorships, etc., in our colonial provinces. The securing of these places the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PROCTOR] said in the Senate recently, mainly depended on political pull and not on merit.

We can revert to the action of this House to see when the discussion was up on the Army bill here to show what the policy was. You gentlemen were appealed to—distinguished members on that side of the House—when the question was asked, "What is the policy of the Administration upon this question?" Will you declare that policy? We were answered invariably that the President was to be trusted solely in this matter, and that that side of the House did not propose to assert prerogatives that belonged to the President; that they had, and have, and that the country has full confidence in whatever policy the President may adopt, and that his decision would be the best for the ultimate good of the country.

And now here, within the shadow of the Fifty-sixth Congress, when but a few more days are left, the President tells us that he has no policy, but, playing the little game of "Anthony over," that Congress must settle this vexed question. When you gentlemen upon that side said that it must be left with the President, the President goes you one better and says that he leaves it with Congress.

Mr. GAINES. When he is the Commander in Chief of the Army, too.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Now, what are you going to do? has been more than once asked of that side of the House. In the Washington Post this morning appear two little reasons why we are not to have an extra session of Congress, and back of that is shown the policy, if not of the President, at least of the power that is back of him, of the men who put up the money to elect him President of the United States.

What is it? They do not want an extra session of Congress, the Post says, because it would bring up the financial question, and they do not want that discussed; it might disturb the "business interests;" and, secondly, because it will give the President nine long months to evolve something upon the question of expansion and settle it in his own way. That is what they tell us, that it will take him nine months to bring forth his policy and to determine what he believes in.

Why, gentlemen, we Democrats could settle the question much sooner than that. The Post, speaking as the Administration organ, says this is what the Administration wants. Well, what is he going to do with the Filipinos? Is he going to pursue the policy advocated by General Shafter, the Falstaffian hero of San Juan, when he told us that if they did not quietly submit he would kill them, make an end of them, if he had to kill two-thirds of them?

Mr. GAINES. Give them liberty or give them death!

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Is that to be the policy? I say, Mr. Chairman, that this position is one that will be an everlasting shame, in my humble opinion, upon this Administration. Why is it that these people are demanding their liberty? Were they led to believe that it was not the purpose of the United States to seize their country by force of arms?

In answer to the question of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], put to the gentleman from Kentucky as to whether or not any agent or official of the Government had led them to believe that such was the purpose of this Administration, I read from a dispatch to Secretary Day himself. I want to call the attention of the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] to the fact that on the 24th day of May, 1898, in Manila Bay, Mr. Oscar F. Williams, United States consul to Manila, telegraphed to the Secretary of State as follows:

To-day I executed a power of attorney whereby Aguinaldo releases to his attorneys in fact $400,000 now in bank in Hongkong, so that the money can pay for 3,000 stands of arms bought there and expected here to-morrow.

There was Mr. Williams, the recognized consul and agent of the Government, telegraphing to the Secretary of State that Aguinaldo had executed and he had drawn a power of attorney purchasing several thousand stands of arms which were to be there to-morrow. I take it for granted that those arms came, and I take it for granted that they were turned over to Aguinaldo and distributed amongst his soldiers.

Mr. GROSVENOR. Will it now interrupt the gentleman if I ask him a question?

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. No, sir.

Mr. GROSVENOR. At what time and under what authority had a consul of the United States, located in the city of a British possession, the right to make a treaty between his own Government and some other country?

Mr. ROBINSON of Indiana. It was a war measure to secure the success of our arms.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Mr. Williams was not in a British city, but was the American consul at Manila, and wrote and sent his dispatch from on board the Baltimore, a ship of Admiral Dewey's fleet. He notified the Secretary of State, Mr. Day, and Mr. Day entered no objection to his action as the agent of the American Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. Did not the President instantly telegraph that there should be but one authority in the island?

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. He did not, in that connection. He said it in reference to a proposition of Mr. Wildman, the American consul at Hongkong, China. When Mr. Wildman submitted a question from Agoncillo and from Aguinaldo at Hongkong that they had submitted to him (Wildman) as to whether the United States would furnish 20,000 arms and 200,000 rounds of ammunition, he telegraphed, "No;" that "the Government would not engage in anything of the kind;" but never at any time telegraphed—and you can not find it in that book, for I have read it just as closely as you have—never at any time telegraphed any repudiation of the action of Consul Wildman. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. GROSVENOR. This book which I hold in my hand is the treaty of Paris.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Well, this book which I have contains the messages and report of the President to the Senate.

Mr. GROSVENOR. There is nothing about it in that book.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Yes; that is it; and much more, showing that our generals at Manila recognized the Filipinos as our allies, and only changed their policy when the President determined upon his colonial scheme, which I will publish in my remarks.

Mr. GAINES. They ratified that act.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. On the 4th of July, 1898, Gen. Thomas M. Anderson, commanding the United States troops at Cavite, addressed a letter to Senor Don Emilio Aguinaldo, commanding the Philippine forces at the same place, in which he said (page 390):

GENERAL: I have the honor to inform you that the United States of America, whose land forces I have the honor to command in this vicinity, being at war with the Kingdom of Spain, has entire sympathy and most friendly sentiments for the native people of the Philippine Islands.

For these reasons I desire to have the most amicable relations with you and to have you and your people cooperate with us in the military operations against the Spanish forces.

To this Aguinaldo made an earnest and instant response, which was acknowledged by General Anderson in a note dated July 6, in which, after informing Aguinaldo that large reinforcements were expected from the United States, for whom more space would be required for camps and storehouses, he said (page 391):

For this I would like to have your excellency's advice and cooperation, as you are best acquainted with the resources of this country.

He added that they did not intend to remain inactive, but to move promptly "against our common enemy."

On the 19th of July General Anderson wrote to Aguinaldo (page 393) asking a pass for Major Bell, who had been sent for information by General Merritt, and permission to examine Aguinaldo's maps. On the 21st General Anderson asked for passes and assistance for Lieutenant Bryan and party, who were about to make "a reconnaissance of the surrounding country." On the 23d General Anderson said to Aguinaldo, referring to the latter's proclamation of dictatorship (page 394):

Your fine intellect must perceive that, happy as I am to see you fighting so bravely and successfully against a common enemy, I can not, without orders, recognize your civil authority.

As to the extent and effect of Aguinaldo's military operations against Manila, in conjunction with our forces, Major-General Greene reported as follows (pages 420, 421):

Between 2,000 and 3,000 Spanish native troops surrendered to it (Aguinaldo's army) during the months of June and July; it constantly annoyed and harassed the Spaniards in the trenches, keeping them up at night, and wearing them out with fatigue, and it invested Manila early in July so completely that all supplies were cut off and the inhabitants as well as the Spanish troops were forced to live on horse and buffalo meat, and the Chinese population on cats and dogs. It captured the waterworks of Manila and cut off the water supply, and, if it had been in the dry season, would have inflicted great suffering on the inhabitants for lack of water.

The results, it is true, were obtained against a dispirited army, containing a considerable number of native troops of doubtful loyalty. Yet from August, 1896, to April, 1897, they fought 25,000 of the best regular troops sent out from Spain, inflicting on them a loss of over 150 officers and 2,500 men killed and wounded, and they suffered still greater losses themselves.

General Whittier, who received the surrender of the city, made a statement to the peace commissioners at Paris which showed that we might have been compelled to make a hard fight and suffer great loss at Manila if the Spaniards had not been disheartened because they were hemmed in and their line of retreat cut off by the Filipinos. Referring to the Spaniards' fear of the Filipinos, General Whittier said (page 491):

I think the Captain-General was much frightened. He reported in great trepidation that the insurgents were coming into the city, and I said that I knew that that was impossible, because such precautions had been taken as rendered it so.

General Whittier said, in answer to a question put by Senator GRAY (page 492):

They are somewhat undersized, are fairly good in appearance, are brave, will stand any amount of hunger and hardship, and, well led, would be very good soldiers.

Speaking of their services in "driving the Spaniards from Cavite, twenty odd miles into the defenses of Manila," General Whittier said (page 499):

All the success was on the natives' side, and the Spaniards surrendered between 7,000 and 8,000 men well armed, plenty of ammunition, and in good physical condition. The excuse of the latter may be that their enemy was in small bands, but they never captured one of these, and the small bands drove them to their walls.

Recurring to the Spaniards' fear of the Filipinos and their investment of Manila, General Whittier said (page 499):

Jaudenes, the acting captain-general, in reply to Merritt and Dewey's notice to remove his noncombatants, acknowledged that the insurrectionists surrounded the city and that he could not remove women, children, etc., out. (His fear and solicitude about the natives entering the city when I received the surrender of the city were almost painful to witness.) This admission demonstrates as well the military ability shown by the Filipinos, whose characteristics I will now enumerate.

Aguinaldo went to Cavite, under permission of Admiral Dewey, in reply to a telegram sent by Spencer Pratt, esq., our consul-general at Singapore, who offered that chief money for his expenses. The offer was declined.

He would raise a new army among his countrymen to help us drive out the Spaniards, but he would not take our money. He came on one of our ships, at his own expense, with 13 staff officers. General Whittier says (page 499):

Soon from the bay and from all sides men gathered. The fact that Dewey permitted the armed men to move from the surrounding districts and for the rebels to take arms (not many, says the Admiral) in the arsenal was the only help we gave him, excepting, of course, the most important destruction of the Spanish navy. From that time the military operations and the conduct of the insurgents have been most creditable. Positions taken and the movements of troops show great ability on the part of some leader. I do not say it was necessarily Aguinaldo, but he gave the directions.

In answer to a question from Senator FRYE whether the Filipinos had been of material assistance to us, General Whittier said (page 501):

Very great. If the protocol had not been signed, I think the Spanish at home would have insisted upon their army doing something. They dismissed Augustin because he was not disposed to fight, and I think if they had not had this experience of having been driven back into the city and the water cut off, so even that Jaudenes said he could not remove his noncombatants, the government would have insisted on his making a fight, and he could have made a very good one, for his position was strong, if they had any fight in them at all. But every place had been taken from them by the Filipinos, who managed their advances and occupation of the country in an able manner.

This explains why we took Manila with so little loss and why our troops were surprised, on entering the city, at the surrender of well-equipped Spanish regiments with scarcely a show of resistance.

After stating what certain Spanish officers and their wives had told him of their kind treatment while prisoners in the hands of the Filipinos, General Whittier quoted from Aguinaldo's letter of August 1 to Mr. Williams, our late consul at Manila (page 501):

Say to the Government at Washington that the Filipino people abominate savagery; that in the midst of their past misfortunes they have learned to love liberty, order, justice, and civil life.

And then the General added (page 501):

I have never seen a drunken one, and this with the example of our soldiers, whom they imitate in everything else.

Mr. FRYE. I would like to ask just one question in that line. Suppose the United States, in the progress of that war, found the leader of the present Philippine rebellion an exile from his country in Hongkong and sent for him and brought him to the islands in an American ship, and then furnished him 4,000 or 5,000 stands of arms and allowed him to purchase as many more stands of arms in Hongkong and accepted his aid in conquering Luzon, what kind of a nation, in the eyes of the world, would we appear to be to surrender Aguinaldo and his insurgents to Spain to be dealt with as they pleased?

A. (Commander Bradford.) We become responsible for everything he has done. He is our ally, and we are bound to protect him.

And Mr. Day, with the full knowledge of what the consul of the United States was doing, never vetoed it, and I say here that the arms came, and that through American agency the arms and ammunition were turned over to those who are now termed the rebels by this Republican Administration in the Philippine Islands. And I desire to say that while I am no defender of Aguinaldo, yet here is what the American consul at Hongkong, Mr. Wildman, says about this $400,000. Aguinaldo had been bitterly assailed by the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] and the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. DOLLIVER], the first saying that his place was in the lower regions, and the other that he was a traitor that had sold his country for gold.

Mr. LENTZ. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. LENTZ. Is not that exactly what the Spaniards said about Aguinaldo?

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Yes. It seems to me that our friends on the other side are apt to catch the Spanish charges that heretofore they did not believe in.

Mr. CARMACK. Here is what Consul Wildman says—

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. I was going to give that. Consul Wildman states, and the records show it, that openly in the Spanish Cortes General Rivera, who was the Spanish Governor-General, stated that of the money that was to be paid only $400,000 of it, and that in Mexican dollars, was paid, when they had to pay over one million; that he did not propose to carry out what was stipulated at the time.

In 1897 Aguinaldo, Agoncillo, and other leaders of the Philippines agreed to leave the island, and that certain civil reforms were to be entered upon, but as Rivera says himself, he did not propose to carry them out, and he did not propose to pay any of the money; and this is what the consul at Hongkong says, and I will read what he says, as I do not wish to state it myself. Here is what Consul Wildman says:

CONSULATE OF THE UNITED STATES, Hongkong, July 19, 1898.

There has been a systematic attempt to blacken the name of Aguinaldo and his cabinet on account of the questionable terms of their surrender to Spanish forces a year ago this month. It has been said that they sold their country for gold; but this has been conclusively disproved, not only by their own statements but by the speech of the late Governor-General Rivera in the Spanish Senate June 11, 1898. He said that Aguinaldo undertook to submit if the Spanish Government would give a certain sum to the widows and orphans of the insurgents. He then admits that only a tenth part of this sum was ever given to Aguinaldo, and that the other promises made he did not find it expedient to keep.

I was in Hongkong September, 1897, when Aguinaldo and his leaders arrived under contract with the Spanish Government. They waited until the 1st of November for the payment of the promised money and the fulfillment of the promised reforms. Only $400,000, Mexican, was ever placed to their credit in the banks, and on the 3d of November, Mr. F. Agoncillo, late minister of foreign affairs in Aguinaldo's cabinet, called upon me and made a proposal, which I transmitted to the State Department in my dispatch No. 19, dated November 3, 1897.

In reply the State Department instructed me "to courteously decline to communicate with the Department further regarding the alleged mission." I obeyed these instructions to the letter until the breaking out of the war, when, after consultation with Admiral Dewey, I received a delegation from the insurgent junta, and they bound themselves to obey all laws of civilized warfare and to place themselves absolutely under the orders of Admiral Dewey if they were permitted to return to Manila. At this time their president, Aguinaldo, was in Singapore negotiating, through Consul-General Pratt, with Admiral Dewey for his return.

On April 27, in company with Consul O. F. Williams, we received another delegation composed of Señor Sandico, José María Basa, Tomás Mascardo, Lorenzo L. Zialcita, Andrés E. de Garchitorena, Manuel Malvar, Mariano Llanza, Salvatore Estrella. We agreed, on behalf of Dewey, to allow two of their number to accompany the fleet to Manila, consequently, on the same day, I took in the tug Fume, Alizandrino and Garchitorena, accompanied by Mr. Sandico, to the Olympia, in Mir's Bay. On May 2 Aguinaldo arrived in Hongkong and immediately called on me.

It was May 16 before I could obtain permission from Admiral Dewey to allow Aguinaldo to go by the United States ship McCulloch, and I put him aboard in the night so as to save any complications with the local government. Immediately on the arrival of Aguinaldo at Cavite he issued a proclamation, which I had outlined for him before he left, forbidding pillage, and making it a criminal offense to maltreat neutrals. He, of course, organized a government of which he was dictator, an absolutely necessary step if he hoped to maintain control over the natives, and from that date until the present time he has been uninterrupted successful in the field, and dignified and just as the head of his government.

In conclusion, I wish to put myself on record as stating that the insurgent government of the Philippine Islands can not be dealt with as though they were North American Indians, willing to be removed from one reservation to another at the whim of their masters. If the United States decides not to retain the Philippine Islands, its 10,000,000 people will demand independence, and the attempt of any foreign nation to obtain territory or coaling stations will be resisted with the same spirit with which they fought the Spaniards.

I have the honor, etc.,

ROUNSEVELLE WILDMAN,
Consul-General.

And that money Aguinaldo, as shown by Mr. Williams, consul of the United States, was turned over to buy arms. He executed a power of attorney and turned it over to him, that he might pay for the arms that had been purchased. I repeat here that the arms came under American control, and were turned over through American officials to Aguinaldo to arm the natives in their fight against the Spaniards to aid the Americans in the capture of Manila. [Applause.] We have this plain letter. It is not manufactured by me. We see here the same policy pursued by gentlemen on the other side of the House to carry out the policy of Mr. McKinley.

Before, in Cuba, the Spaniards had been defeated at Santiago those who heretofore had been patriots in the eyes of this Congress and in the opinion of this country, who are battling for civil liberty beneath the flag of the Cuban republic, as soon as the Army of the United States had taken possession of the island we find that at once certain press—the Administration press—and leading members upon the Republican side of this House begin to blacken the names of the leaders and the soldiery of Cuba.

Those people published that they took out and shot numbers of prisoners after they had been taken upon the field of battle and beheaded or killed them in some other way. That has proved to be false, as the charges against Aguinaldo have proved to be false. Now, then, what else? Did these Philippine natives believe that the United States intended to deal fairly and justly with them? Let us see. The President of the United States in the two messages to Congress, one in December, 1897, and the other upon the 11th day of April, 1898, said: "I speak not of forcible annexation, for that can not be thought of. That under our code of morality would be criminal aggression." Where does he stand now?

In December, 1897, "forcible annexation must not even be thought of." What else? "That by our code of morality would be criminal aggression."

My God, if forcible annexation is criminal aggression, in the name of Liberty what is forcible taking possession of a peaceable people's country by the strong hand of war, of the Army, and when they resist shoot them down like dogs. In God's name, what do you call that?

Mr. SIMS. "Benevolent assimilation."

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. The gentleman from Tennessee says the President calls it in the proclamation he issued "benevolent assimilation."

Mr. RHEA of Kentucky. The President calls it "beneficent assimilation."

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Yes; and he wants to let it flow out upon these people. I alluded to this for the purpose of showing to you the facts. These declarations and messages of the President were published in the Philippine Islands, published and distributed among the armed soldiers, or the "rebels of Spain," as they were called. They had a good right to believe that the Army of the United States had come to take from them the yoke of Spanish tyranny, and not simply to change masters from Spain to the strong military arm of the Government of the United States.

What else? We find that Mr. Williams says that the feeling of gratitude was so great on the 18th day of May that when he landed, the Filipinos, citizens and soldiery, flocked around him, and the British consul remarked what a great exhibition of affection the soldiery and citizens of Manila showed toward him. They caught him by the hand and followed him for a mile or two, holding his hands, and the British consul stood smilingly by. These are the people that the changed policy of Mr. McKinley has made necessary upon the part of this Government to send soldiery there in the name of the law to shoot and kill thousands of men who had learned to love and revere the name of an American.

Yet we are told that the Government gave them no aid, and that they gave no aid to the Americans. Why, the general in command made a requisition upon Aguinaldo, as these papers show, for horses and cattle to feed the American soldiery, and he brought them by the hundreds in order to feed the American soldiers. What else? Gentlemen on that side told us there was no rebellion in the Philippine Islands when Dewey fought the battle of Manila. That statement is untrue.

Here is Mr. Williams's telegram to the State Department, in which he says in March, 1898, 8,000 Filipino soldiers were camped within 5 miles of the city of Manila, five or six thousand of whom were well armed with rifles. These men, we are told now, that showed this devotion gave us no aid. General Whittier, in his testimony before the Paris commission, says that the Filipinos are a brave people; that they are tractable, and entirely sober and industrious. Yet these are the people that are not worthy of self-government. Admiral Dewey, a man whose name we all revere and love, says, in regard to this, in a telegram to the State Department:

These people, the Filipinos, are far superior in their intelligence and more capable of self-government than the natives of Cuba, and I am familiar with both races.

And yet we propose to give a free government to the island of Cuba, to the natives of Cuba; and George Dewey, a man soon to become an admiral, a title which he richly merits and deserves, says these natives of the Philippine Islands are superior to the natives of Cuba. Congress has said that the natives of Cuba should be free. What the President said to the Filipinos was given to them through their press.

The Filipinos rendered every assistance that they could to aid the United States. They drove the Spaniards into their walled city of Manila, held all the outer lines and fortifications, cut off the supplies, cut off the water and food, and rendered assistance to the American army which would have made it impossible for them without that assistance to have taken the Spanish army, for if it had not been for Aguinaldo's army the Spaniards could have retreated from the city of Manila and beyond the reach of Dewey's guns.

Mr. GAINES. And yet we gave Garcia a military burial here.

Mr. PIERCE of Tennessee. Yes; a military funeral, as my friend says, and he sleeps in his grave in his native land, and hallowed is the sod that pillows a patriot's head. The liberty for which he lived and the liberty for which he died will be given to the people of Cuba. The American people through their sovereign representatives have said so, and what their will is the man in the White House will have to respect. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SULZER. I hope the gentleman from Iowa will consume some of his time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa wishes to yield what time he has remaining to one member.

Mr. SULZER. How much time has the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. Fifty-eight minutes.

Mr. SULZER. How much time have we left?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-two minutes.

[Mr. SULZER addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, the time allowed me is not sufficient to enable me to discuss properly this question or any other in an exhaustive manner. I merely want to say, however, that we have heard here talks and talks and talks about Cuba and the Filipinos; that I deem it necessary to direct our minds for a moment to another phase of the question. Now, I want to direct the attention of the House and the country to the fact that while we are talking and talking and talking appropriations are piling up mountain high to be paid by the people of this country, and no sufficient means are provided with which to raise revenue to pay them; a somewhat alarming condition.

What are you going to do about that? Almost every appropriation bill that has been brought in here since this Congress commenced has been double or treble that of similar bills in preceding years. Still we go on piling up these appropriations, like Ossa upon Pelion, with no means to meet them and with a tremendous deficit already existing in the Treasury, growing larger and larger as the days roll by.

The committee who have brought in this bill undertake to summarize the items of expenditure, but in order to obscure the facts they have not even had the manhood to add up these figures to show what the amount of this bill will be. By a very simple process of addition the amount will be found to be in the neighborhood of $80,000,000. And then it must be recollected that members on this side of the House and members on that side have combined to get through here river and harbor appropriations—their little “steals,” as they call them—for their localities. In addition to this, we have that great steal in connection with appropriations for public buildings, for the passage of which there has been formed what has been called “the hog combine,” and both parties are responsible for these enormous expenditures.

Now, Mr. Chairman, where is this thing to stop? While gentlemen are talking so much about the freedom of Cuba and the freedom of the Filipinos, I want to call attention to the freedom of the taxpayers of this country, who have to pay every dollar that you are appropriating here. This piling up of indebtedness will necessarily lead to the issuing of bonds—the carrying out of a policy which will entail further indebtedness upon the people. It is in the interest of the people who pay these taxes that I would raise my voice for a moment.

The country must understand, Mr. Chairman, that this appropriation means the creation and establishment of a great standing army in this country. It means a permanent military establishment that defies all speculation as to its future growth and cost, and its possibilities of peril and complication in the orderly administration of our domestic or home policy. After the passage of the Army reorganization bill through this House, under the whip of the Committee on Rules, to meet, it was absurdly alleged, a great public emergency, the appropriation of $80,000,000 is the expected and logical result, and a great deal more in the end.

I protested, Mr. Chairman, against the passage of the reorganization bill, for the reason that it would involve not only the present excessive expenditure of the public money, but for the additional reason that nobody could tell where this expenditure might end. The amount expended in the Army appropriation bill is only a small beginning, Mr. Chairman, in my very humble judgment. I expect to see the amount doubled, if not quadrupled, in the next few years. I expect to see this country, under this wild un-American Republican policy of expansion and militarism, put on a war footing that will prove to be the long-dreaded and perilous first step in the direction of a strong and dangerous centralized government unless something is done to check this reckless spirit.

Once this form of governmental tyranny is fixed upon the neck of the people, it will be too late to sound the warning. The crime against personal freedom will have been committed. Every tradition and principle of our Republic will have been destroyed. The common inspiration of patriotism and loyalty to the American flag that has made our people the most homogeneous and the most progressive people on the face of the earth will have been lost. It will then be a question of physical prowess and military aggression. We will have seen the end of wars for “humanity and civilization.”

A condition will prevail, Mr. Chairman, pointing inevitably to complications and innovations that mean indisputably chaos in our domestic affairs. This apprehension compels me to raise my voice in protest against the direful consequences involved in this undemocratic legislation. I am not a pessimist, Mr. Chairman, in my reflections on this subject. No man glories more in the growth and riches and progress of our nation and its devoted, brave, patient people than I do. No man surpasses me in my admiration and adoration of its institutions. It is because I see the peril involved in this new and startling pronouncement of militarism that I so vehemently protest against this appropriation and others of like nature.

I am not a pessimist, sir, I repeat; on the contrary, I see in the near future a political millennium in the revival of Democratic ascendancy in every branch of the National Government. But for the hope, Mr. Chairman—and I cherish it with all my soul—that the next Commander in Chief of the American Army will be a Democrat whose name is now a household word in this country and whose principles stand for all that is worth preserving in our form of government and the administration of our home affairs, and stand for all that the Republican party is opposed to [applause]—I should despair of this Republic but for this comforting reflection. The clouds are lowering and threatening now, despite the glitter and tinsel of this bewildering military spirit of the Republican party. This country can grow and prosper and rank with the greatest and richest and most powerful nations of the earth without the trappings of war and the gewgaws of adolescent military statesmanship. “There were brave men before Agamemnon.”

Under the next Democratic Administration a bugle call will be worth a million of brave and resolute American patriots. No standing army will be necessary to enforce the decrees of that Administration or to command the unqualified respect of the world. This appropriation, Mr. Chairman, ought not to be made. This whole scheme of Army reorganization is radically and indefensibly wrong. It is a crime to further tax the people to maintain a large standing army in support of a brutal and un-American policy of foreign conquest. This is plain to every reasoning and thinking man.

But these, Mr. Chairman, are “glittering generalities” in the estimation of the advocates of this unholy propaganda. And so any suggestion that this and kindred legislation of this Congress must necessarily involve another five-hundred-million-dollar bond issue is treated by the Republican majority in this House as flip-pant curiosity. It has come to that pass that it takes herculean nerve and not a little gall for a member to stand in this great presence and talk about the burdens of the taxpayer and the poverty and oppression of the people. I have defied this sentiment more than once in the performance of my duty here, and I shall risk the sneers again of the people who assume to own the country, in calling their prayerful attention to the vast expenditures proposed by this Congress.

In detail the appropriations actually made or in sight to date are as follows:

Urgent deficiency appropriation bill, passed both Houses and became law January 5 last.....	$70,120,000
Pension appropriation bill, passed House and Senate and now in conference.....	145,230,830
Post-Office appropriation bill, passed the House and pending in Senate.....	105,471,638
District of Columbia appropriation bill, passed House and Senate and pending in conference.....	7,251,905
Diplomatic appropriation bill, passed Senate and House, pending in conference.....	1,710,533
Indian appropriation bill, pending in Senate.....	7,449,304
Legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, pending in Senate.....	23,400,977
Agricultural appropriation bill, pending in Senate.....	8,717,522
Urgent deficiency appropriation bill.....	31,000
Military Academy appropriation bill, pending in Senate.....	601,817
River and harbor appropriation bill, passed House, pending in Senate.....	30,330,187
Sundry civil appropriation bill, pending in House—regular appropriations.....	42,928,101
Payment to Spain for Philippines, in sundry civil bill.....	20,000,000
Army appropriation bill, completed to-day and to be reported to-morrow.....	79,334,372
Naval appropriation bill, completed and to be reported.....	45,000,000
Three new battle ships and nine cruisers, deferred payments not included in previous item.....	35,000,000
Fortification appropriation bill, estimated, not reported.....	12,500,000
Deficiencies, not reported and no estimate—probably.....	35,000,000
Public building appropriations, passed in House Committee of Whole.....	12,000,000
Total.....	677,150,218

But this is not all. In the name of the suffering people, would to God it were! The end is not yet. The awful, startling total still climbs. What do we see in plain view?

Nicaragua Canal bill carries specific appropriation.....	$115,000,000
Cuban claims, to be paid under treaty.....	25,000,000
Hanna-Payne subsidy bill, estimated obligation in twenty-year period of bill.....	67,000,000
Pacific cable to Philippines, in President's message; if built by Government, estimated.....	25,000,000
Naval personnel bill.....	2,500,000

Total..... 224,500,000

In nearly every instance there is an increase over former expenditures under the regular appropriation bills.

The deficiency appropriation bill carries $64,440,539 for the Army and $5,598,853 for the Navy. The pension appropriation bill is an increase of $4,000,000 over last year. The Post-Office appropriation bill carries $38,000,000 for railway carriage of mails; $2,154,000 for subsidies to ships carrying mail. The increase for railway carriage is about $5,000,000. In the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill there is an increase this year of about $1,325,000. The Military Academy increase over last year is $143,000. The Agricultural Department increase is about $100,000.

Since the preparation of these estimates, several days ago, there have been still greater increases, and the sum total will continue to grow until the Speaker's gavel declares the final adjournment of a Congress whose record means the end of Republican ascendancy in this country for many years to come. In this distribution, Mr. Chairman, of this colossal expenditure of their money where do the plain people of the country come in? For every thousand dollars expended directly in the interest of agriculture one million is given away in subsidy to corporations.

In the statement just submitted the railroads get nearly forty million dollars every year for carrying the United States mails, against an increase expenditure of $100,000 in the Agricultural appropriation bill. It has been demonstrated that the mail subsidy is highway robbery, but that makes no difference. This is a great, rich, and prosperous nation, and we can not afford to dispute about such trifles! When, Mr. Chairman, I ask in all earnestness and sincerity, is this pillage and waste to end?

Until the election of a Democratic President, in 1900, says a friend on my right. Yes, thank God, the days of this “embalmed-beef” era are drawing to an end. We shall inherit the two-billion-dollar Congress as a Republican legacy. [Applause.]

Generations of taxpayers yet unborn will suffer from this Republican profligacy, but it will be light by comparison to the fate of the present generation. Is it the desperation of politics that drives the Republican party to this madness? Is it the ghost of broken pledges that drives the Administration pell mell across the ocean 10,000 miles from our shores to convert 10,000,000 of savages to the Republican idea of political reform and party morality?

What will even the benighted Philippine think of the preeminent morality of the Republican educators when he reads the last Republican platform and observes how flagrantly and shamelessly it has been repudiated by the Republican Administration? The Republican party in the last campaign was solemnly pledged to the establishment of bimetalism. Its victory was won on that issue. Millions of voters were deceived by its promises. They are now struggling under the bitter and crushing thralldom of a single gold standard, and its present evasive, cowardly, unscrupulous pretense is perpetuating its bond-issue Wall-street financial policy on the people.

But we are to forget all about this in the next campaign. We are to think only of Santiago, Manila, embalmed beef, conquest, martial greatness, expansion, civilization! What matters it that the people cry out against trusts—the rapacious domination of defiant, lawless private combinations?

What matters it that the people at home, long-suffering and patient, demand the imposition of an income tax which will compel the bondholder and the moneycrat to support the Government according to his pillage?

What matters it that the people at home demand the election of United States Senators by the people, to the end that boss rule and corporation influence may be destroyed in that body?

What matters it that the great body of the plain, productive American people demand the full restoration of silver in our national currency?

What matters it that our boasted prosperity is the result of "famine abroad and war at home?"

It is the policy of the Republican party to obscure these important and commanding domestic questions in the next Presidential campaign. But they will not be obscured or overshadowed, for they will be brought forward again in 1900, and the second great battle will be fought to the finish upon these very issues and questions. [Applause.]

Mr. SULZER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to that brilliant orator and statesman, that friend of humanity, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON], the balance of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. SIMPSON. Please forgive him; he knows not what he talks of. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas is recognized for ten minutes.

Mr. LENTZ. I would like to ask the gentleman from Kansas, before he commences to explain, why it makes Aguinaldo a criminal to declare, in the language of Patrick Henry, "Give me liberty, or give me death?"

Mr. SIMPSON. Well, I will try to reach that in the course of my remarks.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in the brief time allotted to me I want to say a few words in the same line as the argument of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TALBERT] who has just taken his seat.

I am informed by the chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs that the appropriations to support the Army during the two years that this Congress will have been in session will amount in the aggregate—the total appropriation, including this bill—to about $400,000,000.

Mr. HULL. No; if the gentleman will allow me, I corrected the statement, and said it would be about $350,000,000.

Mr. SIMPSON. I mean in round numbers, including the present bill.

Mr. HULL. No—I beg the gentleman's pardon—the amount is not so great as that.

Mr. SIMPSON. But the gentleman does not understand me. I am including the present bill.

Mr. HULL. Oh, that is all right.

Mr. SIMPSON. The appropriations, I say, then, including the present bill, in the present session of Congress for the Army alone, are somewhere in the neighborhood of or perhaps in excess of $400,000,000. The appropriations for the Navy amount to $130,000,000. So that we have for the Army and the Navy appropriations amounting to $530,000,000 for the present Congress.

Now, that involves, of course, or will involve before the present fiscal year has expired, a large deficiency and new appropriations to meet it. We have expended $93,000,000 more than the income of the Government, including even the bond issue. It is manifest, therefore, that extraordinary taxes must be levied. If, then, extraordinary taxes must be levied on the people of the country to meet these extraordinary expenditures, on whose shoulders will that tax fall? Under our present mode of raising revenue that tax will fall largely upon the great army of the laboring classes of the country. It will fall largely upon the agricultural community. This nation being largely agricultural, our present system of increasing revenue and our present system of taxation falls with crushing weight on the shoulders of the great army of the agricultural people. They are the sufferers from the system. Now, the question is, where will you stop?

The Republican party, particularly in this Congress, has shown beyond question that they are powerless to stop these extraordinary expenditures. True, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee the other day did attempt to do something of that kind and got in front of the train, but, unfortunately, got run over [laughter], and he has subsided. We have not heard a word from him since then in an effort to reduce these extraordinary expenditures. In fact, on yesterday we witnessed the extraordinary spectacle of the chairman of the committee voting to increase the price paid by the Government for its armor plate! And so it goes on.

We find these extraordinary expenditures to carry on the Government, to equip the Army, and to equip the Navy, to maintain our troops at home and abroad. What have we got in return for it? What is the net result of the expenditure? The glorious achievements of our Army and Navy, carrying on a war that was said to be in the interest of humanity, that challenged the admiration of the whole world, witnessing as it did a nation for the first time almost in human history reaching out the strong arm of its power—its Army and Navy—to help to relieve the oppressed people of Cuba, are facts before the world.

We fought in Cuba and liberated them. So we did in Manila, side by side with the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands. We fought to drive the Spanish power from those islands, in the interest of humanity, but after all the expenditure of money and the glorious achievements of our Army and Navy, we have turned it into what? We have taken and are taking to-day the place of Spain. We have become the oppressors in the place of Spain. We are taking up the same policy that we compelled her to let go, and we are to-day witnessing the spectacle of the volunteers who enlisted to fight in the interest of humanity being used to fight against those people who fought side by side with us to attain that glorious privilege of which we have boasted for more than a hundred years—the right to govern ourselves.

Where is the lesson this great Republic has taught to the world and held up as a beacon light to all the oppressed of every land? Ah, that lesson has been forgotten, and now, instead of following out our glorious policy, we have become engaged in trying to destroy those people who are fighting for that God-given right to govern themselves. We have turned it into a disgrace and a shame that will darken the pages of the history of this great Republic. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Who is to blame? Gentlemen, they need not hide behind the sophistry that we could not help it. It was a chain of events. We are now in possession of the islands. It is a part of the treaty that we concluded with Spain. Are you going to turn the islands back to Spain? Every man here knows that Spain was impotent, that her power had been destroyed in the Philippine Islands. She had been driven out, and it was only for us to sail away and leave those people to enjoy the fruits of their toil and victory.

One word from the President of the United States would have been all sufficient, saying to the world what his policy was. If we did not intend to play the rôle of a conqueror and oppressor, it would have been enough for him to have said so; that we, in good time, would leave the islands; that our only motive in tarrying there was to help them to put the government that they had inaugurated upon its feet. Oh, no. And gradually, secretly, working underneath the surface step by step, we have come to the point of breaking with the Filipinos—purposely, I believe—and we have news in the dispatches to-day that our soldiers there are burning the habitations of the people, shooting women and children whose only offense is to follow our example in the early struggles of this country, to get the same right to govern themselves as we fought for.

Now, that is almost the sum total of what we have gotten for this enormous expenditure of money in the equipment of a great Navy and a great Army. Not quite the whole result, of course, because we have Alger and his history; we have Eagan and his court-martial and his elevation to a higher position. [Laughter.] We have the embalmed-beef scandal, and all that chain of evils that have always followed in the wake of every war. It is not war that is so bad, but it is the train of evils that follow in the wake of war that ought to make us hesitate before we appropriate such large sums of the people's money to build up a great Army and Navy when it has been proven beyond question to be the purpose of this Administration to carry on a war of conquest in the far-off Orient.

Who knows what the final result may be? To-day the telegraphic dispatches inform us that Admiral Dewey has telegraphed for the Oregon. The papers say that indicates that we are about to get into foreign complications. Why, certainly, that is what it means—a stream of foreign complications to which nobody can see the end. And this Congress will go down with a record, not as a billion-dollar Congress, but close to a two-billion-dollar Congress; and if we carry on this policy others that follow will come close in our wake.

I thank the gentleman from New York for his courtesy in yielding time to me. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I want to make a brief statement in regard to the bill that was read from the Clerk's desk. The chairman of the Military Committee of the Senate insists that the bill as agreed upon in the Senate will show changes from the one read for the information of the House, and I wish to state further that the Senate regards the reading of the bill at the desk here to-day as rather a discourtesy to that body. I am awfully sorry if this House has been guilty of any discourtesy to the Senate, but I want to say that when the bill is printed and read it will be found on substantially the same lines as the one given to me. It was given to me with the understanding, for my part, that it was for the information of the House, and I believed that the members of the House were entitled to know about something that they may in the near future pass upon. [Applause.]

I did not want it for my own information. So far as I am concerned, my mind is very clear as to what I believe should be done by this Congress in regard to Army reorganization. So far as I am personally concerned, I am opposed to any law that makes a temporary organization of the army of the United States. We should now pass a permanent organization and place the country in possession of ample force to meet the requirements of the present situation. To reenact the blunders of the act of last spring is, to my mind, infinitely worse than the threatened extra session.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I yield to—

Mr. BAILEY. May I ask the gentleman from Iowa if we are to understand here that he will oppose that bill?

Mr. HULL. I will cross that bridge, Mr. Chairman, when we come to it.

Mr. BAILEY. That is the usual Republican answer now.

Mr. HULL. That is my answer at least. I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH]. How much time have I, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has fifty-five minutes.

Mr. HULL. I yield that to the gentleman from Illinois, or so much as he may wish to occupy.

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Chairman, I shall not occupy the time of the House for the period of fifty-five minutes. I promise you that. I gather from the discussion here to-day that there is a general acquiescence—I hope I am not mistaken—that this appropriation bill, carrying in the neighborhood of $80,000,000 for the Army for the next fiscal year, will receive the support of this House, the members on both sides.

An appropriation bill carrying this amount, Mr. Chairman, is as near to what the probable expenditures will be in the next fiscal year as the Committee on Military Affairs can arrive. We can not be informed as to the number of men or the number of officers that would constitute the Army in the next fiscal year, and we assume—I think it is a wise assumption—that the Army may not reach in the aggregate the number proposed, 90,000 men, but in the hope and the wish that it may not exceed fifty or sixty thousand men. So the bill carries what the committee believes to be, from the information we could secure, a sufficient amount to pay the expenses of the Army for the next fiscal year, if based on in the neighborhood of 90,000 men.

So far as the details in the bill are concerned, I will not occupy the attention of this House in discussing, but will reserve that for the time when the bill shall be considered under the five-minute rule. But I will follow the example set by so many gentlemen upon both sides of the House, and discuss a question that is somewhat involved—I may say, properly, largely involved—in this proposed expenditure of $80,000,000 of the people's money.

I listened with no little regret and yet with a great deal of interest to the speech of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. JOHNSON], who occupied the floor to-day. I listened to it with regret, and I am sorry he is not now in his seat. I listened to it with regret, because I do not think he did himself or his constituents justice in the severe philippic that he delivered against the President of the United States. I dismiss that part of his remarks with the simple statement that the President of the United States can stand the philippic of the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. He can not help himself; he has got to stand it.

Mr. MARSH. The President of the United States stands to-day the first and highest in the hearts of the American people, and no philippic of the gentleman from Indiana can affect him.

Mr. SULZER. How about the poor Filipinos?

Mr. MARSH. And no unjust interruptions of my remarks by the gentleman from Indiana can detract from the statement I have made.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. The gentleman addressed me. Certainly he would not deny me the right to reply.

Mr. MARSH. I am glad the gentleman is here. He knows he has no right to me in my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana. I shall not interrupt the gentleman against his consent.

Mr. MARSH. Now, to another statement he made I want to call the attention of this House, because it was misleading to the country, it was misleading to the House, because it was absolutely untrue. He stated that great franchises were being granted in the Philippine Islands and in those other islands we have acquired, and that the great financial men of this country were at the back of this movement to retain those possessions we have acquired by the sword through the efforts of our Army.

I want to say, Mr. Chairman, not one solitary franchise in the shape of a charter has been granted to anybody in the Philippine Islands, Porto Rico, or Cuba by this Government—not one franchise; not even a street-car franchise or a railroad franchise or any other kind of franchise has been granted by this Government to anybody to be exercised in the islands we have acquired.

On the contrary, Mr. Chairman—and the gentleman from Indiana must have known the fact—must have known it—on the contrary, Mr. Chairman, the President of the United States has by his authority annulled every one of those charters and franchises that were granted by Spanish authority during the last weeks or months of Spanish rule in those islands. Sufficient, Mr. Chairman, for the gentleman's speech. I only hope that when the gentleman from Indiana publishes his speech for circulation, if he ever does publish it for circulation, that he will incorporate into it that which he said he desired to incorporate into it—the President's address made in Boston a few days ago. It will make his speech better reading, and it will insure a vast number more persons to read it if the President's speech is incorporated therein.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I was delighted with portions of the remarks made by the distinguished gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SETTLE]. I was delighted with the opening proposition that the gentleman laid down when he said that a year ago he could not have been induced to believe that he would have voted or could have been brought to vote for the payment of $20,000,000 to Spain provided for in the treaty. And yet he says that in the march of events he not only voted for it willingly, but gladly.

He says that in the last year many of the formed conclusions and theories that he had entertained during his lifetime had been buried in the sea and buried forever in the presence of the march of events and the logic of the situation. I congratulate that gentleman upon the progressive spirit of which he is made up, and I want to say to our friends upon the other side of this House that one year from now you gentlemen will be camping on the ground that the Republican party occupies to-day. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. SULZER. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. MARSH. It has been a part of the history of the old Democratic party for forty years past that it ranged itself from one to four years behind the logic of events and the conditions surrounding them.

Mr. DOCKERY. Will my friend allow me a suggestion? We are making earnest efforts to develop the Republican camping ground, without effect. We can not find it. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MARSH. If the gentleman from Missouri will vote for the measures growing out of this war, that are from time to time proposed in this House on the Republican side, and that will be from time to time proposed from the same source, and from the same side in the next House, he will find out gradually—I know it will be gradual [laughter]—but he will surely find out what their position is and what their position will be.

It takes my friend from Missouri some time, but he will have that time to find out, because when the Fifty-sixth Congress meets on the first Monday of December next the people of the country will be informed of the real condition of things in these islands, and when that information shall have reached the people, as it has reached a good many individuals, there will be but one voice in this whole land, East and West and North and South, and that voice will be in favor of expansion and retention of every foot of territory over which the flag of our country floats.

A MEMBER. That is right; make him say it.

Mr. MARSH. Make him say it. I have said it a half a dozen times on this floor.

Mr. GAINES. Did the President of the United States say so in his speech?

Mr. MARSH. The gentleman talks about making me say it; he does not know me. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not desire to embarrass my friend—

Mr. MARSH. You will not embarrass me; the embarrassing position is that occupied by my friend from Missouri. He will be more embarrassed on the subject when he makes the campaign in 1900 for governor of Missouri than he is now—

Mr. DOCKERY. I did not desire to embarrass my good friend by queries in the absence of an intimation from the Administration.

Mr. MARSH. When I allude to the campaign in Missouri in 1900 I want to say, loud enough for all the people of Missouri to hear, that if God Almighty, in his inscrutable wisdom, should permit another Democrat to be elected governor of my neighboring State of Missouri, I hope it will be the gentleman from that State [Mr. DOCKERY]. [Applause.]

Mr. DOCKERY. I thank the gentleman for the compliment and his expressions of good will.

Mr. OTJEN. That will kill him.

Mr. MARSH. It will not kill him in northeast Missouri. Now, further along in his speech the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SETTLE] said he had assented to the war; he had assented to the large increase in the Army to carry on the war. He was opposed four or five weeks ago to increasing the Army to 100,000 men, but he had got up to the point where he was ready and willing to vote the necessary money to pay that Army, although that Army had not yet been provided for by law.

I congratulate him on the progressive spirit that evidently has possession of the gentleman. I wish it had possession of more men on that side of the House. He went on to say that he was opposed, however, to the acquisition of the Philippine Islands by force or otherwise; but he largely put it on the ground that the Filipinos were our allies, and he laid down certain principles of law that govern real-estate transactions [laughter], principles of law that no lawyer can deny, but that every lawyer pretty nearly would deny had any application to the present condition of affairs.

He stated that Aguinaldo and his forces—the Filipino troops—were our allies on that occasion. But the gentleman is absolutely mistaken; and I propose to show that fact. Aguinaldo and the Filipinos never were recognized as allies of our troops; they were never recognized by the Government, and never recognized by any official of the Government, or any general officer of the Government at the time the war was proceeding; they have not been recognized heretofore and are not so recognized now. And I repeat that they were never recognized either directly or indirectly.

It is true that if a Filipino was friendly to us he was recognized in that capacity only; just as we did a friendly Indian in our wars with the various Indian tribes. There was nothing more than that in the recognition.

Mr. GAINES. But the Indians were governed by their own consent.

Mr. MARSH (continuing). And again, the same gentleman from Kentucky, as I understood his statement, said that Aguinaldo's forces in the fall of Manila fought side by side with the Federal troops. That is another mistake on his part. The gentleman is entirely inaccurate in his statement. He has misinformation on the subject. On the contrary, Aguinaldo's forces were not allowed to fight, or even align themselves either on the right, the left, or the front of our army. We kept the Filipino forces entirely in the background, and they were not allowed to participate in the battle in any manner.

They were not permitted to take part in the battle or to participate with the troops in the victory. These are facts and matters of record and can not be disputed. And it may be remembered by some gentlemen on the floor of the House that during the progress of the battle a brigade of United States troops was deployed to keep the Filipino forces from entering into the fight or joining our troops on the firing line.

Mr. SIMPSON. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. MARSH. Certainly.

Mr. SIMPSON. I would like to ask the gentleman if the Filipinos did not, as a matter of fact, while we were engaged in the war with Spain, capture nearly one-half of the Spanish army in the Philippine Islands while we were fighting them? Did they not, amongst the different islands of this archipelago, capture over one-half of the Spanish forces engaged in them and hold them as prisoners of war?

Mr. MARSH. I do not care, Mr. Chairman, whether that is true or whether it is not true. It does not bear upon this question. It does not make Aguinaldo and his forces allies of the United States, by the acknowledgment of which, if it were true, under international law we would be placed under some sort of obligation to them. It is well known, of course, as a matter of current history, that the Filipinos did capture—I do not know how many hundreds or thousands of Spanish troops. But what has that to do with the contention of the gentleman from Kentucky that they were our allies in that contest, and that we shall consider them as our allies and must treat them as such in our dealings with the Philippine Islands? The gentleman's argument would make us embark upon a sea of uncertainty and perplexity.

Mr. LENTZ. Then will the gentleman explain why we should insist upon the delivery of the Spanish prisoners, now in the hands of the Filipinos, to the Spanish Government?

Mr. MARSH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read from Senate Document No. 163 one or two extracts which bear directly upon this point, and to show the position we occupied toward the Philippine forces. I premise by saying that our relations to the Filipinos was the same as to the friendly Indians who joined us in a war against some hostile tribe—neither more nor less.

General Greene says:

The only general officer who saw him—

That is, Aguinaldo—

or had any direct communication with him was General Anderson.

Perhaps there are gentlemen who would claim that Aguinaldo's "orders" to General Anderson should have been obeyed, and that we should have "turned tail" and sailed away because he ordered our troops not to land on the Philippine soil without his consent.

He did much to thwart this officer in organizing a native wagon train and otherwise providing for his troops, and he went so far in a letter of July 23 (copy herewith, marked J) as to warn General Anderson not to land American troops on Philippine soil without his consent, a notice which it is hardly necessary to say was ignored. The day before the attack on Manila he sent staff officers to the same general asking for our plans of attack, so that their troops could enter Manila with us. The same request had previously been made to me by one of his brigade commanders, to which I replied that I was not authorized to give the information desired.

Aguinaldo did not call upon General Merritt on his arrival, and this enabled the latter to avoid any communication with him, either direct or indirect, until after Manila had been taken. General Merritt then received one of Aguinaldo's staff officers in his office as military governor. The interview lasted more than an hour. General Merritt referred to his proclamation—

You remember what the proclamation was—as showing the conditions under which the American troops had come to Manila and the nature of the military government which would be maintained until further orders from Washington. He agreed upon the lines outside of the city of Manila up to which the insurgent troops could come, but no farther, with arms in their hands—

These are some 6 or 8 miles out—

he asked for possession of the waterworks, which was given; and while expressing our friendship and sympathy for the Philippine people, he stated very positively that the United States Government had placed at his disposal an ample force for carrying out his instructions, and even if the services of Aguinaldo's forces had been needed as allies he should not have felt at liberty to accept them.

The problem of how to deal with Aguinaldo's government and troops will necessarily be accompanied with embarrassment and difficulty, and will require much tact and skill in its solution. The United States Government, through its naval commander, has to some extent made use of them for a distinct military purpose, viz. to harass and annoy the Spanish troops, to wear them out in the trenches, to blockade Manila on the land side, and to do as much damage as possible to the Spanish Government prior to the arrival of our troops; and for this purpose the Admiral allowed them to take arms and munitions which he had captured at Cavite and their ships to pass in and out of Manila Bay in their expeditions against other provinces. But the Admiral has been very careful to give Aguinaldo no assurances of recognition and no pledges or promises of any description. The services which Aguinaldo and his adherents rendered in preparing the way for attack on Manila are certainly entitled to consideration; but, after all, they were small in comparison with what was done by our own fleet and army.

And nowhere, Mr. Chairman, from the time of the attack upon the Spanish ships in Manila Harbor to the present hour, has there been the slightest recognition of the Filipinos as allies of this country. And my friend from Kentucky [Mr. SETTLE], a man of high ability and character, should, for his own sake, take prompt occasion to correct the impression his language would convey.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have but a few words more, and then I am through. I wish to submit a few propositions expressing opinions which I entertain individually and for which I am alone responsible.

Mr. SIMPSON rose.

Mr. MARSH. I decline to be interrupted. As the gentleman knows, my time is fast running out.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as I have said before on this floor, I am in favor of the retention of the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico, and of utilizing them for the benefit of the trade and commerce of our own people. In doing that I believe we shall conduce to the interests of the people of those islands as well as to our own.

As to the right of acquiring this territory, it has been claimed that the Constitution of the United States confers upon the nation the right to declare war and the right to negotiate peace. I deny that the Constitution confers any such power upon the nation. The provision in the Constitution on the subject of the war-making power and the treaty-making power was simply a recognition by the framers of that instrument that the power to make war and the power to make peace are incidents of sovereignty. The men who framed the Constitution never undertook to confer upon this nation those things which necessarily pertain to the sovereignty of a nation.

Mr. FLEMING. Will the gentleman allow me one question?

Mr. MARSH. I will not. I do not wish to be discourteous, but I have not the time.

Mr. Chairman, the provisions referred to in the Constitution simply designate who under this Government can declare war and who under this Government can make a treaty.

Suppose the war-making and the peace-making provisions had never been placed in the Constitution at all; would it be asserted by any constitutional lawyer that we could not as an incident of sovereignty go to war; and would it be claimed by any international lawyer or constitutional lawyer that when at war we could not make a treaty of peace, for want of a provision in the Constitution authorizing peace to be declared and a treaty of peace entered into? Why, sir, a mere statement of the proposition shows its absolute absurdity.

Under this war-making power, this sovereign power incident to all sovereign nations, we acquired the Philippine Islands and Porto Rico. We did not acquire them by virtue of any provision of the Constitution of the United States. We did not acquire them by virtue of any statutory law made in pursuance thereof. We acquired them by virtue of our sovereignty, as one of the sovereign nations of the world. I am sorry to repeat so much, but the right to acquire that territory belonged to us as a sovereign nation, and that territory is ours by virtue of the exercise of our sovereignty.

And, Mr. Chairman, I hold that by virtue of the same sovereignty under which we acquired that territory this Congress may rule and control it. And hence I hold that Porto Rico and the Philippine Islands are now our territory; and no political right can attach to them here or hereafter that shall not first be conferred upon them by Congress. In other words, Congress has the right, the absolute right, to make such laws, rules, and regulations for those people and those islands as in its wisdom it may deem right and proper.

Hence, Mr. Chairman, I assume (and who will assume to the contrary?) that Congress hereafter in its wisdom will intelligently, temperately, and mercifully rule and control the people of those islands and bestow upon them such rights as they may prove themselves worthy to enjoy and exercise. I would confer upon the people of those islands all the civil rights, all the local political rights that could safely be placed in their hands and that they were capable by virtue of their intelligence, honesty, and manhood of exercising—and no more.

But we have been told by gentlemen on the other side that there is a great reaction taking place among the people of the country against holding these territories. Whence and where do you get your information? We have been told that every agricultural paper in the country is against the acquisition of those territories. We have been told that the labor unions of the country are against that policy.

When the labor unions of this country understand the matter correctly, and when the farmers of this country understand the matter correctly, they will stand along with the great mass of the American people in favor of the expansion of our territory and the retention of these recent acquisitions.

Mr. Chairman, you may search the decisions of the Supreme Court from the beginning until this blessed hour and you will not find in any of those decisions (if I may except the Dred Scott decision) anything that militates against the position I have taken here to-day, that the territory we acquire is subject to the jurisdiction of Congress, to be disposed of as the wisdom of Congress may deem best.

And when those territories shall have been reduced absolutely to our possession, when peace shall have been established, when the supremacy of the American flag has been recognized by the people there as it is recognized by the people here, then will come the time for Congress, in its wisdom, to legislate therefor.

Our farmers have been told that the sugar of the Philippine Islands would come here in competition with their beet sugar. The sugar raisers of Louisiana and Texas and perhaps southern Alabama and Mississippi have been frightened out of their wits for fear that with the annexation of the Philippine Islands their sugar would come in here, produced by cheap labor, in competition with their products.

The workmen of the country—I have in mind more particularly the thousands and tens of thousands of cigar makers of the country—have been made to believe that the moment the Philippine Islands become ours the cheap-labor made cigars of the Philippines will come into this country without any duty and drive out our manufacturers. Not a word of that is true, if this Congress in future adheres to the great American cardinal principle of protection of American labor and American industry.

As I understand the law—and I want to say here that I do understand it, and that you may search the authorities from beginning to end and you will not be able to find the enunciation of a solitary principle on the part of any respectable authority that militates against the position that I have taken here to-day—under that authority Congress may levy upon the imports of the Philippine Islands just such duty as it chooses to levy.

These laboring men and these farmers have been made to believe by misrepresentation that when the Philippine Islands become ours the trade and commerce between those islands and the United States will be as free and untrammelled as between the State of Maryland and the State of Virginia. That is not true. That does not follow. It is claimed by some gentlemen that the Constitution of the United States, the moment those islands become ours, extends itself by its own force over those territories. That is not true. That position is not tenable.

The Constitution does not go to those territories by its own force. The rights and privileges guaranteed by that instrument belong to us, and can be extended to nobody until the people of the United States, through their representatives, by enactment of law, so extend it. I said that some of these farmers and workmen had been led to suppose that the cheaply made products of the Philippine Islands would be allowed to come into this country just as the products of one State pass the lines of that State into another.

But, Mr. Chairman, I assume that this Congress and succeeding Congresses will do in the future as they have done in the past, and by protective tariff legislation prevent the unjust competition of the cheaply paid labor of the Philippines, just as we prevent the unjust competition of the cheap labor of China or any other country. And the assumption that is made here from day to day upon the other side of the House, that the moment those islands become ours, that very moment our navigation laws and our tariff laws will apply to them, is a contention that has no foundation whatever.

When the American people discover that to be the case, when they learn of the misrepresentations that have been sown broadcast all over this country upon that subject and become familiar with the true situation of affairs, you will find that the laboring men of this country, the great labor unions of the country, and great agricultural interests of the country, will stand where I stand, in favor of expansion and in favor of the extension of our trade and our commerce to every portion and part of the known world.

Mr. Chairman, I know that when anybody on this floor advocates the retention of these islands from a commercial point of view, he is accused of being sordid and selfish, accused of having in view the almighty dollar. I want to say here, Mr. Chairman, that one of the reasons, and one of the principal reasons, that actuates me in advocating the retention of the Philippine Islands is because those islands are the gateway and the key to the great eastern Asiatic commerce that is now being developed and hereafter will be developed.

Who is entitled to the trade of that great Pacific Ocean more than we? Who has greater rights upon that vast ocean than the American people? There is the Chinese nation, with something over 400,000,000 people, more than one-fourth of the population of the world, in process of disintegration. Russia, France, England, and Germany have seized upon strategic trade points along the coast of that great country. We have none whatever.

In a few more years, under the civilization of the nineteenth century carried into that country by European and American influences—under that inspiration thousands and tens of thousands of miles of railway will be built. Thousands and tens of thousands of telegraph lines and telephone lines will be constructed. The great rivers of China will float upon their bosoms the commerce and steamers of foreign nations.

And I say, Mr. Chairman, that while at the beginning of this war we did not think of the acquisition of the Philippine Islands, there is a power beyond, a higher power than ours. They have fallen into our hands, and thereby we have secured the key and the gateway to that immense traffic that is to be developed in eastern Asia. I know that there is an impression prevailing that the people of China are poor people. They are, on the contrary, the wealthiest people in the world. The precious metals have been pouring for the past three hundred years into that country in one continuous stream, and not one dollar has come back.

They consume now. They are small consumers now. They will become great consumers. They are an imitative race. They are rice eaters to-day. If we could get these people educated so that they could eat 1 peck of wheat a year where we eat 5 bushels, they would become consumers of 1,000,000 bushels of wheat a year. If we could get them educated to eat 1 bushel per year they would consume 400,000,000 bushels of wheat.

Mr. FLEMING. A bushel a day will kill them.

Mr. MARSH. Per year.

Mr. SIMPSON. That would be heavy feeding for a horse.

Mr. MARSH. If we could bring them up to consuming 2 bushels per year where American people consume 5 bushels, it means 800,000,000 bushels of wheat a year. Now, go home to Kansas, Nebraska, and elsewhere and tell your farmer constituents what a wonderful injury the acquisition of the Philippines would be to them! It would be a great thing for them. Who is to furnish the locomotives that are to run upon the thousands and thousands of miles of railroads to be constructed in the near future in that great eastern country?

Only the other day a contract was made and closed with one of our leading locomotive establishments in this country, in Philadelphia, for 89 locomotive engines. Who is to furnish them the railroad iron, the steel rails? Who is to furnish them with electrical apparatus, with electric lights, with electric street cars, and with telephone lines? Why not we? I say, Mr. Chairman, that we are in the Philippine Islands to-day. We came there without knowing it. We bless the day we did get there, and as generation after generation succeeds, why they will with enlarged prayers bless the day that Dewey captured the harbor of Manila.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him one question?

Mr. MARSH (continuing). And instead of indulging in invective and abuse upon the President, as the gentleman from Indiana has done to-day, McKinley's name will go down in song and in the hearts of the American people for the stand he has taken.

Gentlemen complain, while on this subject of traffic. I do not care so much for the Philippines; I do not care so much for the people that live there; but I am looking to that wonderful trade and commerce that in the coming half century will develop with eastern Asia upon the Pacific Ocean.

I asked a little while ago who had a better right to the commerce upon that sea than we? England has no coast-line possessions there except spots she has seized from China. France has none. She has no coast line there. Germany has no coast line there. The United States of America has 2,000 miles of coast line on that great ocean, excluding the Aleutian Islands. Then why, I say, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the House, why can not we bar party prejudice? Why can not we bar even supposed opportunity to make a little party capital and unite as one man and seize upon this occasion that has presented itself for the wonderful development of American trade and American commerce? [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I think I have said all I care to say, and I will yield the balance of my time to the chairman of the committee. [Applause.] But before I do so, some gentleman wanted to ask me a question.

Mr. FLEMING. My question will take the form of asking if you will read, or let me read, two or three extracts from General Greene's testimony, from which you read.

Mr. MARSH. I have no objection to your reading it.

Mr. COX. I want to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. HULL. I do not want to interrupt the gentleman from Illinois or the gentleman from Georgia; otherwise I should move that the committee rise.

Mr. FLEMING. I ask unanimous consent of the House for five minutes.

Mr. HULL. I will yield to the gentleman five minutes.

Mr. FLEMING. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois had denied that there were relationships between our forces and the Filipinos which would justify us in saying they were our allies. He read a part of General Greene's testimony in support of his position. He read down to the bottom of page 423, and stopped at a certain paragraph; and I begin just exactly where he left off:

The problem of how to deal with Aguinaldo's government and troops will necessarily be accompanied with embarrassment and difficulty, and will require much tact and skill in its solution. The United States Government, through its naval commander, has to some extent made use of them for a distinct military purpose, viz, to harass and annoy the Spanish troops, to wear them out in the trenches, to blockade Manila on the land side, and to do as much damage as possible to the Spanish Government prior to the arrival of our troops. And for this purpose the Admiral allowed them to take arms and munitions which he had captured at Cavite, and their ships to pass in and out of Manila Bay in their expeditions against other provinces.

Moreover, I read in another part, from page 421, General Greene's testimony:

On the 24th day of April Aguinaldo met the United States consul and others at Singapore and offered to begin a new insurrection in conjunction with the operations of the United States Navy at Manila. This was telegraphed to Admiral Dewey, and by his consent, or at his request, Aguinaldo left Singapore for Hongkong on April 26; and when the McCulloch went to Hongkong early in May to carry the news of Admiral Dewey's victory, it took Aguinaldo and seventeen other revolutionary chiefs on board and brought them to Manila Bay. They soon after landed at Cavite, and the Admiral allowed them to take such guns, ammunition, and stores as he did not require for himself. With these, and some other arms which he had brought from Hongkong, Aguinaldo armed his followers, who rapidly assembled at Cavite, and in a few weeks he began moving against the Spaniards. Part of them surrendered, giving him more arms, and the others retreated to Manila.

In the face of these facts printed in the official record and sworn to by an officer of the United States Army, what becomes of the bombastic utterances of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MARSH] on this particular question?

Mr. MARSH. The bombastic part of the gentleman's utterances I return to him with my compliments.

Mr. RIDGELY. That is the only way you could return them.

Mr. MARSH. I will simply say that I am willing to leave to the judgment of this House who has exhibited bombastic qualities to a greater degree than has the gentleman from Georgia himself. I say now, as I said a while ago, that what he has read does not establish that the Filipinos had at any time occupied the position of allies to this country. The friendly Filipinos were utilized down there just exactly, no more and no less, as our country has utilized from time to time the friendly Indians in our wars.

Mr. LENTZ. The gentleman might as well say that Sherman in his march to the sea was not an ally of Grant's.

Several MEMBERS on the Republican side. An ally of Grant's; oh!

Mr. MARSH. Sherman an ally of Grant's! [Laughter on the Republican side.] I still adhere to the statements I made a while ago, that from the very beginning until the end of the whole controversy, from the time Dewey sailed into Manila Harbor until this moment, the relation of allies has never existed between the Filipinos and the American Government or the American Army.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee determined to rise; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOPKINS, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12106) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900, and had come to no resolution thereon.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 5543. An act to provide for the erection of a public building at Elizabeth City, N. C.—to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

S. 5322. An act for the relief of M. B. Buford—to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled joint resolution (S. R. 252) to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in the District of Columbia.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. HAGER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11717. An act making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1900; and H. Res. 359. Joint resolution to amend section 25 of the act passed June 13, 1893, entitled "An act to provide ways and means to meet war expenditures, and for other purposes."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HULL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns to-day, it adjourn until to-morrow at 11 o'clock. There are eulogies upon two deceased members to-morrow.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. Speaker, will that prevent the evening session?

The SPEAKER. It will not.

The motion of Mr. HULL was agreed to.

REPRINT OF NAVAL PERSONNEL BILL.

Mr. FOSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the reprint of the bill H. R. 10403, known as the naval personnel bill, with the Senate amendments numbered.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

RETURN OF A BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House the following request from the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to request the House of Representatives to return to the Senate the joint resolution (S. R. 48) "granting permission for the erection of a monument in Washington, D. C., for the ornamentation of the national capital and in honor of Samuel Hahnemann."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the request of the Senate will be complied with.

There was no objection.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY TO THE DENISON, BONHAM AND GULF RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BAILEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill 5514. The House Committee on Indian Affairs has substantially reported the same bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to amend an act entitled "An act to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Denison, Bonham and New Orleans Railway Company for the purpose of constructing a railway, and for other purposes," approved March 28, 1898, and to vest in the Denison, Bonham and Gulf Railway Company all the rights, privileges, and franchises therein granted to said first-named company.

Be it enacted, etc., That all the rights of way, privileges and franchises granted, or which were sought to be granted, to the Denison, Bonham and New Orleans Railway Company by the act of Congress entitled "An act to grant the right of way through the Indian Territory to the Denison, Bonham and New Orleans Railway Company for the purpose of constructing a railway, and for other purposes," be, and the same are hereby, fully vested in and granted to the Denison, Bonham and Gulf Railway Company, and said act is hereby so amended as to insert in lieu of the name of the Denison, Bonham and New Orleans Railway Company that of the said The Denison, Bonham and Gulf Railway Company wherever it occurs in the title or body of said act, and the same shall hereafter read and be construed in all respects as if the name of the said The Denison, Bonham and Gulf Railway Company had been inserted in the original act in lieu of that of the Denison, Bonham and New Orleans Railway Company.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DALZELL. Is there room for another track there?

Mr. BAILEY. I will say that this is an old charter; but the people providing the money for the construction of the road raised the question about the expiration of the Texas charter. The owners of the road reincorporated it under the laws of Texas, and they simply ask Congress to give them precisely the rights given to the old road.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time; and being read the third time, was passed.

On motion of Mr. BAILEY, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PARK IN BOULDER, COLO., ETC.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendments to the bill (H. R. 11455) granting to the city of Boulder, in the State of Colorado, certain land for park purposes and for the preservation of native trees on said lands be now taken up and concurred in.

The amendments were read, as follows:

Page 3, after line 10, insert:

"Sec. 5. That the following described tract of land, situated in the county of Rolette, State of North Dakota, namely, the south half of northwest quarter of section 30, township 102 north, range 72 west, be, and the same is hereby, granted and conveyed to the Lake Schutte Cemetery Corporation, of Dunseith, N. Dak., to have and to hold said lands to its use and behoof forever for cemetery purposes."

Page 3, after line 10, insert:

"Sec. 6. That the northwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 30, township 17 north, range 3 east, Black Hills meridian, is hereby granted to the Nashville Presbyterian Church, of Nashville, S. Dak., for cemetery purposes; and the trustees of said church and their successors in office are hereby authorized and empowered to sell or convey lots to any person at such price as they shall fix for the same for burial purposes: Provided, That there was no prior legal claimant upon said land at the time it was first used for cemetery purposes."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting to the city of Boulder, in the State of Colorado, certain lands for park purposes and for the preservation of the native trees on said lands, and for other purposes."

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. Speaker, concerning these two amendments which have been added by the Senate, I wish to say only a word. The bill as originally introduced and passed by the House granted certain lands in the city of Boulder, Colo., for park purposes. When the bill went to the Senate, that body added as amendments the substance of two bills which they had passed and which were pending in the Committee on Public Lands in this House. Those bills proposed to grant certain tracts of land, one 40 acres and the other 80 acres, for cemetery purposes.

Under the general law such lands can be taken up for cemetery purposes by incorporated towns; but the two places at which these cemeteries are located being nothing but post-offices, it became necessary to introduce these special bills. The Senate thought it would be better to attach the substance of those bills to this House bill as amendments than to await action upon them in the House. I will say that the Committee on Public Lands of the House has examined both those bills, finds them to be meritorious, and is unanimous in recommending that they be passed.

Mr. LACEY. In addition to the statement of the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH], I wish to say that both the tracts of land referred to in the Senate amendments are already in use for cemetery purposes and have been so used for some time.

There being no objection, the amendments of the Senate were concurred in.

On motion of Mr. SHAFROTH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in was laid on the table.

UNITED STATES COURTS IN TEXAS.

Mr. KLEBERG. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (H. R. 5497) to provide for terms of the circuit and district courts of the western judicial district of the State of Texas to be held at the city of Laredo, and for other purposes.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there shall be two terms of the circuit and district courts of the western district of Texas, held on the third Monday in March and the first Monday in December in each year, at the city of Laredo.

Sec. 2. That all process issued after this act shall take effect against defendants residing in the counties of Webb, Zapata, Duval, Encinal, Lasalle, and McMullen shall be returned to the city of Laredo. That all actions or proceedings now pending in the courts at Brownsville and San Antonio against parties residing in the counties of Webb, Zapata, Duval, Encinal, Lasalle, and McMullen may, on the application of either party to such actions or proceedings, be transferred to the court at the city of Laredo; and in case of such transfer all papers and files therein, with copies of all journal entries, shall be transferred to the office of the deputy clerk of the court at the city of Laredo, and the same shall proceed in all respects as if originally commenced in said court.

Sec. 3. That there shall be appointed, in the manner provided by law, a deputy clerk, who shall keep his office at the city of Laredo.

Sec. 4. That all laws and parts of laws in conflict with this act be, and the same are hereby, repealed.

Mr. PAYNE. How many new officials does this bill create?

Mr. KLEBERG. Only one—a deputy clerk.

Mr. PAYNE. Has the bill been reported by the Judiciary Committee?

Mr. KLEBERG. Yes; it is a unanimous report.

Mr. MADDOX. I should like to know when this bill was introduced.

Mr. KLEBERG. At the beginning of this Congress.

Mr. MADDOX. Last year?

The SPEAKER. The bill was introduced January 5, 1898.

Mr. MADDOX. I only wanted to know that as a matter of information. I had a similar bill referred to the committee, which they have failed to report up to this time.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KLEBERG, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PATENT RIGHTS OF INSANE PERSONS.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House the amendments of the Senate to a bill on the Speaker's table.

The amendments to the bill (H. R. 7346) to amend section 4896 of the Revised Statutes were read, as follows:

On page 1, line 10, after "guardian," insert "conservator or."

On page 2, line 18, after "guardian," insert "conservator or representative."

Mr. BAILEY. I should like to know the object of these amendments. I presume it is to make the bill conform to the statutes of some of the States.

Mr. PAYNE. What is the bill?

The SPEAKER. It is a bill relative to prosecuting a patent in behalf of an inventor who may have become insane.

Mr. PAYNE. I do not see any objection to the amendment.

Mr. BAILEY. I presume in some of the States the word "conservator" is used.

The amendments were concurred in.

The SPEAKER. The hour of half past 5 o'clock having arrived, the House will take its recess until 8 o'clock p. m. The gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. EVANS, will act as Speaker at the evening session.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House, at 8 o'clock p. m., resumed its session, and was called to order by Mr. EVANS as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the rule under which the Friday evening session is held.

The Clerk read as follows:

The House shall, each Friday at 5 o'clock p. m. take a recess until 8 o'clock, at which evening session private pension bills, bills for the removal of political disabilities, and bills removing charges of desertion only shall be considered; said evening session not to extend beyond 10 o'clock and 30 minutes.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I desire, before we go into Committee of the Whole, to ask unanimous consent that all bills for the removal of charges of desertion be passed over until all the pension bills on the Calendar have been disposed of.

Mr. RAY of New York. Suppose you modify it by saying unless the member introducing the bill is here.

Mr. TALBERT. I have no objection to that. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that all bills for the removal of charges of desertion be passed over until after the other business is disposed of.

Mr. MCCLELLAN. Unless the member introducing the bill is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Unless the member introducing the bill is present. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I have prepared a list of the pension bills that have been reported and passed the House during this Congress, giving the Senate number and the House number, the amount that the soldier was drawing where he was drawing anything, and the amount of increase carried by the bill with a statement of the amount it will add to the pension roll without any comments whatever aside from the figures and a tabulated statement and comparison. I ask unanimous consent that I may print that statement and the figures in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent—

Mr. TALBERT. I did not understand the gentleman's statement as to what it was that he wished to print.

Mr. RAY of New York. It is a list of all the pension bills that have passed the House in this Congress, giving the number of the bills, whether Senate or House, the amount that the pensioner has been drawing, if drawing anything, and the amount of increase that the bill carries, and also a tabulated statement relating thereto.

Mr. TALBERT. I have no objection to that.

Mr. RAY of New York. And then a summary, without any comments whatever.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that the matter to which he has referred be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAY of New York. Now I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering business on the Private Calendar under the rule.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. RAY of New York, on a division (demanded by Mr. TALBERT) there were—ayes 28, noes 0.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering bills on the Private Calendar in order under the rule for Friday-evening sessions, with Mr. RUSSELL in the chair.

MICHAEL BAKER.

The first business was the bill (H. R. 1358) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Michael Baker.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Michael Baker, formerly of the U. S. S. Brooklyn.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the report be read.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Let the gentleman introducing the bill make a brief statement.

Mr. McCLELLAN. The report is quite short, and will state the case as well as I can state it. I ask for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. DAYTON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1358) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Michael Baker, beg leave to submit the following report, and recommend that said bill do pass without amendment:

This is a bill enacting that the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Michael Baker, formerly of the U. S. S. Brooklyn. It appears that Michael Baker enlisted for three years in the Navy as a first-class boy November 14, 1864; that he served on board several vessels without fault, as appears by the record, until January 19, 1867; and that he is marked as a deserter at that date from the U. S. S. Brooklyn. On March 30, 1864, the case of Baker was examined by the Navy Department with a view of relief, but the application was rejected on the ground that, owing to the act of Congress approved August 14, 1868, having expired by limitation, the Department had no authority of law to remove said charge.

When he enlisted Baker was only 14 years old, and he ran away from home to enter the service. In an affidavit he declares that he supposed he enlisted for the war only, and never knew better until he applied for a discharge at the close of hostilities and was refused. In January 1867, he learned that his father was sick and at the point of death, when he applied for leave to return home, but was refused. He then went home without consent and found his father dead. Baker declares that, being but a boy when he deserted, he "did not realize the enormity of the offense," and thinks that he in part, at any rate, atoned for it by subsequently enlisting and serving in the Navy for several years.

The committee think that this is a case in which relief may well be granted, and they therefore recommend that the bill pass.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask if there is any evidence before the committee outside of the simple statement of this man himself?

Mr. McCLELLAN. Yes; there is evidence in the files of the committee showing the facts to be as stated in the report. The boy was only 14 years old when he enlisted and 17 when he deserted, after the close of the war. Subsequently he served a full enlistment in the Navy, and has since then led a decent life, and he is now a respected citizen of my district.

Mr. TALBERT. If you will recollect, there have been several acts passed since then, if I remember, which have expired by limitation. The report says that the reason he can not get the charge removed under the general law is because the limit has expired. It seems to me he might have availed himself of some later act. There have been three or four different acts.

Mr. RAY of New York. I can assure the gentleman that there is no general law to cover this case.

Mr. TALBERT. It seems to me we ought to have information as to whether the last act which was passed would cover the case or not.

Mr. RAY of New York. I assure the gentleman that I have examined the law and there is no general statute covering such a case as this.

Mr. TALBERT. My friend on my left [Mr. JETT] says the date of the passage of the last act was 1888, and I think he is correct. Mr. RAY of New York. There never was a law covering this case.

Mr. TALBERT. When the law does not cover it, does the gentleman think this applicant ought to come in here and get special legislation?

Mr. RAY of New York. I do, under the facts which are stated in this case. The boy went home to the bedside of his dying father, and under those circumstances it is very likely that the gentleman or myself would have done the same thing. The war was over. He did not think of deserting. Desertion was not in his heart.

Mr. TALBERT. That is very likely; but we ought to put aside sentiment in these cases and deal with facts. There are many of these cases, and we are piling up such an amount of taxation here, day by day, in the way of appropriations, that it looks as though we ought to try to stop some of the little leaks some way.

I offer an amendment providing that no pay, bounty, or other emolument shall accrue by the passage of this act. I see the committee have not offered that amendment, and I ask that it be voted upon. I understand this man wants the stigma removed; that he is not thinking of a pension. There is quite a difference between having a stigma removed and wanting to get money out of it.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. If he happens to think of that later, he can attend to that. He is not thinking of that now. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by inserting at the end of bill the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

W. H. CASTLE.

Mr. TALBERT. In justice to my friend the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DICK], who represents the district formerly represented by our comrade, Mr. Northway, who has gone to his long home, I wish to state that that gentleman left a very meritorious bill here, something similar to the case of my friend from New York [Mr. McCLELLAN]. I ask unanimous consent, in justice to him, that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. DICK] be allowed to present that bill before we proceed with the others on the Calendar. The gentleman can explain the whys and wherefores, so that we can see whether it is a meritorious case.

Mr. DICK. The report of the committee is in the hands of the Clerk.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the bill which he has indicated be called up. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill (H. R. 4670) to remove the charge of dishonorable dismissal from the military service of the United States of W. H. Castle was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to revoke and set aside so much of Special Orders, No. 15, paragraph 50, dated January 10, 1865, Adjutant-General's Office, in War Department, as dishonorably dismissed from the service First Lieut. W. H. Castle, late of Company E, of the One hundred and fifth Regiment of Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and to grant him an honorable discharge from the service of the United States as of said date of January 10, 1865.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Military Affairs, was read:

Insert at the end of the bill the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill at this time?

There was no objection.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask the gentleman to make a statement of the facts in this case.

Mr. DICK. Mr. Chairman, in addition to the testimony on file with the committee, and the report which has been made by the committee, I think the only thing necessary to convince the Committee of the Whole of the justice of this application will be the reading of the affidavit of Col. George T. Perkins, commanding the regiment of the man who asks that this correction be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the document referred to.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the case of William H. Castle, dishonorably dismissed the service as first lieutenant Company E, One hundred and fifth Ohio Volunteers, January 10, 1865, by special orders of that date from the War Department.

STATE OF OHIO, Summit County, ss:

George T. Perkins, of lawful age and residing at Akron, Summit County, Ohio, and late lieutenant-colonel commanding the One hundred and fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, being first duly sworn, deposes and says that since the making of his former affidavit in the above case he has fully investigated and ascertained the facts in such case to be as follows:

That said Castle left his command on a leave of absence regularly issued from department headquarters, and which he had reason to believe he had a right to use at that time, and that he supposed he had my approval; and after a thorough investigation I am convinced that he did not conceal himself in a box car or any other place, or ever had such a thought; and I further declare that his entire absence was covered by his leave of absence and the extensions thereof, and the charges I preferred against him at the time were based upon a misapprehension of the facts, and I now find the same to be untrue.

And I therefore wish this affidavit to be a revocation of such charges; and I furthermore depose and say that I am not related to said Castle; and my only interest in the matter is that the truth shall be known.

GEO. T. PERKINS.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence this 10th day of February, 1899.

W. E. SLABAUGH, Notary Public.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JACKSON NEACE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4498) granting an increase of pension to Jackson Neace, late a member of Company H, Twenty-seventh Regiment of Illinois Volunteers, in the war of the rebellion.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Jackson Neace, late a member of Company H, Twenty-seventh Regiment Illinois Volunteers, in the war of the rebellion, to $50 per month, said amount to be in lieu of the pension which he is now drawing.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Line 4, strike out "increase the pension" and insert "place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name." Strike out all after "Volunteers," in line 6, and insert "and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Jackson Neace."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman, if he wants a statement, that this adds $6 to this man's pension. The man is old and in extreme necessitous circumstances, and the leg is in a condition that makes it worse than those who draw $30. He is really entitled to it.

Mr. TALBERT. He is getting $30 to-day at the Bureau?

Mr. RAY of New York. He is getting $30, and this only adds $6, making him equal with the others.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES COOPER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10900) to increase the pension of James Cooper.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of James Cooper, late a private in Company B, Ninety-fourth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, on the pension roll and pay him a pension of $50 per month, in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 6, after "pension," insert "at the rate."

In line 7, strike out "fifty" and insert "forty."

Mr. RAY of New York. I would say, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, that this adds $10 to this man's pension. He has a family to provide for. His blindness, however, is not proved to be the result of army service, although it may be. The Pension Office does not accept it as a fact. He has other disabilities that entitle him to $30 a month.

Mr. TALBERT. Suppose he could trace his blindness to service origin, he would get more?

Mr. RAY of New York. He would get $73 a month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

ELIZA SICKLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 9502) granting a pension to Eliza Sickler.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Eliza Sickler, of Marinette, Wis., mother of George Sickler, late a private in Company H, Thirty-ninth Wisconsin Infantry Volunteers, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

Line 4, after "roll," insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

Line 6, after "Wisconsin," insert "the dependent."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, this pension gives $12 a month to Eliza Sickler, the dependent mother of a soldier who died undoubtedly of disease contracted in the service, although it can not be fully established that that was so. She is 75 years of age, she is very, very poor, and has no one upon whom she can depend for support. This gives her $12 a month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

DORTHA E. KENNOCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4661) granting a pension to Dortha E. Kennoch.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Dortha E. Kennoch, widow of William W. Kennoch, deceased, late of the United States Navy, who was pensioned under certificate No. 3086.

The amendment recommended by the committee was read, as follows:

Strike out all after "Navy," in line 7, and insert "and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, this is the widow of a man who served in the marine service of the United States during the war and was actually engaged in fighting and pursuing the enemy. He received a wound in the service, and died, but there is no law, by some inadvertence, that would give a pension to the widow of a man who was in the marine service, even though he had engaged in the fighting. The case is within the spirit of the pension law. She is old and poor, and has no one upon whom to depend for support.

The amendment recommended by the committee was agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES W. INGRAM.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10696) granting an increase of pension to James W. Ingram.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of James W. Ingram, late captain Company G, Eighty-fourth Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws in lieu of that which he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, after "roll," insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In lines 6, 7, and 8 strike out "subject to the provisions and limitations of the general pension laws," and insert "at the rate of $30 per month."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman from South Carolina that this man is old and poor. He is now pensioned at the rate of $12 a month. He received gunshot wounds in more than one battle, through the arm and body, and he has rheumatism, varicose ulcers, and other diseases, which render him substantially helpless. He is old and poor, and we only increase it to $30 a month. If all this were the result of disabilities received in the service he would get $72.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MARY CHAMBERLIN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 2635) to grant Mary Chamberlin, of Chelsea, Vt., a pension.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, as dependent mother, the name of Mary Chamberlin, mother of Charles L. Chamberlin, late of Company D, Ninth Vermont Infantry, and Company B, Seventeenth United States Infantry, at the rate of $12 per month.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, after "roll," insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In lines 4 and 5 strike out "as dependent mother."

In line 5, after "Chamberlin," insert "dependent."

In line 8, after "Infantry," insert "and pay her a pension."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting a pension to Mary Chamberlin."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, this bill gives to this old mother of a soldier who is dead a pension of $12 a month. The old mother is now 80 years of age. She is very poor, and aided by the town. The soldier when he died left a widow, but she remarried, so that nobody is pensioned on account of the service of the soldier.

Mr. TALBERT. Why is it that she can not get a pension from the Bureau?

Mr. RAY of New York. Simply because when the soldier died he left a widow, and the law does not give two pensions for the same service. The widow remarried, so that she can not get a pension.

Mr. TALBERT. When she remarried, the mother could have gone and gotten the pension.

Mr. RAY of New York. No; if the soldier dies leaving a widow, no one else can be pensioned on account of that service.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to. The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

DELOS M. KENYON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 12013) to increase the pension of Delos M. Kenyon.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws, the name of Delos M. Kenyon, late first lieutenant Company D, One hundred and twenty-first New York Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $24 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out "upon" and insert "on."
In line 5 strike out "limitations and."
In line 6, after "provisions," insert "and limitations."
In line 8, after "pension," insert "at the rate."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, this bill increases the pension of this old soldier from $12 to $24 a month. He is a man of good character, and suffering from a disease not of service origin—paralysis. He is in a totally helpless condition, and requires aid and attendance nearly all the time. He is an old man and poor.

Mr. TALBERT. Has he no wife or children?

Mr. RAY of New York. He has no wife or children, nor any one on whom he can depend, and will have to go into the poorhouse if he does not have an increase.

Mr. TALBERT. He is now drawing $12 a month?

Mr. RAY of New York. He is now drawing $12, and this gives him $24.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

HENRY C. BEDELL.

The next business was the bill (S. 3911) granting a pension to Henry C. Bedell.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Henry C. Bedell, late of Company A, One hundred and ninety-first New York Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. RAY of New York. This bill simply proposes to pension at $12 per month this claimant, Henry C. Bedell, of Silver Mine, Conn., who served as a private from February to May, 1865, two months and eight days, when he was honorably discharged. He had disabilities in the service, the result of which, we think, has disabled him so that now he can not work. It is not, however, so accepted at the Bureau. He is very poor indeed. He has a wife, and was a man of good character. He was not within the law, but we give him $12 a month.

Mr. TALBERT. Does not the gentleman think that is rather a bad precedent to establish? You even go outside of the pale of the law granting the term of service.

Mr. RAY of New York. Sometimes when they come so very near it, and had good and faithful service, we give it on account of their age and poverty, and because of the probability that he incurred this disease in the service. We have steadily refused to grant a pension when the service was under ninety days unless a man did good service and probably incurred the disability in the service?

Mr. TALBERT. Did this gentleman incur his disabilities in the service?

Mr. RAY of New York. We believe he did.

Mr. TALBERT. You give him the benefit of the doubt?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes; because he is old and in necessitous circumstances, we would not let him go to the poorhouse. He was a good soldier while in the service, and performed active duty. If he had not been in the front and performed active duty, we would not give him this sum.

Mr. TALBERT. Does the gentleman have any idea how many more cases like this will come up here? I mean cases that do not come within the pale of the law.

Mr. RAY of New York. Very few cases, because we turn down forty where we grant one.

Mr. TALBERT. You establish a precedent in this case, and then you establish a precedent in another case, and you add them all together, and it makes a good many. I find you are making a great many precedents. I have been commending the gentleman all along, but I am afraid he is getting off the track.

Mr. RAY of New York. Not at all; this is a very worthy case; as worthy one as we could have.

Mr. MAXWELL. I want to say to the gentleman from South Carolina and the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions that the law is to be liberally construed in favor of the old soldier, and we should give him the benefit of the doubt.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

MARY F. HILLIARD.

The next business was the bill (S. 4416) granting a pension to Mary F. Hilliard.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary F. Hilliard, widow of George H. Hilliard, late of Company C, First Massachusetts Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. RAY of New York. This restores a remarried widow to the pension roll. Her husband served two years in the Army, and after his death she remarried and relieved the Government for a long time of paying a pension. She is a woman of good character, 63 years of age, was the wife of a soldier during the war, and she has no one on whom she can depend.

Mr. TALBERT. Is her husband dead?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes. She was the wife of a soldier during the war, and after he died she remarried, and that husband is dead.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

SAMUEL S. McDONALD.

The next business was the bill (S. 5386) restoring to the pension roll the name of Samuel S. McDonald.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to restore to the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Samuel S. McDonald, late of Company I, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Heavy Artillery, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month.

Mr. RAY of New York. This restores this man to the pension roll at the same rate that he had when he was dropped four or five years ago. He has the shaking palsy, is totally disabled, and he had a good, long service in the war. When he went into the Army he was pronounced sound by the United States surgeon, and he served over a year in the field. After the war he was honorably discharged. He was examined by a board of surgeons and got a pension. He was afterwards given two increases and examined by a board of surgeons twice.

Some three or four years ago he was dropped from the rolls because they claimed that he had the seeds of the palsy before he went into the service. We say he was examined and was found sound before he went into the service, and afterwards his pension was increased after two separate examinations. We believe if he had had the seeds of the palsy before he went into the service that they would not have admitted him and kept him there until the war was closed.

Mr. TALBERT. Has he made application recently to the Pension Department for restoration?

Mr. RAY of New York. Yes; he applied for restoration and they adhered to their old decision that he must have had the palsy when he went into the service.

Mr. GIBSON. He was refused on the 26th of January last.

Mr. TALBERT. There seems to be some doubt about the matter. There is a difference of opinion between the gentlemen of the committee and the Pension Bureau in regard to this matter. It seems to me that here is a case where we might compromise somewhat by making it $40 instead of $50. He has appealed to this court here.

Mr. RAY of New York. Would you make it $40 where he has no one on whom he can depend?

Mr. SULLOWAY. He has no one to help him, no family at all.

Mr. TALBERT. I have examined so many of these cases and I find that the Department is full of men who are drawing a pension on the plea of total disability; I find some of them are in the Department getting good salaries; I find men tending telephone lines and drawing a pension for deafness; men who are night watchmen draw a pension for total blindness, and that is the reason why I ask these questions. [Laughter.]

I say I believe the good nature of the chairman of the committee is sometimes imposed upon, and that is the reason I want to scrutinize and ask these questions, on account of the difference of opinion between the chairman of the committee and the Pension Bureau. I think $40 would be a happy compromise in this case, and certainly that would be enough to take care of the old gentleman.

Mr. RAY of New York. This case has been carefully examined in the Senate and passed there. This man is totally helpless.

Mr. TALBERT. Oh, over there, if a thousand dollars a month is asked, they generally give it. They need watching by this House.

Mr. RAY of New York. The gentleman from South Carolina is the only one connected with this House, either inside or outside, who has accused me of being "good-natured" in these pension matters. [Laughter.] I thank the gentleman for the compliment.

Mr. TALBERT. I feel very kindly toward the gentleman. I have watched his course here, and I do not like to see other gentlemen jump on him. But I think that now he is getting a little off the track.

Mr. RAY of New York. Oh, I trust you will let this go at $50.
Mr. TALBERT. Does not the gentleman think that $40 would be enough? Let us compromise on that. I move to strike out "fifty" and insert "forty."

Mr. RAY of New York. This man, as I have said, is totally helpless; he can not do anything. If I were in that condition and asking a pension of $50, would the gentleman from South Carolina propose to cut me down to $40?

Mr. TALBERT. Oh, of course I could not withstand any appeal of the gentleman, even if he were or were not helpless.

Mr. RAY of New York. The law would give this man $72 a month if there was no doubt about the disability having been of service origin. I trust the gentleman will let the bill go as reported.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, I move you make the amount $45—to strike out "$50" and insert "$45."

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Why not make it $49.75?

The question being taken, the amendment of Mr. TALBERT was rejected.

The bill was then laid aside to be reported favorably.

GEORGE H. LAMPOROT.

The next business was the bill (S. 4845) granting an increase of pension to George H. Lampport.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of George H. Lampport, late of the gunboat Mound City, Mississippi Flotilla, United States Navy, and pay him a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, this applicant for increase of pension is 63 years of age and very poor. He draws now a pension of $6 a month on account of injuries received in the service. He is substantially helpless. We propose to increase the pension to $20 on account of that and on account of his poverty—to keep him out of the poorhouse.

Mr. TALBERT. I should like to understand from the gentleman what he calls "very poor."

Mr. RAY of New York. A man is "very poor" when he has not anything at all; and that is the condition of this man.

Mr. TALBERT. Has he nothing in the world?

Mr. RAY of New York. No; and he can not work. He has no one in the world upon whom he can depend.

Mr. TALBERT. No wife?

Mr. RAY of New York. I think not; that is my recollection.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, possibly he has a wife with considerable property, like some others who have been pensioned here.

Mr. RAY of New York. No, he has not a wife; if he had, that fact would be mentioned. I may safely say that he has no wife and no children. When an applicant for pension has a wife or children I always state that fact in the report, and there is no mention of such a fact in this case. Since the question of the wife having property has come up here I have made careful inquiry in every case to find whether the wife has property.

Mr. TALBERT. I am glad the gentleman has done so. Now I should like to ask another question. The gentleman says this man is "substantially helpless." What does he mean by "substantially helpless?"

Mr. RAY of New York. When a man can not do anything for his own support, although he may be able to move his hands or his feet; to go from one chair to another, or from a chair to a table, I say he is substantially helpless. When he lies on his bed unable to move himself at all, I say he is totally helpless.

Mr. MADDOX. How does it happen that an aged soldier in the condition which the gentleman describes this man to be receives a pension of only $6 a month?

Mr. RAY of New York. Because he can not trace his disability to service origin. If it were wholly of service origin he could get $72 a month at the Bureau. We propose the increase from $6 to $20, because, although the disability can not be traced to service origin, we still want to keep this good old soldier out of the poorhouse.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

WILLIAM H. FORE.

The next business was the bill (S. 4510) to correct the military record of William H. Fore.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized and directed to correct the military record of William H. Fore, a private in Battery M, in the Second Missouri Light Artillery Volunteers, by removing therefrom the charge of desertion, and substitute therefor the following, to wit: "May 13, 1864, being under 15 years of age, absented himself without proper authority, and returned to his home, and was detained there by his parents until February, 1865, when he went to Illinois, and on February 11, 1865, enlisted in Company C, in the One hundred and fifty-fourth Regiment of Illinois Infantry Volunteers, under the name of James Keeney, alias James H. Keeney, and served faithfully to September 16, 1865, when he was honorably discharged the service." Provided, That no pay, bounty, or allowance shall accrue to him by virtue of this act.

Mr. TALBERT. I will ask if the gentleman who represents this bill is present?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a Senate bill.

Mr. TALBERT. I ask that it be passed over under the order.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I suggest that the name of the member introducing each House bill be announced when the bill is reported.

The CHAIRMAN. This is a Senate bill.

Mr. TALBERT. As my friend from Kansas [Mr. SIMPSON] who is sitting on my right suggests to me, the case is like that related by the old Irishwoman who said that her son was "in the Government sarvice," that he was "le'pin' the bounty." [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Without objection, that will be done.

There was no objection.

JAMES H. LATHAM.

The next business was the bill (S. 4548) for the relief of James H. Latham.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to revoke the order dismissing James H. Latham from service as a captain of the Twenty-first Regiment of Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and to issue a certificate of honorable discharge for him, to date from the 14th day of June, 1865; and the said Latham shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on said date.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a point of order. I think that is a bill that does not come under the provision of our rule to-night. It is for the removal of the sentence of a court-martial, not to remove a charge of desertion. Hence, it is not in order, and I make that point. It does not come under the Friday-night rule.

Mr. RAY of New York. What is the nature of the bill?

Mr. TALBERT. It is for the removal of the sentence of a court-martial, to set aside a verdict, and we can not do that.

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman makes that point, the Chair will sustain the point of order, and the Clerk will report the next bill.

REBECCA M'MULLEN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4677) to increase the pension of Mrs. Rebecca McMullen.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Rebecca McMullen, widow of Alexander McMullen, late a soldier of the war of 1812, on the pension roll, and pay her a pension of $50 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Pensions, were read:

In line 7, strike out the word "fifty" and substitute therefor the word "twenty," so as to fix the pension at $20 per month.

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill to increase the pension of Rebecca McMullen."

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Mr. Chairman, the claimant in this case is the widow of Alexander McMullen, who served in the Pennsylvania Volunteers from March 1 to August 24, 1814, war of 1812, and she is now a pensioner at $12 per month on account of that service.

Mrs. McMullen married the soldier July 13, 1835, and he died January 2, 1862. The testimony accompanying the bill shows that she is 96 years old, nearly blind, paralyzed, and deaf; also that she is so helpless that she can not feed or dress herself.

The amendments recommended by the Committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES H. PRESTON.

The next business was the bill (S. 1759) granting a pension to James H. Preston.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James H. Preston, late of Capt. John Griffin's company, Battalion of Missouri Mounted Volunteers, and pay him a pension of $3 per month for services against the Comanche Indians in the year 1843.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside, to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JEREMIAH B. MOORE.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 6433) granting a pension to Jeremiah B. Moore.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Jeremiah B. Moore, late a sergeant of Company K, First Massachusetts Volunteers, in the Mexican war, and subsequently lieutenant-colonel of the Third Regiment

California Volunteer Infantry in the war of the rebellion, and pay him a pension of $30 per month.

The following amendments, recommended by the Committee on Pensions, were read:

Change the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Jeremiah B. Moore."

In line 9 strike out the word "thirty" and substitute therefor the word "twenty."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to. Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of line 9, adding the words:

The same to be in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

JOSEPH F. MOLLERE.

The next business was the bill (S. 4681) granting an increase of pension to Joseph F. Mollere.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Joseph F. Mollere, late first-class boy, U. S. S. Cumberland, and Maynard's Navy Battery, war with Mexico, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

The following amendment, recommended by the Committee on Pensions, was read:

In line 8 strike out the word "thirty" and insert "twenty."

Mr. BELKNAP. Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask why it was that the amount recommended by the Senate has been reduced from $30 to $20?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I will say for the benefit of the gentleman from Illinois that this is on a line with similar cases, a very large number of them, which the committee have had under consideration during this and previous sessions, and this is the amount which they have allowed in cases of this kind. The committee were unanimous in their opinion that this is an equitable amount. This man had a very short service under the Government—only about four months—was in no battles or engagements whatever, and the committee felt that in allowing him $20 a month they had done that which in their judgment was equitable and just.

Mr. BELKNAP. Is not his condition and that of those dependent upon him such as to warrant a pension of $30 a month?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. No, not under the line of precedents established by the committee.

Mr. BELKNAP. He is in a most deplorable condition and it is very unfortunate that the amount should be cut down when the Senate has given him $30.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. We have given him the maximum amount allowed by our committee to claimants in cases of this character.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. I hope this amendment will not prevail. This old soldier, 72 years of age, is absolutely blind, and has three minor children dependent upon him; and while the action of the Committee on Pensions may be consistent with what they have done heretofore, their action is not consistent with that of the House or with the Committee on Invalid Pensions in other cases where thirty and forty dollars have been allowed. I have known instances where $50 a month have been allowed, where the applicant was not in as needy a condition as this old soldier.

I do believe, taking into account his age and his helplessness, and the fact that he has three minor children, he is entitled to $30 a month.

I ask the committee also to take into consideration the further fact that if you reduce the amount from $30 to $20 the bill may fail of final passage at this late stage in the session, because it will have to go back to the Senate for further action there. For the reasons stated I hope the amendment will not be adopted, and that we may make it $30 instead of $20 as recommended by the committee.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I desire to say in reply to the gentleman that this is simply a service pension.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. And, as is known to all the members of this House, there are thousands of soldiers who are as dependent as this man and who served several years in the Army of our country.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Will the gentleman allow me just a moment? This man is absolutely blind, is he not?

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes; he is totally blind.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. And not only that, but he has three minor children dependent upon him.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Yes.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. And he is absolutely penniless.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I only desire to say that the committee have had a large number of these cases of paralyzed and totally dependent people who were physically helpless.

Mr. BELKNAP. Not all of them blind, though.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. No; but some of them blind, however, and I recall two cases where members of the committee introduced bills themselves for constituents of theirs and reported them at $20 a month.

Mr. COX. I should like to ask the gentleman one question.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Certainly.

Mr. COX. This is an old Mexican soldier, and he is blind and penniless?

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. And has three minor children dependent upon him.

Mr. COX. He must be very old.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Has the gentleman finished his question?

Mr. COX. I am trying to get you to say something to me. [Laughter.]

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I desire to say now—

Mr. COX. Here we have an old man, a Mexican soldier, who is blind, penniless, and who has three minor children dependent on him.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. I was saying for the benefit of the gentleman, if he would listen to me, that this is similar to two bills introduced by members of the committee—

Mr. COX. I am not talking about those two bills. I am talking about this old man.

Mr. RAY of New York. May I say a word here? I desire to say to the members of the House that we have here upon the Calendar to-night about seventy pension bills, every one of them to relieve the necessities of some old soldier, soldier's widow or dependent child. Now, this is the last Friday night that we shall have.

Mr. COX. Now, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAY of New York. While you are discussing it, you are using up the time when we have only until half past 10 in which to do business, and we can not pass these other bills unless discussion ends. I trust the action of the Committee on Pensions will be adhered to and sustained. The committee knows best about these matters. Conservative action is wise and ends in aiding hundreds of the needy, while extravagant legislation brings our action into disrepute and defeats the aim of good legislation by special bills.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield? Do you not consume more time than anybody else?

Mr. RAY of New York. The members here are interested in these bills, and we hope we can go along and pass them. Let us adopt the amendment and sustain the committee.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. If we refuse to adopt the amendment it will not go to conference, but if we adopt the amendment it would go into a conference.

Mr. COX. Oh, let that old fellow go through.

The question was taken on the amendment, and the Chairman announced that the ayes seemed to have it.

Mr. MIERS of Indiana. Division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 16, noes none.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

NANCY M. LINDSEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 3766) granting an increase of pension to Nancy M. Lindsey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Nancy M. Lindsey, widow of William Lindsey, late of Company C, Santa Fe Battalion Mounted Volunteers, Mexican war, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 a month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. TALBERT. Let us have the report in that case.

Mr. LOUDENSLAGER. Will a statement do? Mr. Chairman, this bill increases the pension of the widow of William Lindsey from $8 to $12 a month. The evidence before the committee shows that she is 69 years of age, disabled by reason of advancing age, and totally dependent and helpless. We only increase the pension from $8 to $12 a month.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

CLARENCE L. CHAPMAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 11876) granting an increase of pension to Clarence L. Chapman.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of Clarence L.

Chapman, late captain of Company B, First Regiment New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension of $50 per month in lieu of that he now receives.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, after "roll," insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 7, after "pension," insert "at the rate."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman from South Carolina that this is an old soldier with good service. He served over three years. He has paralysis, is helpless, and has no property, and no one on whom he can depend.

Mr. TALBERT. No relative at all?

Mr. RAY of New York. He has relatives, but no one that would help him—no children.

Mr. TALBERT. What is he getting now?

Mr. RAY of New York. He is getting $12 now.

Mr. TALBERT. Why is it that he can not go to the Pension Department?

Mr. RAY of New York. Because he can not establish to their satisfaction that his paralysis is the result of his army service, a thing that is very difficult to do.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, Mr. Chairman, here is another case just like the other one, where his disability can not be traced to service origin.

Mr. RAY of New York. Not with any certainty.

Mr. TALBERT. I submit that where it can not be traced to service origin it is too much to give him. I therefore move to make it $45.

The question was taken on the amendment offered by Mr. TALBERT, and the Chairman announced that the yeas seemed to have it.

Mr. TALBERT. Division!

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 18, noes 1.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

MAJ. JOHN H. GEARKEE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1209) granting an increase of pension to Maj. John H. Gearkee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll the name of John H. Gearkee, late major of the Twenty-second Regiment of Iowa Volunteer Infantry, at the rate of $50 per month, said pension to be in lieu of the one he now receives.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4, after "roll," insert "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 5, strike out "Major."

In line 5, after "late," insert "major."

In line 6, after "infantry," insert "and pay him a pension."

In line 7, strike out "said pension to be" and also the words "the one," and in lieu of "the one," stricken out, insert "that."

Amend the title so as to read: "An act granting an increase of pension to John H. Gearkee."

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, this is a Senate bill. This is an old soldier; he is very poor; he has a wife and child to support; he is a physical wreck. They have given us a photograph of him, and he certainly can not last a great while. He can not do anything, and if this pension is not given to him he and probably his wife would have to go to the poorhouse.

Mr. TALBERT. What is he getting now?

Mr. RAY of New York. Twenty dollars a month for disabilities of service origin. He is totally helpless, but his present condition can not be traced wholly to service origin. If it could be he would get $72. This is as deserving a case as I have considered.

Mr. TALBERT. I move to make it $45 instead of $50.

Mr. CURTIS of Iowa. This is a Senate bill, and if the amendment offered by the gentleman is adopted it will be thrown into conference. I simply want to say that the bill passed both the Senate and the House in the Fifty-fourth Congress without objection, but too late to receive the signature of the President. It passed the Senate in the present Congress without objection. I remember distinctly that I explained the merits of the bill to my friend from South Carolina in the Fifty-fourth Congress, and I think he will recall it. It is a very worthy case indeed. I personally know the soldier, and I believe that it should be more rather than less.

Mr. TALBERT. Then you can vote down the amendment.

The question was taken; and the amendment was rejected.

The amendments of the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JOHN B. BOGGS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 4635) granting an increase of pension to John B. Boggs.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of John B. Boggs, late a private of Company A, Sixteenth Regiment Illinois Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of the pension now paid to him.

Mr. RAY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I will say to gentlemen that this is the case of an old soldier with good service. He has cancer of the face. It has eaten out one of his eyes, and it will undoubtedly eat out the other. He is poor, and we increase his pension from $16 to $30. He has $16 a month on account of disability traceable to service origin.

Mr. TALBERT. Is he totally blind?

Mr. RAY of New York. I can not say he is totally blind. One eye is out, and the cancer is progressing and will, we think, destroy the other. He can not live long, in my judgment.

The bill was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

JAMES S. ANDERSON.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8804) to increase the pension of James S. Anderson.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension roll of the United States the name of James S. Anderson, late of Company C, First Illinois Infantry Volunteers, in the Mexican war, at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of the pension he is now receiving, subject to the limitations of the general pension laws.

The amendments recommended by the committee were read, as follows:

In line 4 strike out "of the United States" and substitute therefor the words "subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws."

In line 6, after the word "war," insert "and pay him a pension."

In line 7 strike out "thirty" and insert "sixteen," so as to fix the rating at $16 per month.

In line 8 strike out "subject to the limitations of the general pension laws."

Amend the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to James S. Anderson."

The amendments recommended by the committee were agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be laid aside with a favorable recommendation.

STEPHEN A. KNOWLAN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4501) to increase the pension of Stephen A. Knowlan, a recruit of Deman's detachment of United States Mounted Riflemen in the war with Mexico.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to increase the pension of Stephen A. Knowlan, a recruit of Deman's detachment of United States Mounted Riflemen, in the war with Mexico, $30 per month from and after the passage of this act; said amount to be in lieu of the pension of $12 per month which he is now receiving under existing laws.

With the following committee amendments:

Change the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Stephen A. Knowlan." Strike out all after the word "to," in line 4, and substitute the following: "place upon the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Stephen A. Knowlan, late a recruit of Deman's detachment, United States Mounted Riflemen, Mexican war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month, the same to be in lieu of that he is now receiving."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

ANDREW J. TAYLOR.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 10803) to increase the pension of Andrew J. Taylor.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Andrew J. Taylor, late a private in Captain Vernon's company of Tennessee Volunteers in the Indian war, and pay him a pension at the rate of $15 per month in lieu of the pension that he is now receiving.

With the following committee amendments:

Change the title so as to read: "A bill granting an increase of pension to Andrew J. Taylor."

In line 8 strike out the word "fifteen" and substitute therefor the word "twelve," so as to allow the same pension as is allowed by law to the aged, disabled, and dependent survivors of the Mexican war.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

HENRY MULVIN.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 8063) for the relief of Henry Mulvin.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to remove the charge of desertion standing against Henry Mulvin upon the records of the Twelfth Regiment of Pennsylvania Cavalry, and to honorably discharge him to date from the 18th day of July, 1865, and the said Mulvin shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on that date.

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the report read or a statement made.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, this young man enlisted when only 15 years of age. He fought all through the war. After peace was declared, on one occasion the captain was a little intoxicated, and this young man was a little intoxicated, and there was an altercation between them. The captain used some epithet which the young man did not like, and he struck the captain. The young man was court-martialed and sentenced and ran away. The captain has since acknowledged the wrong, acknowledged that he was in fault, and has joined in the request to have him pardoned.

Mr. TALBERT. Is this in the nature of removing the verdict of the court-martial?

Mr. DAVENPORT. No; the President has pardoned him, as far as that is concerned.

Mr. TALBERT. He only asks that the charge of desertion be removed?

Mr. DAVENPORT. That is all.

Mr. TALBERT. Well, I think that ought to be done. He deserves some credit for what he did. Some of these big swelled-head officers ought to be punished. [Laughter.]

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

PETER HECK.

The next business was the bill (H. R. 4135) for the relief of Peter alias Louis Heck.

The bill was read, as follows:

Whereas Peter Heck enlisted in Company E, One hundred and eighth Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers, in the spring of 1862, and served faithfully until taken a prisoner at Hartsville, Tenn., in December, 1862, when he was sent as a paroled prisoner to Columbus, Ohio, and allowed to go home to New York on leave of absence. He was afterwards informed that his services were no longer needed; and, being an ignorant German, he believed it, and he went to work for the Government in the Brooklyn Navy-Yard and continued there to work until April 25, 1864, when he again enlisted in Company C, Seventh Regiment New York Infantry, as Louis Heck, and served faithfully until May 8, 1865, when he was honorably discharged therefrom: Therefore,

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cancel and remove the charge of desertion from said Peter Heck as private of Company E, One hundred and eighth Regiment Ohio Infantry Volunteers, and to take him up on the rolls of Company C, Seventh Regiment New York Infantry Volunteers, as Peter Heck, and grant him an honorable discharge therefrom as Peter Heck, his proper name.

With the following committee amendments:

Strike out all of the bill down to the enacting clause.

On page 2, in line 10, after the word "name," add the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the report read.

The Clerk read the report (by Mr. BROWNLOW), as follows:

The Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4135) for the relief of Peter, alias Louis Heck, report the same back to the House with the recommendation that it do pass with amendments.

The evidence on file in support of this bill and the records of the War Department show that Peter Heck enlisted in Company E, One hundred and eighth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, in August, 1862, and served faithfully until he was taken prisoner at Hartsville, Tenn., in December, 1862, and was paroled December 10, 1862, and the evidence on file shows that he was allowed to go home to New York on leave of absence. He was afterwards informed that his services were no longer needed, and, being an ignorant German, he believed it, and he went to work for the Government in the Brooklyn Navy-Yard and continued to work there until April 25, 1864, on which date he enlisted under the name of Louis Heck in Company C, Seventh New York Volunteer Infantry, and served faithfully to June 30, 1865, when he was mustered out and honorably discharged from the service.

The evidence shows that he is a reliable and deserving man; that he is now in very poor health.

In view of all the facts in this case your committee recommend that the bill do pass with the following amendments:

Strike out all after the title of the bill down to line 1.

On page 2, in line 10, after the word "name," add the following:

"Provided, That no pay, bounty, or other emoluments shall become due or payable by virtue of the passage of this act."

Mr. TALBERT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this is not a meritorious case. It seems that he changed his name and joined another command, and consequently he must have been a bounty jumper, and I do not think he deserves to have the charge of desertion removed. If he went into the business of bounty jumping, of course the charge ought not to be removed. I would like to ask if he received a bounty when he reenlisted?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I do not know; I know the man, and have known him for years, and he is perfectly reliable. He was a poor, ignorant man at the time. He was working for the Government all along. He thought his services were no longer needed, and he went home on a sick leave, and when he got well he went to work in the navy-yard until he enlisted in the New York regiment. He never knew that he was charged with desertion until a few years ago, when he applied for a pension.

Mr. TALBERT. You do not know whether he ever received a bounty?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I do not.

Mr. COX. Where was he captured?

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. He was captured in Hartsville, paroled, and was sent home on a sick leave.

Mr. COX. At what point was he captured?

Mr. CASTLE. He was one of your captains, Colonel.

Mr. COX. If he was captured at Hartsville, it was a pretty good surrender without much force. [Laughter.]

Mr. TALBERT. I submit that this is an unworthy claim, and I move that it be recommended to lie on the table.

Mr. CURTIS of Kansas. I hope the gentleman will not do that.

Mr. TALBERT. I make that motion.

Mr. COX. Pardon me a moment; but did I understand my friend to say that he was captured at Hartsville?

Mr. SULZER. How near is that to Franklin? [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. Oh, that is pretty near my town, and if he got in at Franklin, it is all right.
